RENTS STILL DROPPING.

BOTTOM FIGURES NOT YET REACHED.

A LARGE REDUCTION IN RENTALS ALL OVER THE CITY—VIEWS OF REAL ESTATE AGENTS AND OTHERS—A LARGE NUMBER OF STORES ON BROADWAY UNOCCUPIED—A GENERAL DEMAND FOR LOWER RENTS, BOTH FOR STORES AND PRIVATE HOUSES.

"Looking up? yes; real estate is looking up, just as Martin Van Buren said once of the Federalist Party when a friend asked him if that party was not looking up. It is on its back, and the only way it can look is up." This was the reply of a veteran real estate man in this City when addressed by a reporter of THE TIMES on the subject of house and store rents, and the prospects for landlords and tenants for the coming year. And this opinion is the opinion of not one only, but of all the large operators and Trustees of real estate in this City, down town, on the east and west sides, in the centre of town, and throughout the upper part of the island. The prostration of real estate has been the prostration of rents. Sales, few and far between, have come to be not matters of price so much as questions of title. Property has been passing from the hands of those who purchased it at rabulous prices into other hands that seized it as it was sacrificed upon the auctioneer's block, under orders of the Referees into whose control it had drifted, with loads of incumbrances so heavy that nothing but a return of inflation, a new whirlwind of speculation, could have saved its unfortunate holders. This condition of things, in the opinion of sober, conservative business men, has been accelerated in this City by rascally mis government, the imposition of taxes for improvements that were not needed, the dissipation of huge sums of money expended in a pretended spirit of enterprise, while it was really devoted to the enrichment of a horde of base politicians and in retaining the allegiance and support at the polls of their servile followers. The effect of this ruinous course of things has been to deepen the depression into which all sorts of business has fallen. While rents have, in obedience to an imperative necessity, been dropping constantly for two years or more, they have by no means in all cases reached the lowest figure to which they must come—in short, they have not touched "bottom." To ascertain truly the prospect which will open before business men the coming Spring, and also to learn, if possible, what inducements would be offered to old and new tenants in houses of all classes, diligent inquiry has been made in the real estate offices, and also among tenants themselves, with the view of laying a truthful report of the situation before the readers of THE TIMES. It is by no means a simple thing to reach a conclusion upon the subject with the statements of only two leading agents. Brokers anxious for business, confident that they can accomplish wonderful victories over landlords, and secure all classes of property at their own terms, declare that the story of depression is far from being told. They defy the unpopularity they are likely to gain by their bearish assertions, turn with open arms to the economical public in search of cheap rents, and take no pains to conceal the fact that they are looking for customers and are hastening the downward course of events, with a view to reaping a harvest of commissions while there is yet opportunity to do it. On the other hand, there are brokers who hold prime or fancy property in desirable neighborhoods for business or residence, and they maintain with as much sturdiness and apparent honesty as their rivals that bottom prices have been touched, that there will be no further decline, that landlords will be immovable on the 1st of May, and that renewals of leases will be made on the basis of prices made a year or two years ago. Judging not from the statements of two only, but from the compared statements of a large number of real estate agents, the only conclusion that can be reached is that a reduction must and will be made, but that it will not be a uniform one. There is a general spirit of hopefulness among the calmer dealers. Some of them, in charge of large estates, say that landlords are arranging to a much greater extent than last year with their old tenants, and are disposed to be conciliatory. The inquiry among many of these custodians of property is reported as decidedly better; and, while all inquirers ask greater concessions than landlords are willing to grant, the owners are inclined to meet them on a middle ground. The disposition of business men to scatter, where they have for years been in the habit of locating gregariously, has improved many hitherto neglected portions of the City. The property considered best to own just now is that which was not too highly overvalued when the spirit of speculation was rife, because that property—having never been made too expensive to those who needed it for their business or dwelling purposes—still commands a comparatively high price, and the demand for lower rents does not press so heavily upon its owners. With one agent there was no inquiry whatever for the high-priced Broadway stores that were in request a year and two years ago.

BROADWAY STORES.

The assertion that Broadway property is strong can scarcely be made good except in a few isolated instances. From the Bowling Green to Thirty-fourth street, bills stare the passer-by frequently in the face, and it is not an unusual thing to find bills on one store bearing the address of two different agents. Not alone in stores are these bills found in great numbers; they are posted thickly in the windows of lofts and offices, and on many blocks offices will be found unoccupied in two or three floors of the same building. An agent may say that the owners of this property have every confidence in their ability to obtain tenants at last year's prices. He may say that nearly all the stores below Canal street are filled on the west side of Broadway, and that the tide of business that set away from that quarter is returning. The occupants of stores whose leases expire on May 1 do not agree entirely with these views. Many of them frankly say they must have lower rents, or they will be compelled to move out. There undoubtedly is a disposition to decline the expensive district north of Canal street, along Greene and Mercer streets, and an equally strong tendency to occupy the more convenient section along Church street; although the cry of hard times, the complaints of stagnation and bad debts are heard in these busy and apparently flourishing streets. Men who have paid $10,000 for the use of a store, knowing that their business will not support the charge, are seeking release from their agreements with the owners or surrendering leases as too onerous to be borne. An instance is related of an insurance company that took a lease of property on a prominent corner on lower Broadway. The company agreed to pay $10,000 a year for the property. A little more than a year ago the Trustees became aware that not only clerk hire but also rent must be reduced. A release from the agreement was sought for, but could not be obtained. The effort was then made to obtain a tenant for part of the office, and it was offered at $3,500. No tenant appeared. The office room was offered in January a year ago at $2,500, afterward at $2,000, then at $1,500, again at $1,200, and still no success. For a time the office was vacant, and a short time ago it was occupied by a company that obtained the use of the partitioned office for $900 a year. The surplus space in stores, lofts, and offices on Broadway is estimated by an old operator to be at least one-third of all the available space, but this is undoubtedly a despondent opinion and exaggerated estimate. Hotels that were let on 10 years' leases cannot pay their rent-bills and live, according to another authority, and are either making quiet arrangements with the proprietors of estates or neglecting to pay, as the best of them cannot pay within 40 per cent. of the old-time prices and keep out of bankruptcy. One broker having stores on Broadway said yesterday very glibly that stores all along Broadway were holding their own stiffly, that the owners were renewing leases at old prices, and that the resistance to further encroachments were maintained as well on the side streets as on Broadway. But out of 20 stores visited the proprietors of all but two expected reductions, and said they had already demanded a concession of from 10 to 20 per cent., which they had no doubt their agents or landlords would make rather than allow a bill to go up. One large iron-front store, occupied by a well-known firm at a yearly rental of $50,000, is said to be a load upon the firm's hands, and a property that could not be let to-day for more than $30,000 if it should be put upon the market. Above Canal street, along up Broadway, vacancies are met with frequently, and the neighborhood between Bleecker and Fourteenth streets is so heavily "filled" that nothing but a positive improvement in trade will justify the maintenance of high prices for these stores. The disposition of most owners is to take a good tenant at the best price he can get, rather than destroy the business character of a neighborhood by permitting stores to remain continually idle. This is not so in every case. A number of stores not far from Bleecker street, and the lofts above them, which have been only partly occupied during the last five years, are still held obstinately and with apparent indifference on the part of the landlord as to whether they are occupied or not, although business men in the neighborhood say that these closed shops have been a positive injury to them for years, and would better have been occupied at merely nominal rents, if only to retain for the buildings a good business reputation. From Fourteenth street up to Twenty-third street the stores are likely to bring about the same prices as were paid last year. The locality is a desirable one for retail trade, and there is always a greater demand for stores in this section than can be supplied, so that the eagerness of dealers to locate there will sustain the owners of property in picking their tenants and naming their own figures. Above Twenty-third street the same inflexibility is not found to exist among the landlords. On a few blocks which may be considered particularly desirable for retail trade, the stores are said to be held by the agents very firmly, but an instance is told of a store recently rented in the neighborhood of Thirtieth street, which indicates that landlords thereabout are ready to meet their tenants half way. A store that has been vacant for some time, and for which $2,000 were demanded without succeeding in closing an arrangement with anybody, was rented for $1,600. Shopkeepers in this neighborhood are not backward in declaring that if prices are maintained on last year's basis, they will be compelled to relinquish their stores, as they could not continue in business another year and come out straight on May Day, 1878. Above Thirty-fourth street there is no demand for store property, and the few stores now in that district are by no means all occupied. All along Broadway, from the lower to the upper part, there is a feeling of indifference among tenants as to what landlords may do, and agents are disposed to encourage the apathy of both landlords and tenants until April, when in the hurry of the few days that are left for decision it may safely be anticipated that terms will be more quickly reached. "There is now," in the language of one large broker, "really no market. The settlement of the Presidential controversy will undoubtedly have a good effect, and the adoption of some good plan of relieving the City of its present burden of expenses would unquestionably have a better effect. Lower rents will not pay the taxes, interest, and the cost of keeping property in repair; and the City must expect to bear its part of the burden which dishonesty and lack of political sagacity has imposed upon us."

THE EAST SIDE.

The depression of business in manufacturing circles is felt by owners of property on the East side, where floors have been fitted up with especial reference to light manufacturing purposes. The hard times have shut many of these places up, and have caused a great number of vacancies in the section of the City east of Broadway as far up town as Fulton street. Tenement property is generally fully occupied, but it is too often inhabited by families the heads of which have been irregularly employed, and have been able only to pay at uncertain intervals in short amounts. Small shops are in good demand on the Bowery, which always has its throng of purchasers, and along Grand street there are few vacant shops. While the tenement district, from Grand street up to Fifty-ninth street, is well populated, it is also occupied by persons who cannot always promptly pay their rent. Bowery stores hold their own—last year's prices—very well, one or two cases are related of an advance rather than a decline in the rents of stores. In a few cases the tenants are preparing to ask a reduction, but it is not believed that more than 10 per cent. can be obtained in good locations. On Third avenue there are great numbers of stores with bills upon them, and the same thing is observable on Second avenue, where business is in a very languishing state. Landlords on Third avenue have in many instances signified to their agents their willingness to yield something to their tenants. One agent, who handles a great deal of property between Forty-second and Sixtieth streets, said that the reduction of the rents of stores would be greater than those in living property. He estimated the decline at about 25 or 40 per cent. in stores, while it would not be more than 10 or 15 per cent. in dwellings. Houses in fair neighborhoods which rented a year ago for $1,200 have been offered at $800, and could be hired for $700. In really good neighborhoods there is an easy market for houses at $1,000 and $1,200, but when the figures advance beyond that price there is great difficulty in obtaining parties to fill them. Leases just expiring on stores, the rents for which have not been changed in three years, will be very materially reduced. Near Fifty-fourth street, which is considered a good business neighborhood, a row of stores which have been rented at $1,100 each will come down to $900. Above Sixty-ninth street the demand for stores is almost dead, and many shops of various kinds that were opened in new buildings a year and more ago are closing out, leaving the rooms to wait perhaps for months before they are filled. There is a good inquiry for flats or tenements, at prices ranging from $25 to $50 monthly, and even for cheaper rents. In respectable double houses, where a family could a year ago have a full suite of rooms, opening on a common hallway for all inmates, at $25, it is now to be had for $22, and lower rents in the same house have fixed on the same rule. There are a few more than the usual number of bills on houses, which is accounted for by the landlords on the supposition that a good many poor families have combined to reduce their expenses, and other families had taken the members of broken parties into their circles. Numbers of private houses have also been pressed into new service, so that they are private no longer, but floors, in suites of four and five rooms, which now bring $30 and $40, where $1,500 was formerly obtained for the whole house. On Murray Hill, in Madison and Lexington avenues, in neighborhoods where handsome houses were put up in large numbers a few years ago, the story of reduction is heard again. Where leases are running out, no change of prices having been made for three years, it is difficult to make new prices at less than 40 per cent. off the old. On Madison avenue the same distress is to be felt by the owners of fine property. Houses that brought $4,000 and were considered cheap, now wait for a tenant at $3,500, and a case was heard of where a house that had commanded $4,000 has been rented for $2,500, after it had been reduced from $4,000 to $3,500, then to $3,000, and finally to the figure on which the bargain was closed. This is not an uncommon circumstance. While owners of this property cannot afford to let it go at such prices, their purpose seems to be first to get a good occupant, and afterward to get the best price obtainable for the house. Four-story houses are harder to dispose of than three-story ones. The reports from all parts of the City agree that the smaller houses are those most needed just now. Some of these places can be rented at the figures given, because they have recently gone through the hands of the Referee, and the last holder is able to make a low price and yet not lose money by the operation. Houses on Madison avenue, near Sixty-first street, which were built to be sold for $40,000 or $45,000, and which should have been rented at $3,500 or $4,000, were rented for $1,500. At Eighty-third street, near the Central Park, a handsomely-finished three-story and basement house, with hard-wood trimmings, was rented at $500, when the agents would not have listened, a year or two ago, for anything short of $1,500 or $1,800. Good flats in the neighborhood of Seventy-second street, furnished with all improvements, are readily taken up by families who have been living in private homes. The prices are by no means so high as those asked at the west side apartment hotels. Many of the real estate agents complain of the difficulty of getting their rents, even when they are made at the lowest figures. In the lowest classes of tenements, where two rooms for suites of apartments ranged a year ago as low as $12 a month, they are now dropped to $8, and in many cases the loss of employment by the men of families has made it impossible to collect from them even this small charge. In Harlem there is a decline equal to 25 per cent., and small houses formerly occupied by one family only are in many cases made to accommodate two, so that many houses are left vacant, and more are likely to become so before the middle of May.

THE WEST SIDE.

The same conditions are discovered to exist in the business parts of the west side of town as in the east side, but to a slighter degree in the district below Canal street and west of Broadway. Only in the extreme lower part of Greenwich and Washington streets does business appear to be so dull as to compel the closing of a few shops. Real estate agents say that a movement has been apparent among many merchants who moved a few years ago into the district above Canal street to get back into neighborhood of Church street, or in the streets that cross it, both for the sake of greater convenience and greater cheapness. While nothing has been said by landlords in this section to convey an idea of what they will do, and as they are shrewd enough to wait until the last moment shall decide whether business is to be good or dull, tenants are talking very confidently about what they expect. The firmness of the market will depend altogether upon business movements, and it may be that the expected reductions upon last year's prices may not be made. Along Canal street there are empty stores enough to show that the street is not what it once was as a thoroughfare. On Hudson street above Canal there are some vacancies, and on Eighth avenue there are many bills. The prices will be lower on all of these streets, but the reduction will not be large on Eighth avenue. There have been during the past year many small failures on Eighth avenue, and the frequency of the notice "to let" may point out the danger of creating a business purely on speculation. At Fourteenth and Twenty-third streets, and again at Thirty-fourth street, the prices are held very firmly, but the tenants all talk lower prices, and expect to get a concession of at least 10 per cent. In the Fifteenth Ward and Tenth Ward, where large quantities of moderate priced property is situated, there is said to be less inclination to yield prices than in other parts of the City. It is curious to know that the rents here have scarcely kept pace for five years with the advance in other parts of the City, and now they stand much more nearly at a right point than the properties which have obeyed every fluctuation. Houses rented last Spring in Ninth and Tenth streets for $3,000 and $4,000 will in many instances be reduced to $2,500 and $3,500, and the fears are filling up with a good class of people. In the neighborhood of the Fifth Avenue Hotel the depression of business and shrinkage of values have told most seriously. A house on a corner of the avenue, below the hotel, once rented for $7,000, has been vacant for six months, and was recently offered to a gentleman who looked over the house for $3,600. No one can be found to take it, as it would, it is believed, cost not less than $30,000 to furnish it in appropriate style, and that is an expense which even the most extravagant real estate agents is not prepared to put over. For houses that will rent for $1,200, $1,600, or $1,800, there is a demand that can scarcely be kept up with. Houses above the highest figure, while they are numerous enough, can find no takers at the prices fixed. An agent, who has a great deal of "fancy" property on hand, said that he knew his customers would suffer most. They would be compelled, and he was advising them to bend gracefully to the duty, to accept rents much smaller than they would like to collect. On Sixth avenue the disposition is to hold store property at last year's prices, but west of Sixth avenue there is no mark as would induce landlords and tenants to stop. Many persons in this district, finding that the reduction will be an inducement to avoid the expense of removal, will accept their landlords' rates rather than remove. The demand for flats, in the upper part of the City, on the west side, is excellent. The houses on the Astor estate have all been put at cheaper rates. Houses rented last year at $2,200 are this year put at $2,000, and the price will be inflexible for the remainder of the year. The same houses rented two years ago for $2,600. The demand for houses at $1,200 and $1,500 is greater than agents can supply. Flats at $35, $50, and $45 have been reduced each $5. While but few writings are made for renting property, it is reported that there are many persons looking for bargains in purchases, and houses in Twenty-ninth street built, to be sold for $40,000, have recently been sold for $25,000 ready money. In the Albany Apartment-house, where the prices have ranged from $80 to $100, the tenants are looking for a reduction of 10 per cent., a reduction having been made in the Newport recently. The Albany is not full, and but 19 out of 30 apartments in the Rockingham, the newest of the apartment hotels, have been rented at the rate of $100 to $145—charged for the suites. Inquiry is daily made at these apartment-houses for suites at from $50 to $75 by persons who cannot or will not pay as much for a few rooms as they would be asked to pay in Brooklyn for an entire house.

STABBED AND KILLED.

FATAL ENDING OF A FEUD BETWEEN TWO GANGS OF YOUTHFUL ROUGHS IN WILLIAMSBURG—THE LEADERS FIGHT IN THE STREET AND ONE IS KILLED—THE SLAYER NOT IN CUSTODY.

For months past there has been a feud in Williamsburg between two gangs of young roughs aged from 17 to 19, known respectively as the "North Side Crowd" and the "Broadway Crowd." Frederick Hertfelder was the leader of the former, and William Abernethy, alias "English," of the latter. Robert Carr, who had formerly been one of the followers of Hertfelder, left him recently and associated with Abernethy. Whenever Abernethy and Carr met Hertfelder or any of his friends a skirmish would occur, and recently, in one of these fights, Hertfelder got worsted and threatened that he would get "square" with Abernethy and Carr. The Hertfelder gang used to meet on Grand street, and their opponents on Broadway and Union avenue. On Saturday evening, Hertfelder, with a number of his friends, among whom were Lawrence Ryan, of No. 164 Bushwick avenue; Frederick Brenner, of No. 200 Stagg street, and John Somerdyke, of No. 318 Humboldt street, started to find Abernethy and Carr, and saw them standing in a doorway in Broadway, near Boerum street. Hertfelder rushed at Carr and seized him by the throat. Abernethy sprang to Carr's assistance, and Ryan and Brenner attacked Abernethy. Hertfelder and Carr moved into the middle of the street, where Carr broke loose from Hertfelder and ran to the opposite sidewalk, but was pursued and caught by Hertfelder. In the meantime Ryan and Brenner had driven Abernethy, whom they were badly beating, to the same sidewalk. Carr again got away from Hertfelder and escaped by running up Lynch street, and about the same time Abernethy succeeded in releasing himself from Ryan and Brenner and ran up Boerum street pursued by Hertfelder, who drove him to the middle of the street, when Abernethy turned and struck at him, and he immediately called out: "I am stabbed," and was taken into the drug store of Henry Kissam, No. 410 Broadway, and thence to the Eastern District Hospital, where he died at about 10 o'clock from loss of blood. His body was taken to the Morgue yesterday morning and from thence to his residence. The wound was inflicted on the left side of the neck, just behind the ear, by a large-sized jack-knife, which Abernethy threw away and which was picked up by a boy named George Greber and brought to the Sixth Precinct Station-house. All the parties to the fight, except Abernethy, were arrested. He went home, changed his clothes, got some money, and said he was going to New-Jersey. Inspector Waddy, who has charge of the case, said that the record of Abernethy and Hertfelder was bad, and that he believed he would soon have Abernethy in custody. Abernethy is about 19 years old, and Hertfelder was of the same age. Abernethy does nothing in the winter, but frequents country resorts during the Summer, picking up money as opportunity may offer.

PROBABLE MURDER IN HARLEM.

The Police of the Thirty-third Precinct telegraphed to the Central Office at 11 o'clock last night that Victor Oese, aged 33, residing at No. 37 Delancy street, Newark, had shot his father-in-law George Charlton, aged 48, at the residence of the latter, Tinton avenue and One Hundred and Forty-ninth street, at 6:30 P. M. The bullet from Oese's pistol lodged in the neck of his victim, and the wound is considered very dangerous. Oese was arrested, and when arraigned at the Morrisania Police Station admitted that he went from his house in Newark to the house of his father-in-law expressly for the purpose of shooting him, because Mrs. Oese preferred to live with her father. Charlton is employed in the capacity of engineer in Janes & Kirkland's Iron works, Westchester avenue, and the occupation of his would-be murderer is that of a maker of sachel and traveling-bag fastenings. In consequence of the lateness of the hour at which the news reached Head-quarters, no additional particulars could be obtained.

A ROTTEN WAR VESSEL SINKS.

The United States steamer Delaware sank at the Brooklyn Navy-yard about two weeks ago, and a board of officers appointed to inquire into the affair has now reported to Commodore Nicholson, commandant of the yard, that the vessel was thoroughly rotten; that upon the removal of her machinery her central timbers sprang up and cracked, and that finally the weights of her stem and stern "hogged" her—in other words, broke her in two amidships. Her hull will be taken apart and the old metal saved. The wood-work is so rotten that it cannot be used for any other purpose than fuel. The Delaware has been laid up in the Brooklyn Navy-yard for several years. She was built in 1863 to meet an emergency. Twelve or 15 other vessels were built at the same time, but some of them were not taken off the stocks, where they are now rotting away. Seasoned wood could not be procured, so they were built of green timber. It was considered that if they did service for three years they would pay for their construction. It has been thought remarkable by naval officers that the Delaware should last so long. She did some good service in the latter part of the war, and afterward made several long cruises abroad. Eight months ago she was thought to be in good condition, and the Navy Department then rejected an offer of $28,000 for her. The work of taking out her machinery was begun about a month ago and completed just before she so unexpectedly broke in two.

COL. JOHN O'MAHONY'S OBSEQUIES.

The Sixty-ninth regimental armory, Grand and Essex streets, was besieged all day yesterday by crowds of people anxious to take a last look at the dead Head Centre, Col. John O'Mahony. A detachment of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, under command of Col. Cavanagh, and Gen. Bourke, had charge of the remains. The funeral will take place to-morrow, at 11 A. M., from the armory. SUNDAY AT THE TOMBS POLICE COURT.

Judge Duffy presided at the Tombs Police Court yesterday morning and disposed of a number of cases of intoxication and disorderly conduct. Among the prisoners arraigned were several men and women from Brooklyn and Jersey City who came to New-York to make purchases at the end of the week, and having indulged too freely in alcoholic stimulants were obliged to pass the night in the station-houses instead of returning to their families. In all cases where the offense charged was trivial, and especially where the prisoner seemed to be an industrious, hard-working man, upon whom a family depended for support, Judge Duffy dismissed the accused with a word of advice not to come before him again. Patrick Walsh was held in $500 bail to answer for stealing a pair of shoes from the store No. 503 Broadway. A respectable-looking married woman, who was found in the streets under the influence of liquor, in company with two colored men, begged pardon of the Judge, and implored him not to disgrace her before her husband and children, and was discharged. "How long since you were here last?" I remember your face!" inquired the Justice of a disheveled female named Mary McDermott, whose countenance indicated that she was no stranger to street brawls and midnight wanderings. "Four months, your Honor," was the reply. "What penalty did I impose upon you?" said the Judge. "Five days," she answered. "Then I will have to make it ten days this time," added the Court. "You are back here again," said the Justice to a young girl named Mary Quinn. "Yes, sir," the girl sobbed out. "You were staggering along Mulberry street at 3 o'clock in the morning?" inquired the Court. "Yes, sir," the girl answered. "What do you work at?" asked the Judge. "On a machine in Hester street," she replied. "I will have to give you a month this time," said Judge Duffy. Upon hearing this the poor girl burst into tears, and was going away in charge of the officer, making the court-room resound with her lamentations, when Judge Duffy was touched with pity and called her back and told her he would make it 10 days. An old woman, whose face bore marks of dissipation, was brought up to the bar charged with being intoxicated. "How many times have you been arrested?" asked the Judge. "Many a time, your Honor, but only once last year," was the reply. "I will have to give you 10 days," said the Court. "If you don't forgive me this morning," pleaded the unfortunate woman, "I will lose my work." "I am afraid," answered Judge Duffy, "you work more at whisky than anything else." "Upon my word I don't, your Honor," she replied in a supplicating tone. "Will you promise you won't drink for a whole year?" continued the Judge. "I will promise until May morning," she responded after some hesitation, which clearly evinced that she was doing great violence to her feelings and natural propensities. "Why don't you say a whole year?" continued the court. "Well, I will say a whole year," quickly responded the prisoner, evidently dreading that if she hesitated for another moment to accept the Judge's suggestion she might be sent to the Island. This had the desired effect upon Judge Duffy, who told her to go home and keep sober in future.

THE RACING SEASON OF 1877.

The turf season of 1877 is heralded by the opening of the stakes for the Spring campaign in the eastern circuit, which are to close on March 1. Seven of these important events are to be run at Jerome Park, and the first is the Fordham handicap of one mile and a quarter; $50 each, and $10 if declared. Then comes the Westchester cup; $50 each, play or pay, and $1,500, two miles and a quarter. Since the weights were raised the Jockey Club has done away with the penalty clause. The Juvenile Stakes for two-year-olds of $100 each, half forfeit, with $500 added, half a mile, has furnished sharp work since the Jockey Club determined to race the youngsters in the Spring, and as it is nearly a straight course the time has been very fast. The Jockey Club handicap of two miles is also an important contest. Its conditions are $100 each, half forfeit, and $20 declaration. The grand national handicap steeplechase finishes the Spring events. It is over the regular steeplechase course, and the conditions are $100 each, half forfeit, and $20 if declared by May 20. The great increase in the number of horses available for turf purposes should insure more than the usual number of entries.

On Wednesday next the Board of Stewards of the old Septilateral trotting circuit, will meet at the New-York Hotel, to devise a plan for giving running meetings on the courses within the circuit. The yearly increase in the number of thoroughbreds has long decsed a sufficient inducement for the combined associations to consider the question.

A meeting of the Board of Appeals for the Atlantic District will be held at the New-York Hotel tomorrow. The district comprises the States of New-York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, New-Jersey, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, and all cases of fraud in those States will be considered.

FUN AT A MULE RACE.

A mule race afforded considerable fun to the sporting population of Jamaica, Long Island, last Saturday afternoon. The contest was for a purse of $100; distance 800 yards, best three in five heats. Three entries were made, as follows: John Morton's Jennie, W. Mount's Oyster Bay, and Sam Fleet's Jamaica. The start was effected very nicely, but Oyster Bay conceived the muliah idea of stopping short before he traversed twice his length. Another start was made, when Jamaica proved intractable, and the bell was rung for a third start. Oyster Bay was evidently disgusted, and after using his hind legs vigorously in motion he succeeded in landing his rider on his back in a very few moments. After starting nine times the animals concluded to make a race of it, and Oyster Bay came in ahead, followed by Jamaica. In the second heat all went well until Oyster Bay, who held the lead, had accomplished one-third the distance, when he stopped short. Jamaica stopped also, upon reaching Oyster Bay. Jennie took advantage of the opportunity thus afforded, and keeping on won the heat. In the third heat all three reached the goal simultaneously. The fourth was a dead heat between Jennie and Oyster Bay. Oyster Bay bolted in the fifth heat, after covering 900 yards, and depositing his rider on the road made for the woods near at hand. Jennie won the sixth heat and the race.

THE COUNTING OF THE VOTE

THE STATE OF LOUISIANA REACHED.

FLORIDA RECORDED FOR HAYES AND WHEELER—GEORGIA, INDIANA, AND KENTUCKY COUNTED FOR TILDEN, AND ILLINOIS AND KANSAS FOR HAYES—A LONG LIST OF OBJECTIONS TO THE COUNTING OF LOUISIANA FOR HAYES—ARGUMENT ON LOUISIANA TO BEGIN AT 11 A. M. TO-DAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—The proceedings in the count of the Electoral vote were, to-day, exactly according to the programme explained last night. The count was continued down to Louisiana, and the double set of returns was sent to the Commission, which will meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, to begin the examination of them. The debate in the House on the objections to the decision in the Florida case was much tamer than it would have been if it had taken place on Saturday. There were several wild speeches, temporarily suppressed on the consideration that abuse of the Commission would not improve the prospect of a decision favorable to Tilden in the Louisiana count. The speeches were, nevertheless, extremely partisan on the Democratic side. The day began with a notable attempt, headed by J. Proctor Knott, to have the decision referred back to the Commission to be revised. He pretended, with mock sincerity, to desire to give the Commission an opportunity to explain an inconsistency into which they had fallen. Mr. Hale made the absolutely sound point of order that the bill gave neither house the right to vote upon any such proposition, and Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, made the further objection that it was not in the power of the House, acting without the concurrence of the Senate, to refer anything to an outside Commission. Speaker Randall will not sustain a point of order made by Mr. Hale, no matter how plain the case may be, and so he overruled the point on Mr. Hale's objections, and sustained it on Mr. Wilson's, the effect being, of course, the same. The debate on the point of order lasted nearly an hour. The Democrats did not seem inclined to insist upon sustaining Knott, as that course was no part of the programme. The agreement was to go on and make a new fight over Louisiana, and that resolve having been taken the Democrats were no less anxious than the Republicans to have that State reached.

The debate on the Commission's decision was not marked by any able speeches against sustaining it, the burden of the Democratic complaint being that the country, as they say, expected the Commission to elect Tilden, and now it had already disappointed them and was likely to disappoint them to the end. Some speakers, indeed, endeavored to express hope of the future, but it was clearly hope without expectation. There was one remarkable speech on the Democratic side by Mr. Carr, of Indiana, the successor to the late Speaker, Mr. Kerr. He was one of those who voted against the bill when it was before the House, and to-day he gave the Democrats who voted for it a terrific scoring. He told them they must stand by the measure, and they could not got rid of the responsibility of passing the bill by abusing the Commission. They had abandoned all to their opponents when they voted for the bill, and their betrayed constituents would heap condemnation upon their treacherous heads. He made many points which produced applause and laughter. It was a speech which will deservedly give Mr. Carr much reputation.

On the Republican side the action of the Commission was sustained and supported with ability and candor. It was curious to see Boodins, of North Carolina, who is on record as having sold his vote in the State Legislature for $20, declaiming in favor of a decision of the Presidential dispute on the broad grounds of equity. The refusal to sustain the decision of the Commission was made by a strict party vote, no Democrat being honest or fair enough to break away from his party and vote according to justice and right.

The joint meeting assembled at 2:25 o'clock, and in an hour had counted through the list of States from Florida to Louisiana. The two houses not agreeing in overruling the Commission in the Florida case, the vote of that State was simply placed upon the tally sheets and announced without further formalities. the State of Illinois was passed without objection, Springer having been in some way suppressed, probably by the consideration stated last night that, counting Chaffee's vote, it he were proved ineligible, would be a strong precedent for the Republicans to carry before the Commission. Springer sat fidgety and self-conscious, and wore a simple smile, while all eyes were upon him expecting the objection which he did not make. The certificates from Louisiana were very long and occupied an hour in the reading. There was a return received by mail, without any duplicate by messenger, which was opened and read. It was the Republican certificate, but after it was mailed some real or fancied informality was remembered and a new set of certificates was made with the proper correction, and one was mailed and one sent by messenger. The Tilden certificates were read, and then the corrected Hayes certificates. The Vice President, to the surprise of everybody, opened a fourth envelope, received by mail, and indorsed as containing the Electoral vote of the State. It proved to be a burlesque document, and set forth that various John Smiths, numbered one, two, and so forth, had been chosen Electors and had cast the vote of Louisiana for Cooper and Cary. There were several suggestions to stop the reading but unanimous consent could not be obtained and it was read through, amid roars of laughter. It was finally suppressed from the record and destroyed, though it may be doubted whether this course was proper, since in reality the Cooper certificate was as good as that for Tilden. The brilliant and reckless author of it remains unknown.

The Commission was in session to receive the papers, and in a brief meeting the announcement was made that Representative Jenoks and Senator McDonald would present the case as Democratic objectors, and Senator Howe and Representative Hurlbut will appear as Republican objectors to the counting the Tilden vote. Two hours on each side is alloted them for argument. The same time is granted to the counsel, and it is understood that Trumbull and Carpenter, lately professed Republicans are to represent the Democratic case, and Mr. Evarts and Stanley Mathews will probably speak for the Republicans. The arguments are now expected to be concluded in two days, but in any event will not extend beyond Thursday. The decision of the case may be hopefully expected this week. Republicans feel entirely confident of the result, and there is not so much hope on the part of the Democracy as is pretended.

THE PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE.

The House met at 10 A. M.

THE FLORIDA VOTES.

Mr. MCCRARY, of Iowa, rose for the purpose of opening the discussion upon the objection to the decision of the Electoral vote of Florida.

Mr. CLYMER, of Pennsylvania, raised the point of order that there was no quorum present, and unanimous consent was given that the debate on the question should not commence until 10:30, and that no business should be transacted until that time.

The House resumed its session at 10:30, when Mr. FIELD, of New-York, for the purpose of bringing the matter before the House in due form, offered the following order:

Ordered, That the counting of the Electoral votes from the State of Florida shall not proceed in conformity with the decision of the Electoral Commission, but that the votes of Messrs. Call, Yonge, Milton, and Bullock be counted as the votes from the State of Florida for President and Vice President of the United States.

Ordered, That the counting of the Electoral votes from the State of Florida shall proceed in conformity with the decision of the Electoral Commission.

Mr. KNOTT, of Kenntucky, offered as a substitute an order reciting the language of the Electoral act, that the Commission might take into view such petitions, depositions, and papers as shall, by the Constitution and now-existing law be competent; reciting also the fact that in the Florida case the Commission had decided and determined that no evidence should be received or considered which had not been submitted to the two houses in joint convention by the President of the Senate; that certificate No. 1 (that of the Hayes Electors) contained no evidence whatever, while certificates Nos. 2 and 3 (those of the Tilden Electors) did contain evidence fully and specifically showing the fact that the latter had been duly elected and appointed as Electors, and, therefore, ordering that the decision of the Commission and the grounds thereof be remanded and recommitted to the Commission, with the request that the same be so corrected or explained, and that the Commission be further requested to furnish in detail the true reason of its decision, so that the House may be enlightened as to the course it ought to pursue in the discharge of its duties, and that in the meantime the vote of the Hayes Electors be not counted.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, made the point of order that under the Electoral Commission law it was the imperative duty of the House, at the end of the two hours' debate, to vote on the main question, which was, whether the votes should be counted in conformity with the decision, and that nothing in the shape of delay, in whatever form presented, could now arrest the execution of its decision.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, added to Mr. Hale's point of order, that this House could refer nothing to the Commission; that would require at least concurrent action.

Mr. WOOD, of New-York, declared that any intimation of a desire on the part of the Democratic side of the House to interpose any factious opposition to any decision of the Electoral Commission was entirely gratuitous, and unwarranted by anything that had taken place.

Mr. HALE, of Maine—Has anything been said this morning to indicate any charge of that kind?

Mr. WOOD—The gentleman has just spoken of delay, and has intimated that there is an intentional disposition on the part of the House to delay action. I can assure the gentleman that there is no such intention. While we are ready in good faith to carry out, in all respects, the Electoral Commission law, and the result that may be reached in pursuance of it, still, at the same time, we demand the right of free expression of opinion.

Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, contested the point of order, and thought there was nothing in the law which prevented the House, with the concurrence of the Senate, from remanding back to the Electoral Commission, for their further consideration, the decision when it had made in the Florida case, in order that it might have an opportunity to explain the glaring inconsistencies which existed in that decision.

Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts, said that under the provisions of the Electoral act the House was compelled to give an affirmative or negative vote upon the decision of the Commission. It would not be respectful to the Commission to remand the decision to it.

The SPEAKER overruled the point of order made by Mr. HALE, but sustained that made by Mr. WILSON, holding that there was nothing in the Electoral Commission law that authorized a recommittal of the question back to the Commission, and also ruling that it was not competent for one house to refer a bill or any other matter to an outside Commission. The substitute offered by Mr. KNOTT was, therefore, not in order.

THE DEBATE—MR. M'CRARY'S ARGUMENT.

The House thereupon, at 11:15, proceeded to the discussion of the objection to the decision of the Electoral Commission.

Mr. MCCRARY, of Iowa, addressed the House in support of the Commission. He said that the decision of the Commission embraced several important propositions, upon the correctness of which the two houses were to decide; that these propositions were eminently sound and fully supported both by reason and authority, seems to him entirely clear. He said the first point decided was that the two houses of Congress, in the exercise of their powers to count the vote for President and Vice President, could not go into an inquiry as to the number of votes cast at the polls for the Electors in the several States. In other words, it was held that the decision of that question was left to the proper authority in the States, and that when that authority canvassed the votes, declared and adjudged the result, and certified the election of the Electors in the form, that is the appointment of Electors required by the Constitution. He claimed that this was in accordance with the precedent established by the bill of 1800, which passed both houses of Congress, and was only lost by a failure to agree upon the form of a single provision. That bill, he said, created a Grand Committee, to whom were to be referred questions arising upon the count of the Electoral vote of the States, but it was carefully provided both by the Senate and the House bill that no inquiry should be made as to the number of votes cast for the Electors at the polls; that being regarded by all the statesmen of that day as a matter within the exclusive control of the States. He said the House bill of 1800, drafted, reported, and advocated by John Marshall, afterward Chief Justice of the United States, embodied the views of that great constitutional lawyer upon this question. After providing for this Grand Committee, it defined their jurisdiction in these words: "And the persons thus chosen shall form a joint committee, and shall have power to examine into all disputes relative to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, other than such as might relate to the number of votes by which the Electors may have been appointed."

He held that the ruling of the Commission was also abundantly supported by most cogent reasons, and that to have ruled otherwise would have been to assert a jurisdiction to inquire into and overturn the action of all the States in the appointment of their Electors, and to institute proceedings in the nature of an action of quo warranto to try the titles of every one of the persons appointed as such. He argued that the power of the two houses, and, therefore, of the Commission, was centered by those words of the Constitution: "And the votes shall then be counted," and that the Commission had decided upon the soundest reasons that these words confer no judicial power whatever, and that they describe, and very aptly describe the ministerial duty only. The words of the Constitution, he maintained, would be the last words that would have been chosen by which to confer that immense power, that vast jurisdiction, which has lately for the first time been claimed for the two houses, and that the impossibility of exercising this power was a strong argument against its existence. How could the two houses of Congress, he asked, entertain and try a suit to determine the title of Electors to their offices? He claimed that if it could be done in one case it could be done in all, and that there might be brought 369 contests over elections for Electors, with witnesses numbered by hundreds in each, all to be determined within the brief interval between the meeting of Congress in December and the counting of the votes in February. He said it was plain that to establish this doctrine was to give the election of President and Vice President hereafter into the hands of Congress, and take it out of the hands of the State, where the Constitution placed it. The Commission had, therefore, very properly, he thought, decided that the record of the final canvass and decision and declaration of the result made by the proper State authority was final and conclusive, and that when this record was presented duly authenticated, and accompanied by the return required by law and the Constitution, there was but one thing that could be done, and that was to obey the mandate of the Constitution, which declares that "the votes shall be counted." The Commission, he said, decided one other point of importance, which was that the appointment of Electors made and certified in the manner prescribed by State law prior to the time when the Electors were to meet and vote for President and Vice President was final and could not be set aside by subsequent State action after the votes had been cast and the return thereof had been duly made to the President of the Senate. This decision rested upon the following among other grounds: First, for reasons of great public importance it was provided by the Constitution that the Electors should meet in the States upon the same day and cast their votes, and Congress was authorized by the Constitution to fix the day for such meeting. This power was exercised by the passage of the act of 1792, fixing the first Wednesday in December as the day on which Electors should meet and vote in all the States. The great wisdom of this provision of the Constitution was apparent, as its purpose was to prevent the very mischief which was attempted in the Florida case. It was to prevent a State from withholding its vote until it could be seen how it would affect the result. It was to prohibit a State from changing its vote after it had once been cast in order to change a result, and above all, it must be seen that the Constitution could not be so construed as to allow a new State administration, coming into power in January, to proceed to set aside and reverse the action of the State Government under a previous administration in the matter of appointing Presidential Electors, especially where it appeared that the Electors were chosen and returned as duly elected, and met and performed all their functions, including a return of their votes to the President of the Senate on or prior to Dec. 3, and nearly a month before such new administration came into power. Second, if proceedings, either by the State Legislature or the State courts, had in the latter part of January, could be allowed to set aside the constitutional action of the State in this respect, and in December, it must result not only in a violation of the constitutional requirement that the votes of all the States should be cast on the same day, but must also lead to the most serious consequences in the future. If a judgment in an inferior court in Florida, rendered on the 27th of January in an action of quo warranto, could annul the vote of that State cast on the 6th of December, it followed that similar judgments in any or all of the other States might be certified to the President of the Senate, and must govern the count. The vote of the great State of New-York would generally be decisive of the result of a Presidential election. In that State, he said, he believed there were more than 30 Judges possessing jurisdiction in quo warranto, and asked whether it should be decided that any one of those might, after the Presidential election was over, transfer the vote of that State from one candidate to the other. If so, how many of those Judges would hereafter enter the list and contend for the first chance to determine the Presidency? And what should be done if several of them, each claiming priority of jurisdiction, should render conflicting judgments? Who could fail to see that such a doctrine would result in confusion, disaster, and ruin? He wanted to know if, by an ex post facto judgment in one State one party should secure an advantage, why, by a similar movement in another State, a corresponding advantage might not be sought for by the other party? and claimed as a result of such policy that, instead of counting the votes under the Constitution and law at the time prescribed, it would become necessary to count the judgments in quo warranto rendered in the various States, and enter into an inquiry as to the regularity and conclusiveness of these judicial proceedings. There must be authority somewhere, and at some time, to decide who were appointed Electors, and that the only safe or sound or constitutional rule that could be found was that adopted by the Commission—to wit, that the decision made by the proper State authority, prior to the time fixed by the Constitution and law for electing the President and Vice President of the United States, was final, and not subject to be set aside by Congress. The power of Congress was to count, not to reject, duly certified votes of the States.

SPEECH OF MR. TUCKER.

Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, followed on the opposite side of the question. He said he did not propose to criticise, much less to censure the action of any member of the Commission, but he did propose to criticise its judgment. The members of that Commission had taken an oath to render judgment according to the Constitution and law. The Commission in passing upon the eligibility of Humphreys had declined to pass upon the question of the validity of the vote of an incompetent Elector. Did the Commission mean to decide that the ineligibility of the Elector was to have no effect upon the validity of his vote? If a State appointed an ineligible Elector, was he, notwithstanding, to be declared by the Commission and by the two houses to be a competent Elector, and his vote to be counted a valid vote? If so, then the act of the Canvassing Board of a State was valid, and the Constitution, quoad hoc, was void. In regard to the main question, the decision of this Commission was to the effect that the only voice permitted to speak for a State in the matter of a Presidential election was the voice of a Canvassing Board, and of an Executive, and that the voice of the Judiciary and the Legislature must be hushed into silence before the omnipotent voice of a Canvassing Board and Executive. He contended that all the organism of a State must speak its voice, but the Commission had decided that the only organism to speak it was the organism of the Canvassing Board and the Executive.

Mr. Tucker's time expired before he had finished his argument.

MR. BANKS' ARGUMENT.

Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts, said that it would be one of the highest privileges accorded to him to be able to cast his vote in support of the decision and report of the Electoral Commission. In regard to the question of the ineligibility of Humphreys, there was, according to the decision of the Commission and according to the facts of the case, no pretense of ineligibility. He had been a United States officer, but he had resigned his office. Unless the fact that a United States office had been once held incapacitated a man forever from being an Elector, this man was clear from any objection upon that ground. If people used due diligence in informing themselves of the eligibility or ineligibility of an Elector, and, notwithstanding the effort to gain that information, an Elector should be incapacitated, the people ought not to be deprived of their choice on that account. In regard to the main question he held that when an Elector had cast his vote he had fulfilled his duty and exhausted his functions, and no State court or United States Court could change that act. There was no court in Florida, nor any form of political party, nor any defeated candidate who had a right, or a shadow of a right, to reverse the decision of the Electoral College.

MR. SPRINGER'S SPEECH.

Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, opposed the decision because the Commission had adopted an order to receive and consider no evidence that had not been submitted to the Joint Convention, and because that order excluded evidence which would have showed conclusively that a majority of the legal votes actually cast and canvassed was in favor of the Tilden Electors. He quoted Mr. O'Conor's declaration that "There lives not a man, so far as I know, on the face of the earth, who, having the faculty of blushing, can look an honest man in the face and assert that the Hayes Electors were truly elected," and said that it being a conceded fact that the people of Florida had not voted for the Hayes Electors, and the Commission having adopted the procrustean rule which prescribed it from considering any question of fraud that might have arisen in the case, the House was brought face to face with a gigantic fraud, and the decision of the Commission rendered it utterly impossible to defeat the accomplishment of that fraud. He also opposed the decision because the Commission had held that it was incompetent to go into evidence dehors of the papers opened by the President of the Senate. He held that that decision was not law, and quoted Cushing's Manual in support of his own view. He regretted that the decision had come with the significant vote of 8 to 7. He regretted it the more, because it was contrary to the spirit of the law, and disappointed the expectations of those who framed it that it would be carried out in a spirit of patriotism and impartiality, and in pursuance of the counsel from Mr. Hoar's speech in support of the Electoral bill where it was asked whether there were not in all this Sodom 10 men who would obey any other mandate than that of party, and he [Mr. Springer] replied that this decision gave the answer, "No, not one."

MR. FRYE DENOUNCES DEMOCRATIC EFFRONTERY.

Mr. FRYE, of Maine, denounced the unblushing effrontery with which charges of fraud were made against the Republican Party. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] in his speech had charged gigantic frauds, and out of the eight objections filed by the gentleman from New-York [Mr. Field] four charged fraud against the Republican Party. There was no Republican in the House who would not court investigation into the frauds of Louisiana or the frauds of Florida. The most searching investigation also into the frauds of the City of New-York, the frauds in New-Haven, Bridgeport, and Hartford, Conn., and the frauds in Indiana.

SPEECH OF MR. HURD.

Mr. HURD, of Ohio, said that he did not rise to complain of the decision of the Commission as it might affect the candidate of his choice, but as a member of the legal profession, and as a member of the House he wished to enter his protest against the novel and dangerous doctrine upon which that decision rested. When the President of the Senate submitted to the Joint Convention the certificates from the State of Florida, certificate number "one" had been objected to on the ground that it had been procured through fraud, and was the result of a conspiracy entered into by the Returning Board, by the Canvassers, and by the Governor of the State. Evidence had been also submitted tending to show fraud and conspiracy; the Commission had excluded this evidence and refused to hear it, and he solemnly protested against that action. Fraud vitiated everything. It poisoned the source of all judgment. It canceled every obligation, annulled every contract, and repealed every law. The judgment of the highest tribunal might be regarded as null and void if there was a taint of fraud attaching to it; and yet the Commission had decided that fraud would be secured and protected in this greatest case of all time. Any judgment reached by that Commission by the exclusion of evidence which would prove the fraud would not satisfy the country, and would not be sustained. Peace and prosperity would not come, and whoever assumed to assume the duties of the Presidential office with the stain of fraud (which it would be possible to prove) would be regarded as an usurper by a large majority of the American people. [Applause.]

MR. CARR SPEAKS HIS MIND OF HIS POLITICAL FRIENDS.

Mr. CARR, of Indiana, next took the floor, and made a speech which created much amusement on the part of the Republicans, and of those Democrats who opposed the Electoral bill. He said: "I have no hesitancy in saying that the Electoral Commission, in refusing to receive any other evidence as to the genuineness of the Electoral votes than that presented in the certificate of the Governor of a State, has sought to establish a destructive principle, and in this particular, for a partisan purpose, has ignored its duty to inquire into the facts, which was plainly imposed upon both these houses, and through them upon their Committee of the Constitution. I have no further hesitency in saying that my convictions are that, under the palpable facts behind the Governor's certificate, the vote of the State of Florida should have been returned for Tilden and Hendricks. But, Sir, I hold at the same time that the Democratic majority of this House has no moral right to complain that the Commission has rendered a partisan decision in reporting the four Electoral votes of Florida for Hayes and Wheeler. While I assert that this decision is contrary to the facts, and contrary to the will of a large majority of the people of the United States, yet I as boldly assert that the wrong is chargeable to a cause further back than the Commission. The wrong rests upon the shoulders of those who established this partisan tribunal. When the Democratic majority of this House adopted this law, with a full knowledge that a majority of the Commission would be Republican, governed by Republican instincts, controlled by Republican interests, warped by Republican biases, and moved by Republican motives, they deliberately abandoned every claim which the Democratic masses asserted to a control of our National affairs. The Commissioners have done no more nor less than what could or should have been expected or required of them. You erected a political tribunal, invested it with political attributes, and gave them political questions to determine, which they have settled from a political standpoint. Being Republicans, they believed that the Republican candidate for the Presidency was and ought to be elected. In making their declaration they have been true and faithful to their political sentiments, education and associations. No legal wrong can attach to them for this, but when you, as Democrats, deliberately put such power over such questions in the hands of a tribunal so constituted, you committed a bold and daring wrong to your pretended political convictions, and assuredly to your political associates whose political sentiments and rights you betrayed and abandoned to your political adversaries. I arise to remind the Democratic majority that in common decency your votes on this measure have estopped you from indulging in even one word of criticism against the decision of that tribunal. Sirs, it is your own offspring; you brought it into being; you gave it life and power, and you, and you alone, are responsible for the result. It is no excuse for you to assert that you did not anticipate such a result, that you expected higher and better things from your foundling. You had no more right to expect a tribunal so constituted to produce a different result than to expect a thornbush to bring forth figs. You will search the vocabulary of the English language in vain for terms adequate to express the indignation, and the blame will at last lie where it properly belongs. The few only who had the moral courage to stand here upon the floor, and amid the derision and contumely of the Democratic majority dared to warn you of the inevitable results of that day's work, have a moral right to complain of the end of the labor. But, Sirs, while they have deep regrets as to the action of the Commission, they have deep and bitter denunciations and condemnations to heap upon the heads of those who, claiming to be leaders of the great Democratic Party in this trying hour of its existence, have proven themselves selves unfaithful, inconsistent from ignorance or unworthy for base reasons. [Renewed laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Here then, in the name of the Democracy of the whole country, I absolve that Commission from all charges, save it may be that of an innocent mistake, and in the name of the same great power I denounce the majority of this House as being responsible for the wrong, and recreant—ignorantly or corruptly recreant—to the confidence which has been reposed in them, and faithless to the trust confided in them. [Applause.]

THE COMMISSION DENOUNCED.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Massachusetts, declared that the finding of the Commission was not in accordance with the facts, but was declaring the falsehood to be the truth. It had refused to examine the evidence which would prove beyond any doubt that the Tilden Electors had been elected in Florida. What a spectacle for the eyes of the whole world! A Government which, though it could defend itself against its enemies, was helpless before internal fraud and corruption, that the known fraud of a few men could usurp the Government, and the people were not only powerless to resist that act, but the Army and Navy could be used to put into execution that fraud, and compel the people to accept the usurper as their lawful ruler.

REMARKS OF MR. DUNNELL.

Mr. DUNNELL, of Minnesota, who had been a member of the Florida Investigating Committee, denounced the action of that committee in excluding from evidence all that had been before the Canvassing Board of that State in influencing its decision, and he characterized the statement of the majority that that State had gone for Tilden as surely as Massachusetts had gone for Hayes as a stupendous fiction, showing that the age of romance had not yet passed away.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Massachusetts, (Chairman of that Committee,) desired to ask Mr. Dunnell a question.

Mr. DUNNELL declined to yield, stating that he had been voted down in Florida, but proposed to have his 10 minutes now. The rest of his speech was devoted to the question of the Florida election.

MR. WALKER REPLIES TO MR. CARR.

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia, said that he was one of the Democrats who had supported the Electoral bill in good faith, and he would say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Carr] that it would take more than him, and the few Democrats who voted with him against that measure, to read the majority of the House out of the Democratic Party. The vote for that measure had been one of the grandest and loftiest evidences of Democratic faith in the honesty of mankind. If the Commission had not risen to the full heighth of the great occasion, the Democrats who supported the bill would have the satisfaction of knowing that they, at least, had done their duty, and made every effort to settle the great question according to law and right. He did not agree with the decision of the Commission, and he was glad that objection had been made to it, because it gave the Democratic Party an opportunity to enter its solemn protest against the consummation of an outrageous wrong under a mere legal fiction.

ANOTHER VIRTUOUS DEMOCRAT.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina said that he expected that a decision would have been reached on the lofty principles of right and justice, but he had been disappointed. He was, however, proud of the position of his party; it demanded the Presidency on the merits of the case. The other party said: "If you can give us the Presidency through any legal technicality, give it to us through that technicality." The country would take notice of the moral attitude of the two parties, one asking that the question should be decided on the truth of the matter, and the other resting its case on legal quibbles. If the latter party received the Presidency on those grounds it was welcome to take it; but history would write that party down, would write down the man who took the office, and would write down the Electoral Commission to a place from which the hand of resurrection could never raise them to the respect of mankind.

MR. KASSON'S ARGUMENT.

Mr. KASSON, of Iowa, submitted that the debate had wandered rather widely from the main question. The Commission had made its report; objection to it had been filed, and on this subject only two houses had been asked to act. There was no evidence before the House on which it could act in the case of Florida. The question presented was purely a question of law, and that question was whether the Commission had acted contrary to the Constitution and the law. If it had it ought to be overruled, and if it had not the House, of course, ought to concur. If the Commission was right the House had no jurisdiction in the recanvass of the vote of Florida. If the Commission was wrong, then possibly it might be urged that the House had that right. The declaration that the Republican Party was relying on legal fictions to elect the President was incorrect, unless the Constitution itself was a legal fiction. Unless the gentleman could point him to some clause or phrase in the Constitution which gave to the two Houses the power to revise the action of State Governments in canvassing votes, then the attempt to do it was a usurpation of authority on the part of the House, or whatever body made the attempt. There were mere improvised charges of fraud, and the House has been told by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Hurd,] that fraud vitiated everything. On that declaration he took direct and pointed issue with the gentleman, even if the fraud existed. For example, if a bill passed the House by a majority of one vote, and if it afterward turned out that one of the members voting for it had not been duly elected, and if he were unseated, or if it were shown that his vote had been purchased by bribery or fraud, that fact would not affect the bill itself; it would stand as law and could not be impeached. The courts had decided that principle over and over again. It was therefore incorrect to say that fraud vitiated everything in the sense of its vitiating a public and completed act.

CLOSE OF THE DEBATE.

Mr. FIELD, of New-York, closing the debate said: Scarcely had the election taken place in November when the President invited representatives of the Republican Party to visit disputed States in the South for the purpose of witnessing the counting of the votes, declaring as he did so, that no President could afford to be elected by fraud. When Congress met in December, acting in the same spirit, it sent committees of investigation into the same States to ascertain the truth. Those States have been ransacked, hosts of witnesses have been examined, piles of evidence have been laid upon the table, and yet now, all at once, it is discovered that the invitation of the President was an act of superfluous folly, and that his messengers and the committees of this House went upon a fool's errand. This discovery is made by Republicans. There is not a Democrat in either house of Congress who does not disown and reject it. It is to be seen now whether the Republicans disown or accept it. Is it now to be that the Republican Party has so forgotten the great words and the heroic deeds of its early days as to cry "Evil be Thou my God," and endeavor to install a falsehood in the chief magistracy of the land? The act is against all the history of Congress and all the precedents of the past. The Electoral Commission which you have constituted has resolved—first, that no evidence can be received beyond the certificates submitted to the two houses by the President of the Senate; and, second, that of those certificates and papers none can be received of any act after the voting by a State. This decision, Mr. Speaker, means—for it can mean nothing else—that the certificate of the Governor of a State, in accordance with the certificate of the State Canvassers, is to govern, unless before the vote is cast the State rejects the act, and this as if in, I was about to say, insolent mockery. We know that in scarcely a State is the canvass made until within a few days of the Electoral votes being cast, and we know, moreover, that in the State of Florida the Canvassing Board completed its canvass at 3 o'clock in the morning, and that the Electors voted at 12 o'clock the same day. And yet we are told by this Commission that unless the State of Florida within those nine hours had roused itself—acting through its departments—and rejected the action of this Canvassing Board there is no power to do it. In short, the doctrine is this: If the General commanding in Florida had on the morning of the 6th of December marched a Corporal's guard into the State-house, told off four of his soldiers and forced the Returning Board to certify their election, the Governor to supersede his certificate, there is no power in the land to prevent the votes of these four soldiers from being counted. We are to see whether it is the judgment of the House, the solemn judgment of this House composed of both parties, that that is the law of this land. Let me show you what is the consequence: We offered to prove fraud; we were forbidden. And how does it turn out? One of the Electors of the State of Florida, Charles H. Pearce, is certified by one vote of the Commission to be a lawful Elector of the State of Florida. Here [holding up a volume] is the record in the reports of Florida that this man is a convicted felon. In the Fourteenth of Florida is the record of a case against Charles H. Pearce, colored, a minister of the Gospel, and a Senator of Florida, showing that he offered a bribe of $500 to a member of the Legislature to vote; he was convicted by a jury; he appealed to the Supreme Court; the Supreme Court affirmed the sentence, and that man, a pardoned convict, is the one man whose vote elects (if he is elected at all) Mr. Hayes to the Presidential office. Mr. Speaker, the decision of this tribunal as it has been made is entitled to no respect. It is unfounded in morals as it is unsound in law and injurious and pernicious in its consequences. The spectacle of successful villainy is corrupting in proportion to the extent of the theatre on which it is enacted and to the prize which it wins. The Presidency of the United States has never yet been won by fraud. If it is won now, the example will be more injurious to our good name, and more corrupt to our people, than all the peculations and robberies and the frauds of all our history.

THE VOTE TAKEN.

The debate having closed, at 1:15 P. M. the House proceeded to vote on the question. The amendment offered by Mr. Hale was rejected by yeas 97, nays 167, and the original resolution offered by Mr. Field, of New-York, was adopted by yeas 168, nays 103, a party vote, except that Mr. Whitehouse, of New-York, voted with the Republicans. It was then ordered, on motion of Mr. Field, that the Clerk inform the Senate of the action of the House, and also that the House is now ready to meet the Senate in the hall of the House.

PREPARING FOR THE SENATE.

A recess of five minutes was then taken to allow preparations to be made for the reception of the Senate. During the discussion and voting the seats in the area fronting the Clerk's desk were occupied by Messrs. Evarts, Stoughton, Mathews, and Shellabarger, counsel for the Republican Party before the Commission, and by Messrs. Merrick and Green, counsel for the Democratic Party. The galleries were fully occupied by spectators, some ladies having to content themselves with seats in the gentlemen's reception-room, however, the colored people who usually lounge there appeared to be completely excluded. Ulysses S. Grant, Jr., occupied a member's seat on the Republican side.

THE JOINT MEETING.

At 2:25 P. M. the Senators arrived and took their places.

Mr. FERRY, President of the Senate, and presiding officer of the joint session, rose and said: The joint meeting of Congress resumes its session. The two houses separately have considered and determined the objection submitted by a member of the House to the decision of the Commission on the certificates from the State of Florida. The Clerk of the Senate will now read the decision of the Senate.

The decision of the Senate was read by its Clerk, and that of the House by its Clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER said: The two houses not concurring in ordering otherwise, the decision of the Commission will stand unreversed. The counting will now proceed, in conformity with the decision of the Commission. The tellers will announce the vote of Florida.

Senator ALLISON, one of the tellers, thereupon announced that the State of Florida had given four votes for R. B. Hayes, of Ohio, as President, and four votes for William A. Wheeler, of New-York, as Vice President.

THE VOTES OF GEORGIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT then opened the certificate from the State of Georgia, and handed it to the tellers. It was read by Representative Cook, of Georgia. A slip in the reading by which the one hundred and first year of independence was rendered as the one thousand and first, created a ripple of laughter throughout the audience.

The PRESIDING OFFICER asked whether there was any objection to the vote of Georgia.

None being made, he announced that the vote would be counted, and directed the tellers to declare it.

Mr. COOK then declared that the State of Georgia had given 11 votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of New-York, as President, and 11 votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, as Vice President.

THE VOTES OF ILLINOIS, INDIANA, IOWA, KANSAS, AND KENTUCKY.

Next followed in succession the State of Illinois with 21 votes for Hayes and Wheeler, Indiana with 15 votes for Tilden and Hendricks, Iowa with 11 votes for Hayes and Wheeler, Kansas with 5 votes for Hayes and Wheeler, and Kentucky with 12 votes for Tilden and Hendricks.

THE VOTES OF LOUISIANA OBJECTED TO.

Then came the certificate from the State of Louisiana, showing eight votes for Hayes and Wheeler, and the usual certificate stating that the certificate had been received by mail, and that no corresponding one had been received by messenger. [The messenger appointed for that purpose was Thomas C. Anderson of the Returning Board.] This was authenticated by Kellogg as Governor, he being himself one of the Electors. The certificate having been read, the presiding officer handed to the tellers another certificate from the same State, with a corresponding one received by mail, showing eight votes for Tilden and Hendricks. This was authenticated by McEnery as Governor of the State. Still a third certificate was opened and read, a corresponding one having been received by mail, with votes for Hayes and Wheeler, authenticated by Desloude, Secretary of State.

Mr. BROOKS, of Mississippi, one of the tellers, proceeded to read it; but it was obvious from the first sentence that it was a mere burlesque. It commenced by certifying that John Smith had been chosen an Elector from the First District; John Smith No. 1 from the second; John Smith No. 2 from the third; John Smith No. 3 from the fourth; John Smith No. 4 from the fifth; John Smith No. 5 from the sixth, and John Smith "A" and John Smith "B" Electors at Large.

When the reading had proceeded thus far, Senator SARGENT rose and said it was obvious that the certificate was a mere burlesque.

The Presiding Officer said it was his duty to submit all the papers received by him. He asked whether the paper should be suppressed. [Voices—"No, no; read it."] The reading was proceeded with, to the great amusement of the audience. It follows the usual formalities, showing that John Smith had been duly chosen as Chairman, and John Smith "B" as Sergeant at Arms, and that John Smith No. 1 and John Smith "A" were appointed tellers; that the eight votes of the State had been cast for Peter Cooper of New-York, and Cary of Ohio.

At this stage of the reading, Senator MCDONALD of Indiana, suggested that the two houses should not be compelled to listen to the reading. The Presiding Officer directed the address on the envelope to be read. It read—"To the Vice President of the United States, Washington. Vote of the Electoral College of the State of Louisiana for President and Vice President, 1876." He then directed the teller to proceed with the reading. After a few more sentences had been read, Mr. HOAR, of Massachusetts, inquired whether the Chair had decided that it was not in order to dispense with the further reading of the paper. The presiding officer said that he had asked unanimous consent, but that objection had been made. Mr. Hoar requested that any person objecting, should rise in his place and do so. Mr. MILLS, of Texas, rising, said: "As this is a burlesque act, I object." The reading was then proceeded with to its close; it purporting to be signed by John Smith, Company Two, Bull-dozers, Governor of Louisiana, and winding up with the motto: "Such is Life in Louisiana." Subsequently the Presiding Officer directed the paper to be omitted from the proceedings of the Joint Convention.

Senator MCDONALD, of Indiana, rose and submitted an objection to the Hayes and Wheeler certificates.

The objection was based on the ground that the Hayes Electors had not been duly elected, and that their election had been certified by William P. Kellogg who claimed to be, but in fact was not, Governor of the State of Louisiana, and because the Returning Board of said State was without jurisdiction, for the reason that the laws of Louisiana conferred no power on the Returning Board to canvass or compile the votes since they constituted but four of the five persons required by law, since those four were of the same political party, and since there was a vacancy in said board which the four members had refused to fill; because the four members of the Returning Board had full knowledge that a true compilation of the votes would have shown that the Tilden Electors had been duly elected; because said board had offered for money to sell the vote of Louisiana, and because A. B. Levisse and C. H. Brewster, of the Republican Electors, had held offices at trust under the Government of the United States at the time of their appointment as Electors.

The objection is signed by Messrs. McDonald of Indiana, Stevenson of Kentucky, Saulsbury of Delaware, and Bogy of Missouri, Senators; Messrs. Jenks of Pennsylvania, Gibson of Louisiana, Tucker of Virginia, Levy of Louisiana, Ellis of Louisiana, and Morrison of Illinois, representatives.

Mr. GIBSON, of Louisiana, also sent up objections to the Hayes and Wheeler certificates, because, first, the Government of Louisi

THE SITUATION IN THE EAST.

PROBABILITY THAT THE POWERS WILL NOT ANSWER THE RUSSIAN NOTE—THE ENGLISH LIBERALS IN FAVOR OF COERCING TURKEY—THE SERVIAN PEACE NEGOTIATIONS—THE GREAT SKUPOCHTJINA TO BE CONVENED.

LONDON, Feb. 12.—A dispatch from Vienna says: "It is stated here that the powers will probably not answer the Russian circular at all. If an identical answer were given the five powers would tacitly acknowledge Russia's claim for herself of freedom to withdraw from common action whenever she pleased, while separate answers would destroy the effect on the Czar's resolutions, which an enunciation of all the powers might have. The circular itself did not ask nor require an answer. It simply instructed the Russian representatives to ascertain the views of the Cabinets to which they are accredited. Curiously enough, Russia does not seem very anxious to know the views of the Cabinets, for the Russian representatives have not yet taken any steps toward ascertaining them."

The Birmingham Post asserts that the Liberal leaders after consultation have determined to submit a motion declaring that it is the duty of England, in concert with the European powers, or, failing this, with Russia alone—to enforce upon Turkey the adoption of necessary provisions for the security of Christians in the disturbed provinces.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—A Vienna dispatch says Russian advices confirm the reports that the number of arrests made of Communist and Nihilist conspirators in Moscow and neighborhood is increasing daily. The Russians are distributing notices in Poland threatening with severe punishment all persons who join the Turkish Army.

A dispatch from Belgrade reports that M. Christics, who has been appointed Envoy to Constantinople, and is empowered to sign a treaty of peace, is expected to start for that city to-day, Servia having so far accepted all the Turkish conditions except that relating to Jews, and having appointed a Turkish Commissary to reside in Belgrade. The appointment of M. Christics would ordinarily be very reassuring, as he is one of the most prominent advocates of peace, but extraneous influences complicate the situation. The Servian Government are much embarrassed because the Russian Government have not answered their appeal for audience. New causes of disagreement may be started at any moment should a favorable opportunity occur of securing assistance against the Porte. The district officials have received orders to prepare for elections for the Great Skuptschina, which is only convened on extraordinary occasions. As it comprises a larger number of members than the ordinary Skuptschina, the electoral formalities are cumbrous, and it will be impossible to complete them before the 1st of March. Therefore if the treaty is to be negotiated for ratification by the Great Skuptschina a prolongation of the armistice will be necessary.

THE MEETING OF THE ANGLO-AMERICAN CABLE COMPANY—EFFECTS OF COMPETITION—THE CONTEST BETWEEN THE COMPANIES.

LONDON, Feb. 12.—The Times' money article of Saturday, Feb. 10, referring to a meeting of the Anglo-American Cable Company, says: "In connection with the meeting of the stockholders of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, held to-day, it is worth calling attention to the distinct threat uttered by the Chairman against the Direct Cable Company, that he and his board were determined to institute what he called "an internecine war' till the weaker went to the wall, should the attempt now being made by the Globe Telegraph and Trust Company party to destroy the Direct Cable Company fail. He was frank enough to tell the shareholders that this war might be very costly, but none the less, it is the determination of his board to have no rival if a fight could destroy that rival."

The following is a report of the Anglo-American Cable Company's meeting on Friday last: "The ordinary general meeting of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company (limited) was held yesterday at the City Terminus Hotel, Viscount Monck, the Chairman, presiding. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, briefly alluded to the great depression of trade. Their own business was not less sensitive to the effects of the depression than other modes of employing capital, but notwithstanding the fact, there had been transacted during the last year as large a business in telegraphy across the Atlantic as in the year preceding. The company, however, had not obtained, as the shareholders had felt in their dividend, the full amount of the business, a fact attributable to the existence of a competitive company, which, of course, by carrying a portion of the business, had to that extent deprived them of their profits. The obvious and ordinary mode of meeting a competitive rival in the field would be to carry on what he might call a sort of 'internecine war' with him till they had brought him to such a condition as would induce him to come to an amicable arrangement. Such a course, however, would involve a certain loss of revenue to both companies, and, having the fact before their minds, they desired to exhaust every means at their disposal for arriving at an amicable arrangement with their competitor before they 'drew the sword' and embarked in a hostile competition with him. To show the anxiety of the Directors not to embark in any hostile competition with the Direct Cable Company as soon as that company had begun work he, though representing the senior company, requested an interview with the Chairman of the Direct Cable Company, and asked if they could not come to some terms enabling them both to live without expending the capital and money of their shareholders in a hostile competition. The Chairman of the Direct Cable Company met him with a point-blank refusal to do what he proposed, but he did not tell him that it was impossible. That was subsequently discovered. This point, however, was now to be decided by a court of law, and the Directors had come to the conclusion that they should wait and see how the question was decided before they adopted any alteration in their policy. He had heard it said that the Globe Company was only the 'creature' of this company in these transactions. The Globe Company, however, was interested in this company to the extent of $1,250,000, over a seventh part of their whole capital, and they were also largely interested in the Direct Cable Company. It was therefore obvious to any one that the contest between those companies, in both of which the Globe Company was deeply interested, must be prejudicial to the interests of that company, and therefore it was their duty to prevent it. As stated in the report, they intended to send out an expedition this year to repair the cable of 1865. The cable of 1866 was recently broken, but in very shallow water, and he believed the break was capable of easy repair. The repair of these two cables and the consequent information they would obtain would be of the highest interest, not only to themselves, but to all proprietors of telegraph cables. The great difficulty which they had all had hitherto was their absolute ignorance, so far as experience was concerned, of the length of time on which they might calculate on the service of any given cable. The state of these cables when they were taken up would go far to remove that ignorance, and it would enable them in a great degree to economise with reference to the necessity for future restoration and repair.

Sir D. Gooch, M. P., Director, seconded the adoption of the report which was carried unanimously without discussion, and the dividends, in accordance with the report were declared."

Application has been made for a mandamus to compel the Direct United States Cable Company's Board of Directors to reconsider the votes which the Chairman of the late meeting of shareholders decided invalid, and declare the resolutions of Mr. Pender (who represents the amalgamationists) adopted. It is believed that a decision will be obtained within a fortnight.

DOOM OF THE NEWARK MURDERERS.

FAILURE TO PASS THE WRIT OF ERROR BILL IN THE NEW-JERSEY SENATE — THE EXECUTION TO TAKE PLACE ON THURSDAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Feb. 12.—In the House this evening 28 bills were offered, but none of public interest. The only thing of any interest in either house was the consideration in the Senate of Gov. Bedle's veto, of Friday last, of the bill granting the writ of error in murder cases. After all the calendar business had been disposed of, Senator Magie, who introduced the bill, addressed the Senate in its support. He denied that the pending execution of the Newark murderers was the cause of the bill. It was, however, the occasion of it, because it was while engaged in the effort to secure a new trial for his convicted clients that the anomalous character of the old law was brought to his notice. He thought it monstrous that greater safeguards should be thrown around the liberty and property of a condemned man than around his life. He also took up the objections of the Governor, set forth in the Message, and discussed them seriatim. Senator Ward arose in reply, and warmly supported the veto. Senator Bergen, having been called to the chair, President Abbett took the floor. He said that he partly differed from the gentlemen who had preceded him. The old law which made a writ of error a writ of right in minor cases, and a writ of grace only in capital cases, was an outrage. It ought not to stand on the statute books. At the same time the Governor pointed out one objection to the bill which he regarded as of sufficient weight to justify him [the Senator] in sustaining the veto. It was the fact that no time was fixed in which the writ of error must be applied for. That error was, to his mind, a fatal one. The question whether the bill should pass notwithstanding the Governor's veto was put and negatived by the vote of 15 Senators sustaining the veto and 6 against it. The six who voted in favor of the passage of the bill over the veto were Senators Hill, Hobart, Leaming, Ludlow, Magie, and Schultze. This defeat destroys the last hope of the Newark convicts for their lives, and they will be executed in the Essex County Jail, next Thursday, in accordance with the terms of the Governor's respite.

Gifford, who Clerk Littlefield swore offered him money to go to Washington with the Vernon Parish return, saying he could get $100,000 from the National Republican Committee for the suppression of that evidence, this morning published a denial of this story. He says Littlefield said prominent Democrats, including Gov. Palmer, had approached him and offered him large sums of money to disclose what he knew of the Returning Board. He being a Republican, however, preferred to keep silence for a less sum than the Democrats offered. Gov. Palmer approached him in various ways, and intimated he could get $10,000 for his information. Mr. Gifford says he is ready to make these statements under oath.

A COAL COMPANY IN TROUBLE.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 12.—In the United States Circuit Court this morning, Samuel Dickson, of Philadelphia, made a motion for the appointment of Edward W. Clark, Benjamin Williamson, and William H. They were required to file bonds to the amount of $300,000 for the faithful performance of their duties. An injunction was granted restraining all parties from interfering with said Receivers in taking possession, and in the transaction of all their business as Receivers.

WILKESBARRE, Feb. 12.—The announcement here at head-quarters that the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company had to-day applied for a Receiver was not entirely unexpected. It has caused no panicky feeling as yet. It is thought the mines will be worked as usual.

THE OLD SOUTHERN WHIGS.

THEIR STATUS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

THE OLD WHIGS THE MOST VIOLENT MEN IN THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY—HOW THE SECESSION ORDINANCE WAS PASSED—THE PEACE MOVEMENT OF 1862 AND WHAT CAME OF IT—OLD DEMOCRATS KEPT OUT OF OFFICE AND WHIGS KEPT IN—REPUBLICAN PROSPECTS IN THE OLD NORTH STATE.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

RALEIGH, Friday, Feb. 9, 1871.

Much has been said and written about the old Whig element of the Southern States, and it has been prophesied that this portion of the Democratic Party will, sooner or later, join the Republican Party. This prophecy, so far as North Carolina is concerned, will never be realized. Strange to say, the most bitter and unrelenting men of the Democratic Party are the old Whig leaders—men who loved the Union—some of whom remained true to their principles during the entire war, and yet, after the war was over, joined the enemies of the Union, and became the most violent men in the State. In 1860 the Whigs of this State polled 44,990 votes for Bell for President. All these men were Unionists, and bitterly opposed to secession. In February, 1861, when the people voted upon the question of convention or no convention, and for delegates, the Union men defeated the convention, and elected two-thirds of the delegates by 30,000 majority. There were many Democrats who were loyal to the Union, and they helped to swell this vote. After Sumter was fired on, and Lincoln issued his proclamation calling for 75,000 troops, a convention was called without submitting the question to a vote of the people. The secessionists worked up public sentiment to such an extent, because Lincoln proposed to coerce the Southern States, and browbeat Union men by denominating them "submissionists" to Lincoln and his hirelings, that a large majority of the delegates elected to the convention were original secessionists. George E. Badger, one of the ablest men this State has ever produced, was elected from Wake County, and William A. Graham was elected from Orange County. These two men were the leaders of the Union delegates, and so powerful was the current of secession that Mr. Badger introduced an ordinance of secession, and so arrogant were the secession delegates that they voted down the ordinance introduced by Mr. Badger and adopted that introduced by Burton Craige, of Rowan. After the secession ordinance was enrolled, every member of the convention signed it; the Union delegates were afraid to refuse, because they would have been hanged to the trees in the Capitol square. From this time until January, 1863, the ostracism and oppression of the Union men by the secessionists was worse than that endured by the white Republicans of the South since 1868.

As the war progressed, and men and boys were conscripted and hurried to the front, the people began to murmur, and the war began to grow unpopular; and when the writ of habeas corpus was suspended, the murmurings broke into open denunciation of Jefferson Davis and his Government. This was in 1863, and while the Legislature was in session peace resolutions were introduced and voted down. The movement spread, and in less than two months peace meetings had been held in nearly every county in the State. The result was the election of Z. B. Vance by the Union men in August, 1862, as Governor. While there was no fixed understanding, it was tacitly understood among the Union men and old Whigs that Gen. Vance was to embrace the first opportunity that presented itself, to recall the North Carolina troops from Virginia, and call a convention and take the State out of the Confederacy, and thus break the back-bone of the secession movement. Up to this time the old Whigs had maintained their principles, and were opposed to Jefferson Davis and his government. In an evil hour Vance went to Richmond to see Davis, and from that time forward, he was a changed man—from an outspoken Union and peace man, he became the most vigorous War Governor in the South, and carried with him the great majority of the old Whigs. This was the beginning of the departure of the old Whigs from the Union or Conservative Party; and when the war ended, Gov. Vance and every Whig who followed him, were the most ultra in opposition to the Government in the State.

The appointment of W. W. Holden in 1865, as Provisional Governor by President Jonnson, angered the old Whigs, and when Gov. Holden refused to recommend the pardon of W. A. Graham and other old Whigs who had followed Vance into the camp of Jeff Davis, they set about at once to organize a party in opposition to Holden. In looking around for an available man, Gov. Graham and his followers united upon Jonathan Worth, who was an old Whig and a Union man who had been appointed State Treasurer by Gov. Holden. Worth became a candidate for Governor at the election in November, 1865, and was elected by 6,000 majority. From this election sprang the present Democratic organization. The whites refused to vote on the question of calling a convention in 1867 to frame a Constitution under the Reconstruction Acts. In February, 1868, the Democrats held a State Convention in this city, with W. A. Graham as President, who announced in his speech, on taking the chair, that the line of demarkation between the two parties was the line of color. Vance, Leach, Turner, Gilmer, Davidson, and almost every old Whig leader followed Graham as they did Vance, and in this State they have taken absolute control of the Democratic Party, and have held nearly all the offices since 1870. Therefore there is no discontent among the old Whigs in this State because they control the party and run it in their interest. What hope is there under these circumstances that these men are going to break with their party and attach themselves to the Republican Party? None whatever. The party lash is brought into play at the slightest sign of independence on the part of any Democrat, and he is driven back into the party or crushed out at once. There are few Democrats in this State who have opinions other than those laid down for them by party caucuses and conventions, and not one of them dares to oppose any party movement, on pain of being driven out of the party and denounced as a Radical. Therefore, if Northern Republicans are expecting an addition to the party in this State from the old Whig element, they are counting on a broken reed.

To show that the party in this State is controlled by the old Whigs, it is sufficient to mention the following who are now in office: Z. B. Vance, Governor; A. S. Merrimon, United States Senator; J. J. Yeates, A. M. Waddell, J. J. Davis, W. M. Robbins, and R. B. Vance, Congressmen; M. L. Eure and John Kerr, Superior Court Judges; T. J. Jarvis, Lieutenant Governor; J. M. Worth, State Treasurer, and many others, while there are not more than six old Democrats now in office.

When the Republican Party was organized in this State in 1867, the following old Whigs enrolled themselves under the Republican banner, to wit: John Pool, Alfred and Oliver Dockery, G. W. Logan, C. L. Harris, William Barrow, D. M. Carter, D. R. Goodloe, W. A. Smith, D. L. Russell, A. H. Jones, J. W. Bowman, C. C. Jones, and as many more. Of the old Democratic leaders the following took sides with the Republican Party: W. W. Holden, Thomas Settle, W. B. Rodman, R. P. Dick, Rufus Barringer, J. W. Albertson, and a few others. Admitting that the negroes voted their full strength in April, 1868, that is 79,000, Holden's vote for Governor being 92 235, it will be observed that only 13,235 white men voted the Republican ticket at the April election in 1868. Granting that 5,000 negroes did not vote in April, 1868, this would give 18,235 white men who voted the Republican ticket at that election. At the election in November last not more than 80,000 negroes voted for Settle, making the white Republican vote 30,000—a gain of 12,000 since April, 1868. Vance's vote being 123,000 shows that only one white man out of every five voted the Republican ticket. With every department of the State Government, with every railroad and other corporation in which the State has a controlling interest, and with two-thirds of the counties in the hands of the Democrats, it will be seen that there is every reason why the Democratic vote should be increased at every election. Should Hayes be declared President, with the changes which are to be made by the present Legislature in the county governments, in the judiciary system, and in the election of officers, there may be a chance for the Republicans to rally and make a vigorous campaign in November, 1878.

OPPOSED TO BIENNIAL SESSIONS.

The Legislature of Maine is considering the subject of biennial sessions, and the papers of that State print a letter from Mr. Lewis B. Hibbard, editor of the Vermont Farmer, in which he alludes to the experience of Vermont, and advises against the proposed change. He says:

"First—You will get a lower average standard of ability in your biennial than your annual sessions. I shall not stop to dwell upon this point. The fact is quite patent with us for reasons which thinking men will see.

Second—Very few old members are returned the second session. The American peculiarity—a hankering after office—is so great and powerful that it becomes a marked exception for a man to be returned the second time. I heard this evil deplored in a recent farmers' meeting by the farmers themselves, and yet, in 1878, they will elect new men, as so many wish to go to glory and shame too, I may add, in too many cases. Consequently, a few scheming lawyers or other wire pullers manipulate things to their liking with much greater ease. A few days since one of our Vermont farmers said in a public assembly—and he was a witty member of the last Legislature—that a dozen or so lawyers practically had to fit a string for the farmers of the body, because they are 'green' and not familiar with the outs and ins of legislative experience.

Third—It is poor economy. That was used as an argument when the State went into it, but it was a delusion and the figures used by scheming men did 'lie' most egregiously. The State will not save a dollar practically.

Fourth—The average of your Legislature will be lower than now, for reasons above enumerated, unless you are very much wiser than we are in Vermont."

THE PRESERVATION OF GAME.

MEETING OF THE ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROTECTION OF GAME—THE AMENDMENTS TO THE GAME LAW LIABLE TO BE PASSED—LEGISLATION RECOMMENDED TO PREVENT THE SPEARING OF FISH.

The monthly meeting of the Association for the Protection of Game was held last night at the residence of Mr. Charles H. Housman, No. 19 East Fifty-fourth street, Mr. Clinton Gilbert, President, occupied the chair. The Secretary read a mass of correspondence from persons in other States, asking for information and advice on the subject of the preservation of game, and stated that the most cordial co-operation had been extended to all such inquirers. Senator Wagstaff reported that the amendments to the Game laws would undoubtedly be passed at the present session of the Legislature, with the exception of section 8, which reads as follows:

"In any prosecution or trial under the provisions of this act of any person for having in his possession any quadrupeds, birds, fish, or shell-fish in the months or parts of months in which it is forbidden to have the same, it shall be lawful to be shown in evidence that the quadrupeds, birds, fish, or shell-fish in question were not taken or killed within the time prohibited by law, or were not taken or killed within this State; and such evidence, when deemed sufficient by the court having jurisdiction of the offense alleged, shall be a sufficient defense to such action."

This section, Senator Wagstaff explained, would entirely nullify all previous legislation for the preservation of game, and had caused the defeat of the bill last year. With the objectionable section stricken out, the bill would undoubtedly pass. He would suggest that the next night of meeting be altered to Friday, so as to give them an opportunity of inviting the members of the Legislative Committee on Amendments to the Game law, and discussing the subject in all its bearings. The suggestion of was adopted, and the next meeting night changed to Saturday. J. W. Whitehead reported that no venison could now be found in the markets, nor was there any in the City except what was secreted by some commission merchants, who managed to elude the vigilance of the officers of the association, but would unquestionably be entrapped some day. J. W. Whitehead also commended to the notice of the meeting that section of the Pennsylvania Game laws prohibiting the pollution of streams and rivers by the refuse of oil factories and gas-works, which practice was terribly destructive to fish. The matter was referred to the Committee on By-laws. On motion of J. W. Cuthbert the Executive Committee was authorized to invest a surplus of $500, in addition to the fund of $4,000 already invested.

Hon. Seth Green, who was present, said that in his opinion one of the greatest mistakes made in framing the Game laws was in allowing the spearing of fish in any season. The practice had been extended into the spawning season, and as a consequence bass, bull-heads, and other fish were being destroyed. He asked Mr. Robert B. Roosevelt to also alluded to the practice of spearing in the spawning season, and said that legislation was absolutely necessary to stop the wholesale destruction of fish. The State Fishery Commissioners had stocked Owasco Lake, in this State, but no sooner did the fish begin to thrive than the residents of the locality commenced the practice of spearing, and continued it through the spawning season, taking in as many as 300 pounds of fish a night. So defiant and lawless did they become, too, that nobody dared interfere, and the consequence was that the fish which had been placed there at such immense trouble and expense was speedily exterminated. The subject was one of very great importance, and he hoped the association would meet the Fishery Commissioners and agree upon a joint plan of action for securing legislation and to do away with the evil. The meeting then adjourned, and the members were entertained by J. W. Housman with a fine game supper.

NOMINATION FOR ASSEMBLY.

A meeting of the Tammany Hall delegates from the First Assembly District was held last evening at Cahill's saloon, in Park row, to nominate an Assemblyman to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. James Healey. The convention was called to order by Justice Duffy, who occupied the chair. The Conference Committee, which had held a meeting in the afternoon to consider the subject of the nomination, reported in favor of Mr. Edward Cahill. That gentleman having declined to accept the nomination, however, the convention proceeded to ballot for a nominee, the candidates being John F. Berrigan and Thomas Madigan. A motion for a recess having been declared carried by the Chairman, the supporters of Berrigan retired in a body. As they did not return, the remaining delegates went into session, and, after considerable debate, nominated John Moore in place of James Madigan, their first choice. Moore was formerly an Alderman under the Tweed régime.

AN ENGINEER RUN OVER AND KILLED.

NEW-HAVEN, Feb. 12.—As the Philadelphia through express train, on the Boston and New-York Air-Line Road, was passing Westchester Station, in the town of Colchester, on Sunday morning, it slowed up to let engineer Andrew Bacon on board. He was taken to his wife's home in Westchester, where he died on Sunday night.

LAW REPORTS.

A REMINDER OF THOMAS C. FIELDS.

A SUIT TO FORECLOSE A MORTGAGE MADE BY HIM—HOW HIS SURETIES FARED.

Some interesting statements are contained in the papers in the case of the Mutual Life Insurance Company against Thomas C. Fields and others, in which Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday rendered a decision on an application made by Hawley D. Clapp, one of the defendants. Mr. Clapp, in his petition to the court, set forth that the action was brought for the foreclosure of a mortgage for $22,000 made by Thomas C. Fields and wife on July 1, 1872. In October, 1871, Fields had been arrested by the Sheriff in one of the "Ring" suits, and held in $100,000 bail, Mr. Clapp and William Florence becoming his sureties. On Dec. 14, 1871, before the execution of the mortgage referred to, Fields and his wife executed and delivered a deed of trust to Henry Parsons of some property, including the premises covered by the mortgage. This deed Mr. Clapp says he believes was made so that the property might be sold, and he and Florence indemnified in case they should be called upon to pay anything, or should suffer any damage by reason of their becoming sureties for Fields. A year later Fields and his wife executed a deed of the premises, in which the consideration was stated to be $1, and in which the names of the grantees were left blank. This deed was made at Havana, Cuba, and after its arrival in this City the names of Messrs. Clapp and Florence were inserted also, for the purpose, as Mr. Clapp says, of indemnifying them against loss on account of their suretyship. Mr. Clapp says he never bargained for nor purchased the premises, nor agreed to pay any consideration for them. The mortgage on the property was foreclosed by the plaintiffs. When the summons and complaint in the suit were served on him, Mr. Clapp says he paid no attention to them, but merely turned them over to Mr. Fields' attorney. He found out afterward that the mortgaged premises had been sold for less than the amount of the mortgage and that judgment for $8,684 66 had been entered against him and Florence on Feb. 17, 1876. Florence, he says, has succeeded in having the judgment, as to him, set aside, and in having a trial ordered to ascertain his liability. Mr. Clapp seeks the same kind of relief. On the other hand, however, Mr. McClure, one of the plaintiffs' attorneys, makes affidavit that Clapp had knowledge of all the proceedings in the foreclosure suit, was represented by counsel in the same, and never denied his liability under the mortgage. Judge Barrett denied the motion to have the judgment for the deficiency set aside as to Mr. Clapp, but without prejudice to a renewal by the latter on affidavits in answer to the allegations in the affidavit of Mr. McClure.

IS A LIVERY STABLE A NUISANCE?

The case in which Mrs. Caroline G. Reed seeks to enjoin Matwin Livingston from conducting a livery stable business in East Fifty-third street, on the ground that it would prove a nuisance to the neighborhood, came on for trial yesterday in the Special Term of the Superior Court, before Judge Sedgwick. Mr. Wheeler H. Peckham appeared for Mrs. Reed and Mr. Waldo Hutchins for Mr. Livingston. Mr. Peckham, in opening the case, said that Mrs. Reed owned the two residences Nos. 6 and 8 East Fifty-third street, and that before purchasing the property she had been assured that the character and standing of the owners of the vacant lots adjoining were such that no use would be made of them unworthy of the select and fashionable quarter in which they were situated. While in Europe in the Summer of 1876 she heard from her brother that Mr. Livingston contemplated erecting a livery stable on two of the lots immediately adjoining her houses, and she quickly returned and opened negotiations with Livingston for the purchase of the lots, for which he wanted $55,000. As Livingston had paid only $33,000 for them and property was greatly depreciated in value, she refused to pay the amount asked, and was referred to a builder, Mr. James Nailor, to make terms with him, Mr. Livingston saying he would be satisfied with any arrangement Mr. Nailor might make. Mr. Nailor made the extraordinary proposition that for a bonus of $6,000 he would see that two good houses were erected instead of the stable. This proposition was indignantly rejected and the present proceedings instituted. Mr. Peckham said that the existence of a livery stable in such a first-class neighborhood was a nuisance which ought to be abated. The building had been erected, and presented an unsightly appearance, projecting out some distance beyond the front of the residences adjoining. Mr. John H. Sherwood, a lawyer, called by Mr. Peckham, described the neighborhood as first-class, and said that the effect of permitting this stable to be constructed would be injurious in the highest degree, depreciating the value of property near by to the extent of from 30 to 50 per cent. Messrs. Charles Duggin, an architect, and E. H. Ludlow, the real estate agent, corroborated the testimony of Mr. Sherwood. Dr. Matthew D. Mann, of No. 8 West Forty-fifth street, testified that he had resided next door to a livery stable, and found it an intolerable nuisance, on account of the noise, offensive odors, unsightly objects connected therewith, and swarms of flies in warm weather. Other testimony of a similar character was given, and much amusement was created by Daniel Harnett, keeper of a livery stable in East Thirtieth street, who had been called by Mr. Peckham to prove that in his opinion a livery stable was a nuisance in a first-class neighborhood, testifying that he believed that they were in every respect not only unexceptionable, but were great and desirable improvements to any neighborhood, no matter how select.

The further hearing was adjourned to the 24th inst., when the defense is to offer testimony.

ON TRIAL FOR PERJURY.

James Sutton, President of the Aldine Publishing Company, was placed on trial for perjury, before Recorder Hackett, yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. From the opening of Assistant District Attorney Herring it appeared that on the 24th of June, 1875, a fire broke out on the premises occupied by the Aldine Company at Nos. 23 Liberty street and 58 Maiden lane, and raged for over two hours on the third and fourth floors of the Liberty street house, extending to the roof of that and the Maiden lane building. After the fire, in making out his proof of loss, Mr. Sutton, as alleged, swore that his loss by the fire in the Maiden lane building was $122,966 62; and in the Liberty street building $83,000, while his insurance on both buildings amounted to $109,190. A sworn investigation, the District Attorney contended, revealed the fact that the losses on both premises did not exceed $40,000, and that of the 3,700 pounds of valuable electroplates which Sutton swore were with other valuable property absolutely consumed in the fire, only 49 pounds could be found in the débris. On this state of facts Mr. Sutton was arrested for perjury, and, as already stated, is now on trial. John de Stevens, of the Insurance Patrol, proved the fire at the premises in question. The Fire Marshal testified to the statements made by Sulton in his sworn examination. The case will be resumed to-day.

MR. LENHEIM LIBERATED ON BAIL.

On Wednesday last Lewis S. Lenheim, of Great Bend, Penn., father of the younger Lenheim, at present in the Tombs awaiting trial for forgery, was brought on to this City to answer a similar charge, connected, however, in no way with the transaction in which the younger Lenheim was concerned. It is alleged that in October last Lenheim offered for discount to the Park Bank in this City a note for $9,560, purporting to be signed by H. N. & S. I. Clark, of Great Bend, Penn. The note as alleged was a forgery, and it was to answer that charge that Lenheim was brought within this jurisdiction. The accused was committed to the Tombs in default of $10,000, and remained there until yesterday, when he furnished the necessary amount of bail, in the person of Nathaniel Van Sickel, of Goshen, Orange County, N. Y. The bail was accepted by Recorder Hackett, and the accused was liberated.

The General Term decided that the excuse was insufficient. That decision is conclusive upon me. The motion to open default will therefore be denied.
Sage vs. Stone.—The fact that the execution was returned before the expiration of sixty days only constitutes a bar when it is the result of a collusion with the plaintiff. It is the fraudulent act of the plaintiff which vitiates the execution and not the mere fact that it arrives him of his equitable action in the nature of a creditor's bill. (Forbes vs. Waller, 25 N. Y., p. 438.) The proofs presented fail to show fraud or collusion on the plaintiff's part, and the motion to return the writ will be denied.

A CHANCE FOR BOSTON'S ANXIOUS AND AIMLESS.

The Boston Traveller of Saturday prints an advertisement which reads: "A Christian gentleman, widower, over 50, in splendid health, no liquor or tobacco, pleasant manners, desires to make the acquaintance of a lady of intelligence, position, and good health, not over 40, with a view to matrimony." The Traveller indorses this as follows: "The advertiser, we have taken pains to prove, is all he claims to be, and even more—a Christian gentleman of high taste, the character, blessed with intelligence and personal good qualities, and moreover, of considerable wealth. His advertisement is inserted in perfect good faith."

It is satisfactory to learn, on authority so unexceptionable as that of FERNANDO WOOD, that the Democrats in the House "are ready in good faith to carry out, in all respects, the Electoral Commission law, and the result that may be reached in pursuance of it." As the representative of the "invincible in peace" party, Mr. WOOD might naturally have been expected to be one of the first to repudiate in advance any decision that should fail to elect TILDEN. The country will, doubtless, breathe more freely for the assurance that the Democrats do not propose to add falsehood and bad faith to their campaign of fraud and violence. It hardly needed the home-thrusts at his own party of Mr. CARR, of Indiana, and the virtuous indignation of Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, to make the Democratic speeches of yesterday as suggestive as they were amusing. Mr. CARR was good enough to absolve the Commission from all charges, save, it may be, that of an honest mistake, but he was most emphatic in denouncing the majority in the House as "ignorantly or corruptly recreant" to the confidence reposed in them that they would by hook or crook make TILDEN President. Mr. FIELD very justly remarked that "the spectacle of successful villainy is corrupting in proportion to the extent of the theatre on which it is enacted and to the prize which it wins." That will explain, among other things, the very strong odor of rascality that is inseparably associated with the name of DAVID DUDLEY FIELD.

The presentation of a burlesque Electoral certificate from Louisiana yesterday served to show how easy it would be, under the principles adopted by the authors of the Compromise bill, to throw into doubt and confusion the results of a Presidential election. Absurd as this document was, it was really no more irregular, when tested by the requirements of law, than the so-called Tilden certificates, to whose consideration the Commission are about to devote several days, and which will furnish occasion for another day or two of useless speech-making in the House. In the exercise of his constitutional functions, the President of the Senate could as justly have thrown aside the bogus certificates of the persons claiming to be Tilden Electors as he did the burlesque return of the mythical John Smith. To order all reference to the latter production to be expunged from the record was a stretch of authority to which the supporters of the Compromise plan should logically have objected. It was clearly an overstepping of the purely ministerial powers which are supposed to be the sole attributes of the President of the Joint Convention.

The statement that the engineers appointed to examine the Washington monument have agreed to recommend its being taken down, indicates that that hapless pile has not yet reached the end of misfortune. It is said that the ground on which the structure has been so far built will not permit any more weight being put into the monument. If the stones are to be taken down, it is unlikely that they will ever be put together again in a new and more prosperous design, though a plan of some sort is under consideration. The unfortunate part of this business is that blocks of material from foreign Governments and associations, as well as from various American States, have been built into the work, or are now on hand awaiting resumption of operations. If these could be utilized in some way, we might as well relinquish the project of obelisk or shaft for this generation. Clearly, the monument cannot beg its way toward the skies.

There was another Municipal conference yesterday, with what result is not known, only the proceedings are believed not to have been harmonious. This fact is at least a consoling one, since it shows that the members of the Citizens' Committee are beginning to realize that the interests of the tax-payers are irreconcilable with the demands of the office-holders. The attempt to convince our local rulers that the affairs of the City are extravagantly and incompetently managed, is as likely to prove unsuccessful as the attempt to secure their co-operation in legislation which must be based on that assumption. Republicans at Albany have no excuse whatever for misapprehending the public demand that a very sharp turn shall be made in the direction of economy and efficiency in our local Government, and they certainly cannot afford to allow the City to be once more cheated out of some radical measures of reform. An office-holder's lobby has already been organized to stave off or defeat all measures tending to reduce offices or cut down expenses. The persuasive efforts of these persons will be as narrowly watched as the course of weak or mercenary Republicans, to whom their efforts will be chiefly directed.

The too familiar proposal to turn a certain portion of the Central Park into a Parade Ground for the National Guard is up again at Albany. It will be generally conceded that our City regiments need a convenient parade ground, but there will be but one opinion about the inadmissibility of any plan for surrendering to them any portion of Central Park. There is but one way to preserve our beautiful pleasure ground in such a condition as to make it an object of pride and admiration to our descendants, and that is to resist all encroachments whatever upon the purposes for which it was created. The public opinion of the City has, so far, successfully resisted the numerous efforts which have been made to pervert the Park to uses incompatible with the plans of those who laid it out, and it ought not to be very difficult to defeat this latest one.

THE NEXT CASE FOR THE COMMISSION.

The Electoral vote of Louisiana was yesterday submitted to the Commission on two sets of objections to the Hayes Electors, and one set of objections to the Tilden Electors. If the former are examined with reference to the decisions already made by the Commission, it hardly seems probable that they will present a very formidable case for consideration, or that they will occupy any more time, at most, than was spent on Florida. Though the counsel on the Democratic side are much stronger than in the case of Florida, including Judge TRUMBULL and Mr. CARPENTER, both of them far more able than any Democratic lawyer yet heard by the Commission, and particularly familiar with the political history of Louisiana; and, though they will make every possible effort to convince the Commission, we shall not be surprised to see a decision reached by Saturday night.

The Democratic objections are as follows:

1. "That the Hayes Electors were not duly elected." This is a question which the Commission has decided that it cannot go into.

2. "That their election was certified to by WILLIAM P. KELLOGG, who claimed to be, but in fact was not, Governor of the State of Louisiana."

That Mr. KELLOGG was not of right the Governor of Louisiana is a position long since taken by the Democrats in Congress. That he was not so in fact is a statement which it will be difficult to prove. He occupied the office; his signature gave final effect to the laws of the State; his veto defeated proposed legislation; his commissions were the evidence of authority for State officials recognized by the courts; his orders were obeyed by the Militia; his acts, and his alone, were those proper to the office, and were respected as such. The Commission has decided that in the case of the Florida Electors, it would recognize the de facto officers; it can hardly refuse to do the same thing with Gov. KELLOGG.

3. Various objections are made to the competency and jurisdiction of the Returning Board, all turning on the alleged failure of the Board to fulfill the conditions imposed by the law creating it. The principal objections are that the board was constituted of four, instead of five, persons; that the four members were all of the same political party, and that they refused to fill the vacancy. There is nothing, however, in the State law which makes these objections in any sense fatal to the authority of the board's action. The law says that five persons "shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State," but it adds, "a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum and have power to make the returns of all elections." The law requires that the five persons originally appointed by the Senate shall be "from all political parties," but it makes no such requisition as to the majority which "shall constitute a quorum and have power to make returns of all elections." Finally it says that any vacancy "shall be filled by the residue of the Board of Returning Officers;" but it does not declare, and it cannot be inferred, that if a vacancy is not thus filled the action of the board will be invalid.

4. "The four members of the Returning Board had full knowledge that a true compilation of the votes would have shown that the Tilden Electors had been duly elected." To sustain this objection the Democrats must break down the certificate of the board that a true canvass gave the election to the Hayes Electors, and they can only do this by going into the facts as to the popular vote, which the Commission, according to the decision in the Florida case, will not allow.

5. "Said board had offered for money to sell the vote of Louisiana." It is not alleged that the board did sell the vote of Louisiana, and the Commission is not likely to go into an inquiry as to an offer which, in fact, had no effect on the action of the board

6. "A. B. LEVISSE and O. H. BREWSTER, of the Republican Electors, held offices of trust under the Government of the United States at the time of their appointment as Electors." LEVISSE was appointed by the remaining Electors, having previously, but after the popular election, resigned his Federal office. His appointment, therefore, dates from the 6th of December. The Commission has decided, in the case of HUMPHREYS, in Florida, that under substantially like circumstances, the Elector was eligible. BREWSTER resigned before the election, but was reappointed after the meeting of the Electors. The Democrats will maintain that, under the Tenure-of-office law, he retained his office until the new appointment or reappointment was made. But the law in question only provides that an officer is "entitled" to his office until his successor is appointed and confirmed. It does not compel him to retain it, and there is grave doubt whether it could compel him, even if it so declared. The right of an officer to free himself from office by his own act, independent of the acceptance of the appointing power was sustained by Mr. EVARTS in the case of HUMPHREYS by both argument and authority. The question in BREWSTER'S case has not been distinctly adjudged by the Commission, but it is not likely to give any trouble.

There was also submitted to the Commission yesterday a batch of objections proposed by Representative Gibson, of Louisiana, and Senator Saulsbury. But they do not amount to anything. They start off with the familiar dogma that Louisiana has "not a republican form of Government," a proposition about as pertinent to the question before the Commission as a statement that the "Miltonian hypothesis" of creation is erroneous. They cite various instances of alleged ineligibility of Electors under State laws, which also, of course, the Commission has nothing to do with.

On the other hand, Mr. HOWE, of Wisconsin, for the Republicans, objected to the Tilden Electors, that there was no evidence that they had been appointed, and none that MCENERY, who certified to their appointment, was Governor, which covers the whole case. We venture the prediction that the argument in the Louisiana case will be more obstinate than important, and that unless "MATT" CARPENTER manages to infuse into it some of the vivacity for which he was noted in the Senate, it will be rather tedious. We have no misgivings as to the result.

DEBTORS DICTATING TERMS.

The tone assumed by the advocates of the Union and Central Pacific Railroads, in the controversy with Congress and the Treasury, is a very good imitation of the tone adopted by the agents of Mr. TILDEN in his contest for the Presidency. "Let us have our own way," say the Democrats, "and there will be no further trouble. Let the Electoral Commission decide every disputed vote in our favor, and we shall extol its wisdom and impartiality. Let it decide against us, and we shall denounce the Commission as a fraud and the Judges concerned in it as unfit for their judicial positions." Substitute the Senate for the Commission, the united Pacific railroads for the Democracy, and Messrs. C. P. HUNTINGTON & CO. for Mr. TILDEN and his agents, and we have in this sentence a specimen of the style of argument which is relied upon to influence the action of Congress on the question of the companies' indebtedness. The letter we print in another column adheres to this method of influencing public opinion in their behalf. The substance of the writer's statement is this: The Supreme Court having decided that, by the terms of the existing law, the companies are not bound to make any payment to the Government on account of the principal or interest of the bonds it issued to aid the construction of the roads prior to the maturity of the bonds, the companies are under no obligation to accept any modification of the contract which is not convenient to them. They are desirous, however—so the plea runs—to terminate a harassing contest, and they accordingly submit certain propositions. True, these propositions fall far short of the equities of the case as determined by the House last session, and as sustained by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate; but unless Congress allows the companies to dictate the mode of discharging their indebtedness to the Government, they will resist in the law courts any measure which may be enacted. "You had better, therefore, acquiesce in our view," remarks the person put forward to state the companies' case, "or there will be endless litigation, and we shall pay only when and how we please." There is nothing like a frank declaration of this sort for enabling the country to appreciate the moral weakness of the companies' position.

The question is confessedly beset with many difficulties. Whether the companies are correctly advised as to the alleged constitutional inability of Congress to amend provisions of the original acts, or whether, as the Senate Judiciary Committee maintain, the reserved right to amend which the original acts assert covers the right to do what may be necessary for the protection of public interests, as between the Government and the roads, is a matter which the Supreme Court should be left to decide. The members of the Judiciary Committee are, to say the least, quite as likely to be right as the lawyers retained by the companies, and certainly their conclusions are fortified by the ordinary considerations of justice. They have not, however, pushed to an extreme the claim of the Government to protection. A rapidly accumulating debt which, in less than twenty years—when the whole, principal and interest, matures—will amount to $150,000,000, makes some new arrangement necessary. To leave the matter open, in its present shape, would be to insure the transfer of the roads to the Government in 1895, when their indebtedness will so far exceed their ability to pay that all securities after the second mortgage, which is held by the Government, and all the stock of both companies, will be worthless. On the other hand, it is clearly inexpedient to impose upon the roads conditions too onerous to be borne. Common sense suggests a compromise, and this is what the Judiciary Committee's bill really amounts to. It provides that the annual payment to be fixed, together with the half of the earnings for Government transportation, and the five per cent. of the net earnings, shall not, all told, exceed twenty-five per cent. of each company's net earnings. The counter-proposition of the companies, and which at the time received the sanction of the Senate Railroad Committee, was so grossly inadequate that it could not be regarded as a practical approach to any agreement. Its main feature was the sale to the Government of many millions of acres of the land which the Government, in its liberality, had granted to the companies; the cash payments to be made in addition being less than half the amounts fixed by the Lawrence bill, which the House passed last Summer, and which was in all respects moderate and fair.

As the companies are, on their own showing, sufficiently prosperous to pay good dividends on their stock, there can be no pretense of inability to meet the demands even of Mr. THURMAN'S bill. The dividends would be less, of course, but the intrinsic value of the stock would grow with the provision for discharging a debt that will otherwise extinguish the stock. The alternative the stock-holders have to consider is, a temporary sacrifice of profit or an ultimate forfeiture of principal. There might be less difficulty in coming to an understanding upon this point if the controversy were not complicated with a question which goes to the bottom of the companies' business. They are compelled by the law as it stands, to pay into the Federal Treasury five per cent. of their net earnings. The Lawrence bill retains this feature. So does the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. The latter bill, moreover, uses the phrase "net earnings" as the measure of the maximum which the companies shall be required to pay. What, then, are net earnings? The Judiciary Committee hold that they are the sum remaining out of gross earnings after the operating expenses have been paid. The companies, on the contrary, contend that the net earnings are only so much of the total receipts as may be left after meeting running expenses, and also after payment of interest on bonded debt, on improvements, and under various other heads, all indicating an enhancement of the value of the property, and consequently of the stock. The question is pending in a suit in California, and will probably in the end reach the Supreme Court. On its face, however, the position assumed by the Judiciary Committee would seem to be the equitable one. So far as the stockholders are concerned, the sum available for a dividend is the sum left after payment of all current liabilities, including the five per cent. due the Government. And the five per cent. should be taken off the total net earnings, which, according to all business analogies, are simply the difference between the gross income and the outlay required for maintaining and running the road.

The companies will commit a mistake, we think, if they adhere to their policy of dogged resistance to the demands for an effective settlement, and a dogged refusal to accede to any terms not made—as in the case of the Gordon bill—notoriously in their interest. The country has no disposition to force upon them conditions needlessly harsh, or that would impair the working of the roads. But it is growing weary of the studied attempts of the companies to frustrate legislation which aims simply to compel them to do something toward the payment of their honest debts. The longer the delay, the less will be their chance of obtaining easier terms.

THE FOREIGN TRADE OF NEW-YORK.

The vexed question of the relative standing of New-York with reference to the foreign trade of the country is one which, like most other vexed questions, has two sides to it, and which the advocates of either extreme view can very easily misrepresent. On the one hand, there is no doubt that the Cities of Philadelphia and Baltimore not only do a good deal more foreign trade than they used to do, but that they do a considerable amount which New-York might reasonably have expected to do. On the other hand, there is no need to suppose that New-York has lost all that Baltimore and Philadelphia have gained, or that what it has lost is beyond recovery. In this connection some statistics recently reproduced by the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce from the reports of the Washington bureau have been, it seems to us, misunderstood, mainly because they have been used in a fragmentary form, and not in comparison with the fuller statements from the same source covering longer periods of time.

The statistics referred to set forth in some detail the foreign trade of this City, and of all other ports in the country in certain leading articles for the year ending June 30, 1876. They also compare the increase or decrease of the foreign trade of New-York with that of all other ports from the year 1871 to 1876 inclusive. By these figures it appears that the total amount of foreign imports, less foreign exports, into New-York for 1875-6 was $297,844,589, (gold value,) while the amount for the entire country was $455,407,836. At the same time the domestic exports from New-York (mixed values, chiefly in paper,) were $294,705,902, against $655,463,969 for the entire country. By comparing these figures it will be seen that for the fiscal year 1876, New-York made 65 per cent. of the imports, 45 per cent. of the exports, and 54 per cent. of the foreign trade of the country.

Comparing decrease and increase only, we find that the foreign trade of the United States advanced from 1871 to 1873 inclusive, and declined for the three years next following. The advance was $349,002,332; the decline was more than one half of that amount, or $187,487,346. Of the advance, New-York contributed $234,121,582, or 67 per cent. Of the decline, New-York suffered $138,136,356, or 74 per cent. In other words, compared with the remainder of the country, New-York appears to lose more rapidly than she gained. The explanation of this is found in some of the more detailed statements.

Thus, we find that in 1871 New-York supplied all but a few hundred thousand of the total increase of foreign trade in the country. In 1872 she supplied a little more than one-half. In 1873 her share of the increase fell to 42 per cent. In 1874 the foreign trade fell away, and New-York lost almost exactly one-half of all that was lost. The next year she rallied somewhat, and lost only 40 per cent. But last year—that is the year ending with June last—she lost $93,054,516, while the remainder of the country gained $11,435,223. These figures are certainly not encouraging. They tend to show that New-York has a weaker hold on its trade than the remainder of the country; that it does not get as large a relative share of increase when trade is prosperous; that it loses more rapidly in times of depression; and that during the last year its loss has been made in the face of an actual gain by other cities.

But while these inferences are correct, so far as they relate to the tendency of the trade of New-York, a wider view shows that the City still occupies a position of scarcely varied importance in the commerce of the country, and that it has what may be called a solid capital of trade transacted, from which everything can be hoped in the future, if her commercial leaders are true to their own interests. During the last four years the percentage of the foreign trade of the country done by New-York has been as follows:

	1872-3. Per cent.	1873-4. Per cent.	1874-5. Per cent.	1875-6. Per cent.
Imports	64	66	66	65
Exports	48	48	51	45
Total	56	56	58	54

It will be seen by the above that New-York still holds more than one-half of the foreign trade of the country; that her imports are relatively larger than three years ago, and that her exports have fallen away but 3 per cent. of the entire exports of the country. This particular fact is of great interest, and deserves to be carefully examined; but it would be idle to reason, in the face of such figures, that New-York has lost and must lose her commercial supremacy. It is threatened, but it is for her merchants to say whether it shall be properly and fully defended or not.

In conclusion, we refer our readers to the following tables of the exports and imports of the four principal seaboard cities of the country for the past three years. The figures for 1875 cover the twelve months ending May 31, but are substantially of the same value, for comparison, as the others, which cover the respective fiscal years:

IMPORTS.

Baltimore	$22,163,866	$28,045,073	$29,122,540

It will be seen that all the cities have lost in imports, while all the cities, except New-York, have gained in exports, Philadelphia having gained the most, relatively. The statistics for the calendar year, which must soon be forthcoming, will, however, throw some light on the question whether the changes here shown are still going on, and at what rate.

A CASE OF MISTAKEN SYMPATHY.

A working men's organization in Philadelphia has committed the amazing folly of holding a mass-meeting to protest against the sentence of the convicted "Mollie Maguires" of Schuylkill County. The meeting was held last Sunday night, and is called by the local papers "a rousing affair." The proceedings, in order to give them the sanction of a large society, were held under the auspices of what is known as the Philadelphia Section of the Working Men's Party of the United States. Making all allowance for the unthinking ignorance of the speakers, it must be confessed that the spirit of the meeting was alarming. There was no pretense that the convicted men were innocent of the frightful crimes charged against them. The plea urged in palliation of their guilt was that they had been oppressed by a rich monopoly. One speaker said "the unfortunate men had been led into what they had done for the cause of the working men." That is to say, the murders were planned and committed in the interests of a class, and not for private revenge or gain. Another speaker said that "the people were fast drifting into a condition where revolution would be necessary to obtain and retain the people's rights, of which they were being defrauded by monopoly." The condition of the working men was described as being one of "frightful feudalism," and that of the miners as slavery. The resolutions which were adopted, besides demanding commutation of punishment for the convicted murderers, denounced the privileges of "capitalistic classes as the primary and ultimate cause of the crimes which had been committed in Schuylkill County." It is a wonder that these men were willing to admit that the murders of mining bosses were crimes. Since these deeds were committed in the interests of working men, they ought to be chivalrous and honorable.

It should not be necessary to say a word to describe the enormity of the crimes which have been perpetrated in the Pennsylvania mining regions. Nor is there any doubt as to who were the criminals. The record in Schuylkill County for less than four years shows a total of fifty murders, to say nothing of innumerable murderous assaults. In most instances, the victims were men who had notoriously incurred the enmity of the Mollie Maguires. They were mining bosses, informers, or workmen who had taken contracts outside of the pale of the secret organization known as Mollies. The tales of the machinations of the carbonari of Southern Europe are not more revolting than the disclosures made at some of the trials in Schuylkill County. Frequently, when prisoners at the bar have seen their own conviction becoming certain, they have made confession. KERRIGAN, on trial for the murder of Policeman YOST, was one of those whose revelations showed the wickedness of the great conspiracy. MCPARLAN, the detective, who played the part of a desperate adventurer, and consorted for months with the Mollies, unraveled a chain of evidence which was as damning as it was conclusive. And KELLY, another witness familiar with the inside operations of the gang, has just divulged a similar story of murder in the trial now in progress at Bloomsburg, Penn. The secrecy of the movements of the oath-bound ruffians and the unanimity with which they usually stand by each other in their crimes, have made convictions difficult. Nevertheless, several of these murderers have been found guilty on evidence which cannot be disturbed.

The fact that the organization which is variously known as the Mollie Maguires, or the Ancient Order of Hibernians, is a widely-ramifying conspiracy has been the cause of its great strength. So many murders were committed, and so many persons were implicated, that the members of the order seemed to think their arrest, conviction, and execution a physical and moral impossibility. One of the imprisoned Mollies was heard consoling his accomplice in the next cell with the remark that it would not be fair to hang two or three men and let the rest get off; and that, if all were to be hanged, it would be too outrageous for the community to endure. Gradually, too, these monsters have so accustomed themselves to the shedding of blood that men and women alike regard their "enemies" as fair game. They have no more compunction at perpetrating murder than if the deed were a trivial proceeding for their own convenience. One of these ruffians, when remonstrated with for being party to the killing of an obnoxious workman, replied, with naïveté, "Sure, wasn't he warned?" as though that justified the subsequent proceedings.

It is a frightful error for honest and law-abiding working men in any part of the country to profess sympathy with the convicted murderers of Schuylkill. That they have been thus convicted in communities where the weight of public opinion was made by their accomplices and sympathizers is conclusive of their guilt. In a county where bloodshed has been common, it is now proclaimed that the guilty men should be spared. They spared nobody. The gang which these brutal ruffians represent spared nobody. If a mining boss or a casual laborer incurred their displeasure, he was executed with the coolness and deliberation of a judicial proceeding. Perhaps the hanging of a few of these monsters will have no deterring effect upon their surviving comrades. Certainly, nothing short of this will terrify them.

INEXPENSIVE GIRLS.

Every intelligent man knows that what is popularly called "perpetual motion" is an impossibility; nevertheless, the constant idiot who believes that he can make an engine which will furnish its own motive power never loses faith in perpetual motion. He goes on, from year to year, spending his money in cog-wheels and other vain machinery, and dies in the full conviction that if he could have lived a fortnight longer he would have proved the practicability of perpetual motion.

Closely analogous to this curious delusion is the theory that it is possible to construct a girl who shall live without food. As science has conclusively shown, the mysterious object commonly known as the human girl is merely an engine which consumes caramels and other miscellaneous fuel, and which is built of weak materials, which cannot last much longer than seventy years. To invent a girl that will furnish her own motive power and will consume no fuel whatever is as impossible as to invent any other variety of perpetual-motion machine. And yet ignorant persons are constantly engaged in this hopeless task, and about once in every year we are told that the desired girl has been successfully constructed and is in full operation. The latest announcement of the kind comes from the town of Galesburg, Ill., which boasts the possession of a girl who has eaten nothing since last July, but who has nevertheless been in constant motion ever since that date.

There is no doubt that, were it possible to manufacture girls who could live without food, they would speedily supersede the kind of girl now in use. At present girls are undeniably dear. The first cost of a well-built girl is not very great, but the necessity of supplying her with food three times a day entails a constant outlay of money. There is no economy in feeding her with an inferior quality of food, or in diminishing the amount which she is calculated to consume. Scientific persons have ascertained the precise number of "units of work" that are contained in a single pound of pure caramels, and if a girl is constructed so as to perform a certain amount of flirtation, piano-playing, and novel-reading upon one pound of caramels, she can do only half as much work upon half a pound. The worst of it is, the girl requires to be regularly supplied with food and to have her steam constantly kept up, so to speak, no matter whether there is any demand for her services or not. In this respect she is decidedly inferior to the ordinary steam-engine, the fires of which may be banked or even entirely extinguished when the engine is not in use. No such expedient can be adopted in the case of a girl, for as soon as she is deprived of food her machinery falls to pieces, and she becomes entirely valueless. It is true that occasionally she may be sold for a trifling sum to the junk department of some medical college, but the demand for scrap-girls is usually very limited.

There would obviously be a great saving effected if this daily consumption of fuel could be avoided. If, during Lent, for example, girls could have their fires banked, and their machinery could remain inactive until they should be needed to set society once more in motion, the saving thereby effected would be enormous. Every scientific person, however, knows that this is impossible so long as the law of nature, which strictly prohibits the production of effects without adequate causes, remains in force. When, therefore, the inventor of the Galesburg girl grimly asserts she has used no food for six consecutive months, and is, nevertheless, in good running order, we know that he is an impostor. It is admitted that the girl does not develop as much power as an ordinary girl of the same dimensions would develop. She walks slowly, and a local young man who has experimented with her asserts that she swings on the front gate in a feeble and listless manner, and that her stroke, when engaged in croquet, is weaker than that of the average theological student. Still, the fact that she is capable of any work whatever proves that she consumes food. The quantity may be, and probably is, smaller than that used by other girls, but that she is regularly supplied with food is an absolute certainty.

The inventor claims that the girl consumes her own adipose tissue by some mysterious system of absorption, and that as fast as it is consumed it reappears in its original shape. Were any one to assert that the smoke and gases arising from the coal consumed by a Cunarder could be collected and solidified into precisely the original quantity of coal, and that this could be again used as fuel, he would be instantly advised to go West and edit the Louisville Courier-Journal. Yet there are persons not entirely devoid of intelligence who really believe that the Galesburg girl constantly accomplishes quite as impossible a feat. When it is remembered that they believe this solely upon the bare word of her inventor, we can hardly wonder that purchasers have been found for the stock of the Keely Motor Company.

There is a very simple way of exposing the false claims made for this Galesburg girl. Let her inventor allow her to be thoroughly searched for concealed sausage and other condensed food, and then let her be confined for a week in a cell where no food can be secretly brought to her. Before that time has expired the girl will either beg for food or her machinery will have ceased to act. Of course, the inventor will not consent to do this, since it is much more profitable for him to exhibit his girl at popular prices, but his unwillingness to allow her to be thoroughly tested will be a sufficient proof that he is imposing upon the Galesburg public and raising false hopes among unscientific fathers who are dissatisfied with the annual cost of operating girls of the usual pattern.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD DEBATE

The discussion now progressing in the Senate over the Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund turns upon the question as to which of the two bills reported—one by the Judiciary and the other by the Railway Committee—is, on the whole, the best adjustment for the Government and the Treasury. They differ in principle as well as in details. That of the Judiciary Committee is drawn on the theory of compulsion and legal enforcement of the harshest policy against the railroad companies; that of the Railway Committee treats the subject as a dispute between two business concerns not necessarily hostile. The one points to a long litigation, the other to a definite and final settlement of all disputes in regard to these bonds. It is, therefore, a choice of methods of procedure.

It is characteristic of the bias which training gives to men's minds to find the lawyers (or rather a part of them) on the Judiciary Committee inclining toward and recommending a plan for enforcing assumed legal rights; and that the business men of the Railway Committee (which, however, contains good lawyers also) should, with great unanimity, incline to a practical, counting-house plan of adjustment as the best for both parties. To the average lawyer the prospect of a law suit, with its successive appeals and delays, which strikes terror to the heart of all but angry laymen, is a matter of course; it is in the line of his profession. But to the average business man, with his off-hand methods of settling things as they arise, a protracted litigation is regarded as about the worst possible conclusion. It means, in most cases, not only a possible loss of the case itself, but also a certain loss of time, money, and labor. In short, as a mode of recovery of bad or doubtful debts, or for anticipating debts not yet due and ill-secured, it is equivalent to throwing away good money after bad. Too often the winner of the suit is a loser by it.

The Judiciary bill attempts to define "net earnings" as the gross receipts, less only the expense of operation, allowing no deduction for interest payments, taxes, renewals, &c. It then requires 25 per cent. of the net earnings, so ascertained, to be paid into a sinking fund to cancel the United States bonds at maturity, together with the whole of the transportation bills for Government freights, &c. It further declares this claim, so set up, a lien on the property of the company ahead of the later issues of bonds, floating debt, and capital stock. It is contended by its friends that Congress has reserved the power to change the contract in these particulars, and to this extent.

This position is resisted by other Senators on the ground that the power to alter or amend the original acts was expressly limited to certain purposes, for the completion of the road, and keeping it in repair; and that, at any rate, the vested rights of the companies are saved in the same clause. Senators Conkling, Mitchell, Boutwell, Hitchcock, West, and Logan, attack the compulsory bill as unconstitutional in this respect, as it violates the contract with these parties, and breaks the public faith to no good purpose, and describe it as "a legislative blunder," because all that it seeks to obtain by coercion and costly collision in the courts, can be had without it, by the peaceful and arbitrative measure introduced by Senator Gordon as a compromise.

The Railway Committee have had this dispute before them for two years, and last session adopted a plan for the creation of a sinking fund, and for taking the unsold land of the company as security for the debt. Meanwhile the House has passed a bill similar to that now pending. The Gordon bill, as amended by the Railway Committee, deems it wise not to enter upon any such mode of settlement as percentages of net earnings—wherein the Government would always be at a disadvantage—but to adopt, instead, a specific sum adapted to the probable ability of the companies to meet, and which will cancel the debt within a reasonable time, the equities on both sides being duly regarded.

The Substitute bill goes upon this principle, and requires a sinking fund of a million at the start from each of the two solvent companies, (all the rest are either insolvent or without any net earnings to divide) and at least $750,000 annually, which will overtake and extinguish the subsidy bonds and interest thereon by 1912. It should be remembered that the United States bonds do not mature till 1895-1900, and that by the decision of the Supreme Court the companies are not liable to pay them till then. The Government is not, therefore, entitled to any interest upon interest, compounding; but if the companies pay in advance they are entitled to interest on their money. The mistake commonly made, and into which even Senator Wallace fell in his remarks, consists in treating the delivery of the subsidy bonds as so much money paid out of the Treasury, instead of promissory obligations, and concluding therefrom that the Government is entitled to interest upon what it owes. The Government had not the money, hence it borrowed it and pays interest. The bonds not having been paid yet, the companies only owe it in the sense that they are liable to pay it when it is due, some 20 odd years hence. This is a matter which accountants and bankers understand perfectly well; and if Congress, instead of exploring the books for precedents, upon what must be confessedly as an unprecedented operation, the proper organ of the Government, were to leave it to some such body as the Arbitration Committee of our Chamber of Commerce, there would be no difficulty in reaching a satisfactory decision by which both sides could abide.

In the absence of any such body the Railway Committee has perfected a short, simple bill, after a full examination into its merits. Of course, these powerful railroad companies will resist anything like harsh or compulsory measures. They are advised by the ablest legal talent in the country as to their rights under their contract with the Government; and the result of the litigation up to this time shows how much better they have been served than the nation has by its legal counsel. There is no rational doubt as to the fate of the Judiciary bill if it goes before the Supreme Court. On the ground that if this Congress can take 25 per cent of their revenues, the next one may take 50 per cent., the companies will be bound to have their rights determined by the tribunal charged with that function by the Constitution. The Judiciary bill, if it were passed, settles nothing. It only invites these companies into court, and tempts them to besiege future Congresses to repeal it. Whoever wants to see the legislation of the country exempted from these influences, and at the same time see this second-mortgage debt, of doubtful collectability, paid, should desire to see the Substitute bill prevail. The Government and the companies can accept that, and that is an end of these conflicting contentions. C.

THE NEW-JERSEY CONTROLLERSHIP.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Feb. 12.—Both parties caucused this evening to prepare for the joint meeting to-morrow. The Republicans made no nomination, but will reconvene in the morning. In the Democratic caucus, on the first ballot, William P. McMichael, for State Controller, received 21 votes, being a majority, but before the result had been announced, Paxton, of Hudson, went over to Robert Stockton, who was declared the nominee of the caucus. An effort was made to make the nomination unanimous, but this was stoutly resisted by McMichael's friends, and it failed. There is serious talk of a bolt, and one prominent Democrat is offering to bet $1,000 that Stockton will not be elected to-morrow.

WASHINGTON.

CONGRESS BEHIND IN ITS WORK.

A BILL ADOPTED IN THE HOUSE REMOVING THE BARRIER TO LEGISLATION CAUSED BY THE ELECTORAL COUNT—ONLY ONE OF THE APPROPRIATION BILLS THUS FAR PASSED—THE TEXAS PACIFIC SUBSIDY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—Since the first day the two houses met in joint convention to count the Electoral vote, a technical barrier has precluded all legislative acts except action upon the Appropriation bills, and such business as might be transacted by unanimous consent. The Electoral Commission act prevents an adjournment pending the counting of the vote, and each house has been required to take a daily recess until 10 o'clock the following day. By a sort of legislative fiction the sessions of Congress since Feb. 1 are regarded as a continuation of the session of Thursday, Feb. 1, and the records of both houses show that everything done since was done as of that date. The result has been a kind of legislative deadlock, from which there was no relief except by legislation. To-day the House Committee on Rules reported an amendment to the rules, providing that pending the Electoral count and while the House is not engaged in that business the regular legislation may proceed each calendar day the same as if an adjournment had taken place, this rule not to interfere in any way with the progress of the Electoral count or the consideration of the decisions of the Electoral Commission when presented to the Joint Convention. The new rule was adopted. The necessity for this relief was imperative. There are now only 17 legislative days remaining to the present Congress, and the calendars of both Houses are crowded with business, some of it quite important in character. Of the 12 regular appropriation bills only one has been enacted and much of the time yet remaining to the session will be required to complete these. On the private calendar of the House there are 240 bills, and on the public calendar, 60. In addition, there are 30 bills set aside as special orders. Considering the time that must necessarily be occupied with the Electoral count and the consideration of the regular appropriation bills, it is plain that very little pending legislation of a general character will be passed upon at this session. There is one unfortunate feature of the affairs and that is, the opportunity it affords to the Texas Pacific Railroad people to get a vote upon their subsidy bill. It is also likely that the railroad influence was more pressing than the demands of public business for the adoption of the rule. Because of the false economy of the Democratic House the appropriation for the printing has been completely exhausted for several days, and there is now a halt in the consideration of the appropriation bills because they cannot be printed for the Senate. Representative Holman, of Indiana, the Chairman of the Appropriation Committee, is temporarily unfitted for work, and it is impossible to get the Conference Committee together to adjust the difference between the two houses in the Deficiency bill for the public printing.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

A PROPOSAL TO CARRY THE CHINESE MAILS FOR THE POSTAGE AS COMPENSATION—CALL FOR THE REDEMPTION OF 5-20 BONDS—PRESIDENT GRANT PREPARING TO VACATE THE WHITE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—A member of the House Committee on Appropriations said to-day that the committee has before them a proposition from the Occidental and Oriental Steamship Company to carry the mails between San Francisco, Japan, and China for the postage only as compensation. There is an amendment to the Post Office Appropriation bill before the Senate, reported by Senator Hamlin, to renew the contract for monthly service with the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, and appropriating $500,000 for that service; but this amendment cannot, it is said by members, be passed by Congress, as it is viewed in the light of a subsidy. The probability is that nothing will be done on this subject, as the Postmaster General, under the present laws, is authorized to contract for ocean mail service, giving the postage only as compensation.

The Acting Secretary of the Treasury to-day issued the thirty-ninth call for the redemption of 5.20 bonds of 1865, May and November. The call is for $10,000,000, of which $7,000,000 are coupon and $3,000,000 registered bonds. The principal and interest will be paid at the Treasury on and after the 12th day of May next, and the interest will cease on that day. Following are descriptions of the bonds: Coupon Bonds—$500, Nos. 31,501 to 35,800, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 70,551 to 79,000. Registered Bonds—$50, Nos. 401 to 450, both inclusive; $100, Nos. 5301 to 5,950; $500, Nos. 3,601 to 3,800; $1,000, 13,351 to 14,300; $5,000, Nos. 5,101 to 5,350; $10,000, Nos. 9,301 to 9,750.

The requisition of the War Department in favor of Capt. Eads for half a million dollars worth of bonds, on account of his work in the Mississippi River, has been honored at the Treasury Department.

A statement having been published that the late parade of the Knights of Momus in New-Orleans was a gross travestie of the President, his Cabinet, and other prominent Republican officers, Gov. Nicholls telegraphed Col. Burke to-day as follows: "The sentiment of the whole community is opposed to what appeared at the celebration on Thursday last. It was the act of a few private individuals, entirely unauthorized and unknown, and universally condemned and regretted."

Dr. Pope this evening reports that Secretary Morrill is steadily though slowly improving.

Until further notice the President will not receive visitors on business after 12 o'clock, as he is busily engaged in packing up his papers, &c., preparatory to vacating the White House.

The Board of Engineers appointed to examine into the stability of the foundation of the Washington Monument has decided, it is understood, to suggest to Congress the advisability of tearing down the present neglected structure and the removal of the stones to the circle at the intersection of Massachusetts avenue and Fourteenth street, where they could be used as a base for a granite shaft of imposing height and design. The site selected is the most elevated point in the District, and is surrounded by some of the finest dwellings. This action on the part of the engineers is believed to be instigated by the fact that in boring to ascertain the stability of the foundation of the monument they discovered that there is not firmness enough in the soil to bear the increased weight of the addition proposed to be put upon the shaft.

A petition, signed by 275 influential citizens of New-York, was presented to the President to-day by Jared Sanford, of New-York City, asking that W. H. H. Ely, of Tarrytown, who is confined in the Kings County Penitentiary for aiding and abetting in naturalization frauds which were practiced at Tarrytown during the late election, be pardoned. Letters favoring the petition from numerous officials of Westchester County were also presented.

Lieut. Emory H. Launt is ordered to the Portsmouth Navy-yard. Ensign George E. Hutter is ordered to the Ranger. Lieut. George C. Clay is detached from the Colorado and ordered to the Brooklyn Navy-yard. Lieut. R. E. Carmody is detached from the Brooklyn Navy-yard and ordered to the Colorado. Chaplain George Crawford is detached from the receiving-ship Wabash and ordered to the Boston Navy-yard.

A dispatch from the United States Consul General at Berlin contains information that the cattle disease commonly known as the Rinderpest has made its appearance in different parts of Germany, and is rapidly spreading and increasing throughout the country. Consequently the Treasury Department prohibits the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle into the United States from Germany until further orders.

The President sent the following nominations to the Senate to-day: Richard A. Watts, to be United States Attorney for Wyoming Territory; John B. Keeter, to be a Paymaster in the Army with the rank of Major. Postmasters—Henry Little at Auburn, Me.; Robert F. Milliner, Newnan, Ga.; M. A. Breeden, Santa Fé, New-Mexico.

Currency, $11,802,153; special deposits of legal-tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $35,985,000; coin, (including coin certificates, $54,718,300,) $88,618,227; outstanding legal-tenders, $356,984,812.

The receipts from Internal Revenue to-day were $550,902 17, and from Customs, $433,566 33.

THE FAMOUS MADDOX'S CHARACTER

MORE WITNESSES WHO WILL TESTIFY REGARDING HIS FRAUDULENT TRANSACTIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 12.—Gen. Charles C. Edgerton, Deputy Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, arrived here this morning and summoned Robert Goldsborough Keen, William A. Fisher, Enoch Pratt, Col. Charles Marshall, and W. H. Allen. These gentlemen left for Washington to-day, and will appear to-morrow before the House Committee on Powers and Privileges and testify in regard to the character of Maddox. It has been ascertained that the gentlemen named are cognizant of frauds perpetrated by Maddox in the issue of bogus stocks of the Parkersburg branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. Other prominent Baltimore Democratic politicians, who know more about "the ways that are dark" than they care to divulge, will at once be called upon to visit Washington.

AMUSEMENTS.

"WILD OATS" AT WALACK'S.

O'Keefe's comedy of "Wild Oats" was a favorite with audiences in very old times, and it still keeps its hold upon the stage—by virtue of its incidental vindication of the player's art, and its satire of hypocrisy, not to speak of its two or three amusing passages of equivoque and its well-contrasted group of characters. This piece was played in a remarkably spirited manner last night, at Wallack's, and was received with the heartiest approbation by a crowd that filled the theatre. Mr. Wallack rattled through Rover with nimble grace, and gave the quotations after the manner of Charles Kean, and was very happy in burlesque of stage mannerism. He had two recalls upon the scene. Mr. John Gilbert, as Sir George Thunder, gave a taste of his best quality in the choleric scene, and was recalled with quite an affectionate enthusiasm. Mr. E. M. Holland made a neat little hit, as Sim. Mr. Arnott and Mr. Beckett were notably good as John Davy and Ephraim Smooth. The reception accorded to "Wild Oats" justifies anticipation that it will have at least a week of success.

LOCAL MENTION.

A concert complimentary to Mr. S. Lasar will take place at the Strong Place Baptist Church, in Brooklyn. Rossini's "Stabat Mater" is to be sung.

Mr. Daly's adaptation of "Monsieur Alphonse" is the current attraction at the Grand Opera-house. Next week, "The Two Orphans" will be acted there.

Mme. Annette Essipoff will give the first concert of her second series of performances at Steinway Hall, this evening. She will have the co-operation, as heretofore, of M. Vivien and of Mlle. Paima.

"Cymbeline" was acted at the Walnut Street Theatre in Philadelphia last night for the first time (except on one benefit night) since the days of Ellen Tree. The scenery was very fine and the stage attire unusually elegant. Miss Neilson's creation of Cymbeline was poetical and touching in no ordinary degree. The representation bore the character of a great Shakespearean revival, and was witnessed by a thronged house. The applause was frequent.

Mr. Daly's "local folly," entitled "Round the Clock," was produced at the Olympic Theatre yesterday evening. This well-remembered panorama of scenes of life in New-York is exhibited under very favorable circumstances at the Olympic, the distribution of rôles calling into requisition the services of Messrs. Owen Fawcett, Lamb, Leclercq, Davidge, and Barrymore, and those of Misses Drew and Mary Wells, and the stage attire of the work leaving nothing to be wished for.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Straus and Métra each receive $2,800 for conducting the four masked balls at the Paris Opera.

Götz's unfinished opera is to be completed by Herr Frank, of Mannheim, and revised by Herr Brahms.

Herr Strauss' buffo-opera, "Prince Methusalem," has met with a cordial reception in Vienna, and will probably become popular.

The production, at the Brussels Monnaie of "Aida," with the French book of MM. du Locle and Nuitter has been entirely successful.

It is announced in Paris that M. Gounod has sold the French publishing right of "Cinque Mars" to the house of Grus for the large price of £5,000.

A critical journal, entitled the Theatre, is to be produced in London at once. Mr. Oxenford, formerly of the Times, is to be one of the contributors.

A comedy by Mr. W. S. Gilbert, entitled "On Bail," was announced for production at the Criterion Theatre, in London, on the 3d of February.

Mr. Irving is acting in "Richard III.," the version of the tragedy being partially freed from Colley Cibber's interpolations, at the Lyceum Theatre in London.

M. Sardou's comedy of "Fernande" has been revived at the Paris Gymnase, with Mlle. Legault as the heroine, a part in which she is not seen to the highest advantage.

M. Humbert's latest production, "Jeanne, Jeanette, et Jeanneton," has proved as successful as it has already done in Paris. The opperetta has also been produced at St. Petersburg.

Two important sales by auction will take place in London, this month, namely, those of Her Majesty's Theatre and the Alexandra Palace, in the late of both of which the musical circles are much interested.

The subventions granted for 1877 to some of the Paris theatres are, Grand Opéra, 800,000 francs; Comédie Française, 240,000 francs; Opéra Comique, 140,000 francs; Lyrique, 100,000 francs; Odéon, 60,000 francs.

M. Baudmann, a German actor, who has achieved a certain celebrity by playing, in English, Shakespeare's characters at London and in the provinces, is now obtaining great applause at the Theatre Royal, Berlin, by personating Othello, Hamlet, King Lear, &c., in German.

Mr. Frederick Sullivan, whose funeral took place a fortnight ago in London, was a brother of the composer, and, although he had practiced as an architect, took to the lyric stage, having a bass voice. He distinguished himself in the part of the Judge in the comic operetta, "Trial by Jury," by Messrs. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan.

The death is announced at Florence at the age of 86 of Pietro Romani, the celebrated composer, vocalist, and singing-master. The Italian papers say that Romani, who was an intimate friend of Rossini, really composed Bartolo's air in "Il Barbiere," and also orchestrated several of Rossini's operas, but this statement must be accepted with a very large grain of salt indeed.

The inauguration of the monument to Auber, the composer, was to take place on Jan. 27 in Paris, at Père la Chaise Cemetery. In the evening there were to be performances of his works at the National Grand Opera-house and at the Opéra Comique, (Salle Favart;) at the latter the début of Mlle. Fecter, daughter of the French actor, in the "Maçon" was to take place.

The anniversary of Molière's birth was, as usual, signalized at the Paris Francais and the Odéon by the production of apropos sketches. At the former house the novelty is entitled "Le Magister," and at the latter, "Le Barbier de Pesenas." Both pieces are in verse, and in both Molière is introduced. At the Français, he is presented by M. Coquelin, at the Odéon, by M. Porel.

Herr von Suppé, the composer of "Fatinitza" and various similar works—extremely popular in Austria and Germany—is not, as people generally suppose, a native of Vienna. He was born at Cremona, in Italy. Before adopting the musical profession, he studied first philosophy, and then jurisprudence, at Bologna, in order to qualify himself for a post in the public civil service, but the love of music predominated, and brought him to the Austrian capital, where he has for years officiated as conductor at the Karl Theatre.

MRS. SPARR'S LODGER.

NEW WAY OF ADVERTISING ROOMS.

THE SINGULAR SPECTACLE ON SUNDAY—MAJOR CORLISS GIVES AN EXHIBITION OF PICTURES BY DAY, AND AN ILLUMINATION AT NIGHT—A DISTRESSED LANDLADY, AND A PUZZLED POLICE FORCE—STRANGE INFATUATION OF THE DAUGHTER OF A BROOKLYN CLERGYMAN—IMPRISONMENT OF THE PRINCIPAL ACTOR.

In THE TIMES of yesterday there appeared a report of a singular disturbance that occurred on the preceding day and evening in the house No. 189 Second avenue, occupied by Mrs. Mary Sparr, a widow. About 10 o'clock on Sunday morning Major G. W. Corliss, who occupied two rooms on the third floor of the house in question, exhibited a number of placards in his windows, bearing the words "Rooms to Let" in large letters, some of the placards being fastened to large pictures in gilt frames which he had taken from the walls of his room. After dark he changed his programme, and illuminated the windows by placing a number of candles in them. This, of course, caused a large crowd to assemble in front of the house, and at one time so many persons had assembled that the passage of the street cars was obstructed. The Police were called upon by Mrs. Sparr, and an officer was sent to the house. Upon rapping at the door of the Major's room, he refused to open it, and finally fired a pistol-shot through the door, the ball passing within an inch or two of the officer's breast. Capt. McCullagh, of the Seventeenth Precinct, was then informed of what had taken place, and went to the house. He also spoke with the Major, and endeavored to induce him to open the door. He persisted in his refusal, and swore that he would shoot the first man who came in, should the door be broken open. Capt. McCullagh, thinking that he had to deal with a madman, decided that it would be better to proceed cautiously, and avoid bloodshed, and to that end withdrew his men from the door, telling them to arrest the man so soon as he should leave his room. The officers remained on guard until 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning, and when Major Corliss was in the act of leaving the house arrested him. Upon being searched at the Seventeenth Precinct Station-house a small four-barreled revolver was found upon his person. Officers were then sent to search his rooms, and there a large navy-size seven-barreled revolver was found, with five of the chambers loaded with ball cartridge. Upon comparing the size of the hole in the door of the room with the diameter of the hole of this pistol, it was evident that the shot which had passed so near the officer had been fired from it. From the Station-house Major Corliss was taken to the Essex Market Police Court, before Justice Wandell, where Mrs. Sparr appeared against him. After hearing the case the Justice fined the prisoner $10, and held him to bail in the sum of $1,000 to keep the peace for one year.

In order to learn all the facts in the case, a TIMES reporter called on Mrs. Sparr at her residence yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Sparr, who appears to be a very respectable lady, was still suffering from the agitation caused by the events of the day before, and her appearance in the Police Court as a complainant. She said that she would prefer to say nothing about the trouble she had with Major Corliss, but under the circumstances, she had come to the conclusion that it would, perhaps, be better to make a full statement of all that had occurred, in order that her actions might not be misconstrued. On Jan. 24 Major Corliss had come to her house and had engaged two furnished rooms on the third floor at the rate of $30 per month, and had paid her that sum in advance. He represented himself as being a literary man, connected with the Insurance Critic, a journal published in Chicago, and said that he hoped there would be no objection made to his sister calling on him. He also said that he would be called upon occasionally by ladies whom he employed to do literary work for him. To all of this she consented, and he then remarked that his sister would probably come to his rooms on the next day "to strew Autumn leaves." On the following afternoon a young lady rang the front door bell and asked for Major Corliss. Upon being told that he was out, she said that she was his sister and would go to his rooms and wait for him. Mrs. Sparr said that if she was his sister there was no objection to her doing so. The young lady was then shown to the Major's rooms, where she took off her wraps and made herself at home. The Major came in shortly after, and the two remained in his apartments until 6:30 o'clock, when they went out to dine, and shortly after returned, and stayed in his rooms until between 9 and 10 o'clock. On Sunday morning the young lady came again, and passed the whole day in the Major's rooms. On the next day (Monday) the Major asked to see her, (Mrs. Sparr,) and spoke to her about the smell from the kitchen which pervaded the house, saying that his lady friend objected to it. She thought it strange that he should speak of his sister in that way, and it aroused her suspicions that all was not right. She said nothing about that, however, but contented herself with saying that there was only one way to stop the smell, and that was by doing without eating, and she did not propose to do that. On that day and on Tuesday two other ladies called, and on Wednesday the young lady who had represented herself as being his sister came again. The Major was not in, and she proposed to go to his rooms and wait for him as before, but she was not permitted to so. She then went to the St. Denis Hotel, and telegraphed him as follows: "I am waiting for you.—Grace." In about half an hour the Major came in with the young lady, and, after leaving her in his rooms, asked to see Mrs. Sparr, and complained that his sister had been insulted. He said that she would grace any parlor to which Mrs. Sparr replied that she should not grace hers. He then asked her whether she had any man to back her, and told her that he would "fix" it. He took his hat and left. When the young lady left the house, Mrs. Sparr, determining to find out who she was, followed her, and learned that she was the daughter of a clergyman residing in Brooklyn. The next day, after consulting with a legal gentleman of her acquaintance, she decided that she would see the young lady's mother and tell her of what was going on. Upon arriving at the house she asked the lady to allow her a few moments private conversation, and was requested to walk into the back parlor. There she found the young lady who had been in the habit of calling on her daughter and whom she knew as Grace. Upon disclosing the object of her visit the mother was much affected, and told her that two years before she had insisted that Major Corliss should not visit her house. Her daughter had become infatuated with him, and would not believe any ill of him. She, [the mother,] however, had heard that he had a wife living in Fair Haven, Conn., and had gone there and had found a lady dying of grief who had told her that she was his wife. This lady had also told her that he had been trying to get a divorce from her. She then begged Mrs. Sparr to tell what she knew of Corliss, and said that if she would do anything to break the infatuation of the daugh er she would be extremely grateful. Mrs. Sparr then told of the frequent visits of ladies to Major Corliss, but the young lady refused to believe what she said, and stated that she was married to him. Mrs. Sparr, who had also ascertained something of the character of a woman whom Corliss was accustomed to visit in Eighteenth street, told the ladies what she had learned about her. She then took her leave, and returned to New-York.

A few days afterward the clergyman's wife called on Mrs. Sparr, with her daughter, and asked her to go with them to the house in Eighteenth street in order that the young lady might be assured of the truth of Mrs. Sparr's allegations. Mrs. Sparr then accompanied them to the house, where the landlady gave them conclusive evidence of the veracity of her statements. When Major Corliss learned of her visit to Brooklyn he was very much incensed, and again said that he would "fix" her. Among other things he was in the habit of letting the gas burn in his rooms until a very late hour, and sometimes all night. In order to save her gas she had four of the five burners in his room sealed up on Saturday last. He complained of this very bitterly, and told her to give him the money he had paid in advance and he would leave the house. This she refused to do, and he then went out and bought a lot of candles and placed them all around the room to the great danger of burning the house. On Sunday morning he pinned up the lace curtains, and just as the people were going to church hung her pictures out of the windows with placards on them announcing that the rooms were to let, and also displayed the tidies that were on the furniture and other things in the windows. Mrs. Sparr remonstrated with him, but he paid no attention to her, and kept up the display until 3:30 o'clock, when he went out. She then had the pictures taken in and the rooms put in order. At night he returned, accompanied by a lady, and having procured a large lot of candles made a regular illumination in his room. She again remonstrated with him and he renewed his threats of "fixing" her. She then applied to the Police for protection, and an officer was sent to the house. Upon being asked to open the door he refused, and upon the officer turning the knob, fired at him through the panel, the ball just grazing his breast. Capt. McCullagh afterward came to the house and endeavored to prevail upon him to open the door, but he still refused, and declared that he would kill the first man that entered his room. Capt. McCullagh then made a reconnoisance through the keyhole and saw the Major standing opposite the door with a cocked revolver in his hand. He then detailed two officers to remain in the house, with orders to arrest the Major as soon as he should attempt to go out. This was done, and he was taken to the station-house and afterward to the Essex Market Police Court, as has already been related.

Capt. McCullagh, of the Seventeenth Precinct, when called upon, corroborated Mrs. Sparr's statements in regard to the proceeding of the Major on Sunday, and said that he had never seen such conduct in a sober man in all his experience as an officer of the Police. He thought from his actions at the time that he was crazy, but after having seen him and conversed with him in the station-house and in the court, he had no reason to believe that he was.

Major Corliss, who up to a late hour had not been able to furnish bail, was found by a reporter of THE TIMES in the Essex Market Jail. He said that he had advertised for rooms as follows:

"WANTED—By a literary man, a second-story, well-furnished and heated room, with running water; absolute independence, without question; state terms."

In reply to this advertisement he had received a letter from Mrs. Sparr, telling him that she had rooms she thought would suit him. This letter was signed "Widow Lady," bearing at the bottom a postscript to this effect, "All the quietness you wish." He had gone there and taken the rooms and had told her that he would have to receive a number of ladies, as he had business to transact with them, and for that reason rented a parlor as well as a bed-room. She had agreed to the arrangement. She had, however, objected to their coming, and had followed several of them to their homes. A young lady whom he had represented as his sister, and who had come to see him quite often, was really not his sister, but his betrothed. For private reasons he could not visit her at her house, and she came to see him. Mrs. Sparr had followed this young lady to her mother's house, and had afterward called on her mother and made many false statements about himself. Finding that she had done this, he told her that she had done him an irreparable injury, and that he would make trouble for her. He did not mean that he would do her bodily harm, and she did not so understand him. He meant that he would seek legal redress. Annoyed at this interference with his private affairs, he offered to give up the rooms if she would return him the rent for the time still to be completed. She refused this, and he then informed her that he would advertise them, in order to try to get some one to take them off his hands. To this she made no objection, and he inserted the following in a morning journal:

"No. 189 SECOND AVENUE.—Furnished parlor and bed-room; thiru-story, front; heated; hot and cold water; rent very moderate to suitable parties; absolute independence without question."

Several persons called to see the rooms thus advertised, and she showed them in his absence, not knowing that he had advertised them. Besides interfering with his visitors Mrs. Sparr adopted other ways of annoying him, and on Saturday last she had caused four of the five gas-burners in his rooms to be sealed up. Under these circumstances he was compelled to use candles, and as he had no candlesticks he was obliged to place them around the room as he best could. On Sunday morning he thought that as his advertisement in the newspaper had not brought him any return, he would adopt another mode of letting the people know his rooms were for rent. Seeing some family pictures around the room, he thought it would be a good thing to exhibit them as an inducement to the passers by to take the rooms. He accordingly hung one of them out of the window and attached a card to it with a notice that the rooms were for rent. Other pictures he placed in the windows, and also displayed several tidies in a way he thought would attract attention. He then waited patiently until 3:30 in the afternoon to receive applicants for the rooms. None came, however, and he then went out to dinner. He returned a little before dark accompanied by a lady, and found that his advertisements had been taken down. At nightfall he tried to light the gas, but upon finding that it would not burn he went out and purchased some candles. Going back to his room he thought that it would be a good thing to continue his advertising, and to this end he placed a number of candles in the windows and again stuck up some cards. Shortly after this the lady went away and he remained alone in the rooms, still hoping to have an application for them. During the morning and afternoon he had received several messages from Mrs. Sparr asking him to take down his cards, but he had refused to do so. Shortly after he had illuminated his windows he had another message to the same effect, and, later on, a man, who said he was a policeman, rapped at the door and ordered him to open it. He refused, and the man said he would "send it in." Fearing personal violence he took out his pistol and called out that he was in his rooms and would not permit any intrusion, and that he would fire on any one who attempted to enter. Several efforts were then made to break open his door, and he fired through it. About 10 o'clock some gentlemen from the Police Station called at his room, and he let them in, as he knew one of them by sight. He told them what had taken place, and put out some of his lights. Later on he heard another rap, and upon asking who was at his door, was told that a friend wanted to see him. Not recognizing the voice he declined to admit the person, who then said he was the Captain of the Police of the precinct, and told him he must put out the lights. He would not, and the Captain threatened to break down the door. He, in his turn, threatened to shoot any one who came in. He was then let alone for the night, and was arrested early the next morning. He had communicated with his friends, and would be bailed out to-day, when he would take steps to obtain legal redress for what had been done to him.

ALBANY.

LAST EVENING'S SESSIONS OF BOTH HOUSES—THE EQUALIZATION OF ASSESSMENTS—THE ATLANTIC AVENUE FERRY—A PARADE GROUND FOR THE FIRST DIVISION IN CENTRAL PARK.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 12.—The greater portion of the session of the House this evening was occupied with the discussion of a bill to amend the law in relation to the equalization of assessments. There was a warm debate between Messrs. Alvord, Post, Hogeboom, and Hepburn, and, it appearing that no agreement could be reached, the bill was progressed.

The ferry bill of Mr. Bradley, of Kings, was ordered to a third reading without opposition. It requires the Union Ferry Company to run a boat from the foot of Whitehall street to the foot of Atlantic avenue, in Brooklyn, once in every 12 minutes, from 5 in the morning until 10 at night; and from 10 at night till 5 in the morning, once in every 30 minutes.

Mr. Langbein introduced a bill to establish the ball ground or Green of Central Park as a parade ground for the use of the First Division of the National Guard. The bill requires the Commissioners of the Park Department to set aside this portion of the park, to be used for parade purposes between the 1st of May and the 1st of July in each year. The Park Commissioners and the Commander of the First Division of the National Guard are empowered jointly to make all needful regulations for the proper control of the Parade Ground. Mr. Langbein states that this bill has powerful support from the military commanders on account of the proposed repeal of the Parade Ground act. It is certain the bill will be pushed, though it is by no means the first time that a proposition to use the Central Park for a parade Ground has been fought and defeated.

Among the bills introduced in the House were the following:

By Mr. Hogeboom—For the relief of George W. Phelps, for reconstructing the abutment to a bridge over Genesee River.

By Mr. Gallagher—To punish acts of cruelty to children, giving jurisdiction to Justices of the Peace and Police Justices.

The following bills were introduced in the Senate:

By Mr. Sprague—To confirm the official acts of John Otto, a notary public of Erie County.

By Mr. Schoonmaker—To amend the laws relating to the adjournment of Circuit Courts and Courts of Over and Terminer.

By Mr. Schoonmaker, providing that the following sentence shall be added to section 121 of the Code of Procedure: "A cause of action shall not be affected by death of a person jointly liable with others upon the same obligation or instrument, nor shall the estate of such person be discharged from liability by his death, and an action against persons so liable may be continued against the survivors and the legal representatives of a deceased party."

The following bills were ordered to a third reading: Obliging telegraph companies to receive and forward messages from rival lines; for funding part of the debt of Troy.

Senator Emerson's bill relative to women holding elective school offices was made the special order for Wednesday evening.

Senator Woodin introduced Mr. Cowdin's bill introduced in the Assembly on the 11th of January for the purpose of securing greater economy in the government of the City of New-York. The bill is printed and known as No. 115 of the Assembly.

A CLUB RECEPTION.

The Lotos Club-house was thrown open yesterday afternoon to the ladies and other invited guests. The rooms were crowded, and the usual display of pictures was much admired. A light musical and elocutionary entertainment was provided for the guests. This comprised vocal music by Mrs. Isora Elder, Miss Field, Mr. Humphreys, Mr. Rouse, and Mr. Thomas Whiffen; piano solos by Mr. G. W. Warren, and violin solos by Mr. William Withers. Recitations were given by Messrs. A. P. Burbank and W. S. Andrews. The whole programme was admirably arranged and well received. Among the notable pictures exhibited was a brilliant landscape by J. F. Cropsey; also portraits by Thomas Hicks and David Johnson, and a capital study of a horse's head by Schreyer. A new picture by T. W. Wood, "The Peddler's Wagon," attracted much attention. A. F. Tait exhibited a capital and carefully finished picture representing two terriers overwhelmed by a basket of champagne while pursuing their game. Mr. Ralph showed an admirably composed group of cattle. Two strong marine studies represented Edward Moran's genius; and there were contributions of high merit from R. S. Gifford, L. C. Tiffany, Eastman Johnson, C. H. Miller, J. H. Beard, A. D. Shattuck, Clinton Ogilvie, George Inness, and others.

THE HARTFORD BANK FRAUDS.

THE ALLEGED FALSE ENTRIES AND OVERCHARGES—THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PRESIDENT AND CASHIER—HOW THE IRREGULARITIES WERE DISCOVERED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Feb. 12.—There are no new developments in the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank affair. It is, however, the general topic of discussion in business circles. Few persons knew of the arrest of the President and Cashier till this morning. Many rumors are afloat as to the criminal responsibility of one or both of the officers. While both are accused in the official prosecution with falsifying returns, separate charges are made against Mr. Chapman, the Cashier, for embezzling $7,500 and charging the same on the books to the First National Bank of Suffield. The false entries include an overcharge of $120,000 against the American Exchange National Bank of New-York, and also one of $100,000 against the Continental National Bank of New-York, and both the President and Cashier are involved. The discovery of the rascality is attributed to various sources. One report is of a supernatural order to the effect that a leading stockholder and Director dreamed two nights in succession that something was seriously wrong in the bank, and that he went to Mr. Tracy, the President, and related his suspicions. Mr. Tracy assured him that all was right, but on the following day went to him and made a full confession. Mr. Tracy himself admits that he first denied to the Director, but went to his home that night in West Hartford and admitted all his shortcomings to his wife, and thus having once cleared his mind, was prepared to make a clean breast of everything without restraint. At the Brokers' Board to-day 80 was bid and 85 asked for the stock of the bank.

SALE OF THE BEAUMONT COLLECTION.

This evening there is to be a sale at No. 845 Broadway of a collection of oil paintings and water-colors belonging to the late J. P. Beaumont. The sale will occupy the two following evenings, and will be conducted by Henry D. Miner. A large number of American, Roman, French, and Netherland painters are represented. W. T. Richards has a small study in trees; Daniel Huntington, Cole, J. F. Weir, Kensett, Cropsey, Church, William Hart, Bierstadt, and Thomas Moran, are also represented. There is a very genuine-looking specimen of Henry Inman, and a portrait of President Madison by Thomas Sully, said to be that from which the engraving was taken. Eastman Johnson is represented by a very successful head of a New-England peddler. Among the foreigners Oswald Achenbach, Willems, Verboeckhoven, Frantz, H. Corroene, (Ginaut, and Backuysen are notable. There is an interesting "Rest of the Caravan" by Gentz, of Berlin, and two specimens of Chavet, of Paris. These last are remarkably clever. There is also a Toulmouche as good as usual, although evidently not a recent picture. As pleasing a picture as any is a water-piece by Robbe, of Brussels, who appears to have been appreciated, while living, with medals and honors. The only picture assuming the position of an old master is a "Venus and Adonis" by Carlo Cignani, a Bolognese artist living at the beginning of the last century. There are a number of Roman pictures in this collection, especially among the water-colors. Galofre, of Madrid, appears in three specimens. D. Nitty, of Rome, has two most excellent ink and sepia drawings—small, full-length figures. Louis Leloir has a small drawing. There is an ambitious "Death of Seneca" by Domingues, of Madrid—a water-color. Jimenez, of Rome, and Frere, of Paris, have good work, while Tiffany and Bricher represent America in the same line of art.

A CARD FROM THE SEA CIFF TRUSTEES.

Our attention has been called to an article in your edition of Sunday last purporting to be a report from a committee appointed by the Trustees of the Sea Cliff Grove Association to investigate certain allegations of a misappropriation of funds by some of the members of the board. Permit us to say that no such report either in words or substance was ever presented to our Board of Trustees; nor did either of us (though present at all the meetings of the board when the question referred to was considered) ever hear of that alleged "report" until we saw it in your paper. The report of the committee, which was signed by all the members except one, (and he was absent and made no minority report,) declared that "no fraud had been committed," and that "value was given for value received." That report was adopted by a unanimous vote, only one Trustee, (John Falconer,) not voting, and he stated in the presence of the board that he did not believe any fraud had been committed.

The charges that there was any misappropriation of funds in the purchase of the Sea Cliff dock property referred to are utterly unfounded. The facts show (of which there is abundant proof) that the seven members of the Board of Trustees who purchased the said dock property did so for the benefit of the Sea Cliff Association, and at the request of a majority of the board, and that they subsequently transferred it to the Association without a single dollar's profit.

Hearing afterward that certain designing persons were covertly charging a wrong in the transaction, the Trustees selling the property to the board offered to repurchase it, paying therefor the same amount in value and kind as that received from the board. This offer was declined by the board.

The present members of the board (15 in number, and all well-known citizens,) are in full accord in the administration of the Sea Cliff affairs. The only complainers, so far as we know or believe, are those whose recent efforts to be elected Trustees have failed of success.

E. RINEHART, President.

THE TAX-PAYERS WIN.

In the case of J. W. Simington (acting for the Tax-payers Association) against the Trustees of the Village of New-Brighton, Staten Island, the Supreme Court has rendered a decision sustaining the tax-payers' complaint and granting the permanent injunction asked by plaintiff. This injunction restrains the Trustees from making this village into debt or contracting any obligations in anticipation of realized revenue, or making road improvements out of general funds of the village, such as plaintiff claimed were legal under the charter, only at the expense of the ward in which located.

THE NEW LIFE INSURANCE LAW OF MAINE.

There is no subject of more interest or importance to the general public at the present time than that of Life Insurance. The new law which was passed by the Legislature of Maine, a few days ago, affords the most perfect security to policyholders, and for the benefit of the thousands of insured in this country, we print below the law in full:

SECTION 1. Every policy of life insurance issued on and after the 1st day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven, by any company chartered by the authority of this State, which may be forfeited for non-payment of premiums (including all notes given for premiums or interest thereon) after it shall have been in force three full years, and which shall not contain provision for a surrender value at least equivalent to the value arising under the terms of this act, shall, nevertheless, be continued in force to an extent and for a period of time to be determined, as follows, to wit: The net value of the policy when the premium becomes due and is not paid, shall be ascertained according to the combined experience or Actuaries' rate of mortality, with interest at 4 per centum per annum; after deducting from three-fourths of such net value any indebtedness to the company or notes held by the company against the insured, which notes, if given for premium, shall then be canceled; what remains shall be considered as a net single premium of temporary insurance, and the term for which it will insure shall be determined according to the age of the party at the time of the lapse of the policy, and the assumptions of mortality and interest aforesaid; but if the policy shall be an endowment payable at a certain time or at death, if it should previously occur, then, if what remains as aforesaid shall exceed the net single premium of temporary insurance for the balance of the endowment term for the full amount of the policy, such excess shall be considered as a net single premium, or single endowment, payable only at the same time as the original endowment, and in case the life insured survives to such time, and the amount thus payable by the company shall be determined according to the age of the party at the time of the lapse of the policy, and the assumptions of mortality and interest aforesaid. For the purpose of this act, when the premiums upon any policy shall be payable oftener than once in every year, and default shall be made in the payment of any premium after the policy shall have been in force for three full years, the policy shall be valued in the same manner as it would have been had the whole premium for the policy year last entered upon been paid in full, and the balance of said year's premium actually unpaid shall not be deducted from the reserve as an outstan

FLOUR AND MEAL—A freer movement was reported in State and Western Flour as generally unchanged prices, the feature of the day's business having been the activity in City Mills Extras, for shipment to the West Indies. Minnesota bakers attracted rather more attention from the home trade to-day, and, superfine and No. 2 brands were again more sought after, the former unusually scarce and quoted strong as to price. PROPOSALS.

PROPOSALS FOR ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Jan. 25, 1877.

Sealed proposals are invited from steel-plate engravers and paper printers, and will be received at this department until 12 o'clock M. on Wednesday, the 28th day of February, 1877, for furnishing all the postage stamps which this department may require for public and official use during a period of four years, commencing on the 1st day of May, 1877, viz:

1. Stamps for the use of the public.
2. Official stamps for the use of the executive departments.
3. Newspaper and periodical stamps.

QUALITY OF STAMPS.

The stamps must be furnished, subject to the approval of the department, from steel plates, engraved in the highest style of the art of steel engraving, and printed in such colors as may from time to time be selected by the department, in the best and most approved manner, upon paper of the best quality, suitable for the purpose and satisfactory to the department, thoroughly gummed with the best quality of adhesive gum, perforated in such manner that each separate stamp can be readily detached and used, the sheets to be well pressed, and packed so as to prevent them from adhering to each other; the same to be furnished with all reasonable dispatch in such quantities as may in each case be ordered by the department easily to fill requisitions from Postmasters and from the executive departments. The stamps must be printed on hand-roller presses.

DIES, ROLLS, AND PLATES.

The dies, rolls, and plates from which postage stamps are now printed, being the property of the United States, will be placed in the keeping and custody of the contractor on or before the first day of May, 1877, the same to be held subject to the order and control of the department, as hereinafter provided; and the contractor will be required, from said dies, rolls, and plates, and from such other dies and plates as may be necessary to be reproduced from the original dies, to have on hand, ready for issue on the day the contract term commences, a sufficient stock of stamps of the several denominations and kinds required, to fill the current daily requisitions from the department, without hindrance or delay.

The contractor will be further required to keep in repair all dies, rolls, and plates from which stamps may be printed, and to renew the same whenever required; and should new designs be required at any time to take the place of the present series of stamps for the use of the public, or of any of them, or for denominations of stamps not now in use, the same shall be furnished and engraved, subject to the approval of the Postmaster General, upon his request, within a reasonable time; all work shall be done and executed in the best style of steel engraving by the contractor, and at his own expense. No change will be made in the present designs of official postage stamps, or of newspaper and periodical stamps; but the contractor will be required to keep in repair, and renew when required, the dies, rolls, and plates for those stamps, the same as for the stamps for the use of the public. All dies, rolls, and plates made or used at any time in filling the contract shall immediately become the absolute property of the United States, and shall be delivered, in good working order, to the Postmaster General or his authorized agent whenever demanded.

BUILDING, PLACE OF MANUFACTURE, &c.

The stamps will be required to be manufactured in a fire-proof building, and in separate apartments, distinct from those in which any other work is done by the contractor—the work to be subject to the approval of the department—and when finished must be placed in a fire and burglar-proof safe or vault, to be specially provided for that purpose, and constructed to the satisfaction of the department. The contractor, his employes, and agents shall conform to such regulations as the department may from time to time adopt for the security of the Government.

AGENT—OFFICE-ROOMS—INSPECTION.

A resident agent of the department will have supervision of the manufacture, storage, and issue of the stamps, who shall at all times have full and free access to the apartments, safes, and vaults where the stamps are manufactured and stored, for the purpose of inspecting the same; and the contractor shall furnish him and his clerks suitable office and desk room, for the transaction of the business of the agency, without cost to the Government. The Postmaster General shall also have the right at any time to cause an inspection to be made, by any agent or agents whom he may specially designate for the purpose, of the apartments, safes, and vaults used for the manufacture and storage of stamps, and of the stamps in course of manufacture or in stock.

STOCK ON HAND.

The contractor shall at all times keep on hand a stock of the several denominations and kinds of stamps, subject to the control of the Post Office Department, its regularly authorized agent, or such other agents as may be specially authorized by the Postmaster General, in all stages of manufacture, sufficient to meet all orders of the department, and to provide against any and all contingencies that may be likely to occur during the existence of the contract, so that each and every order of the department may be promptly filled, and the department shall have the right to require the contractor at any time during the existence of the contract to furnish an extra quantity of stamps not exceeding a supply for three months.

PACKING.

Stamps to be transmitted by sea routes must be securely packed in hermetically sealed tin cases, wrapped in strong manila paper; all others must either be packed in strong binders'-board boxes, bound on the edges and corners with manila, and enveloped in two thicknesses or strong manila paper, or inclosed in strong manila envelopes, as the quantity to be transmitted may require; all packages to be so inclosed as to enable the agent of the department to officially seal them.

DELIVERY.

The stamps may be required to be delivered by the contractor in separate packages, as above provided for, at the Post Office in the place where the same are manufactured, or at such other Post Office in the immediate vicinity of the place of manufacture as the Postmaster General may direct; or in such quantities at the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C. (each denomination and kind being kept separate,) as the Postmaster General may direct.

BLANKS.

In addition, the contractor will be required to furnish labels, and direct the same, for each package, in accordance with the daily lists furnished by the agent of the department, together with all other blanks required to be inclosed with the stamps; also, all blanks for daily, weekly, monthly, and quarterly returns relating to the number and denominations of stamps furnished.

REPORTS.

The contractor will be required to report weekly, under oath, the number, denomination, and kind of stamps manufactured, (finished, unfinished, and spoiled,) the number issued during the week, and the number available for issue; all spoiled stamps to be destroyed by the contractor in the presence of the proper officer of the contractor or his representative, or otherwise disposed of, as the Postmaster General may direct.

AWARD.

The contract will be awarded on the basis of the number of the several kinds of stamps issued during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, as follows:

1. Number of stamps for use of the public.698,799,090
2. Number of official stamps for use of the executive departments.....17,682,665
3. Number of newspaper and periodical stamps.....1,290,347

Total.....717,772,102

Bids must be made for each kind of stamps separately, the bidders stating in their proposals the price per thousand stamps, including everything required to be done by the contractor in the above agreement; and the contract will be awarded as a whole to the lowest responsible bidder in the aggregate, the amount of a bid to be ascertained by extending the above issues at the prices bid respectively, and then aggregating the amounts of the three several items. It must be understood, however, that proposals made under this advertisement shall include all the stamps needed by the department during the contract term, without reference to the above issues. Should the use of any of the above kinds of stamps be discontinued during the contract term, the contractor will not be entitled to damages on account of such discontinuance.

PROPOSALS—AGREEMENT—BOND.

Each proposal must be signed by the individual or partnership making it, and when made by a partnership the name of each partner thereof must be disclosed, and the proposal accompanied by a guaranty, signed by at least two responsible guarantors, that the bidder shall, within ten days after being called upon to do so, execute a contract to furnish promptly, and in quantities as above specified, such supplies as may be furnished by him, the responsibility and sufficiency of the signers to such guaranty to be certified to by the Postmaster or United States Attorney where the bidder resides; and in such contract the contractor and his sureties shall covenant and agree that in case the said contractor shall fail to do or perform all or any of the covenants, stipulations, and agreements of said contract on the part of the said contractor to be performed, as therein set forth, the said contractor and his sureties shall forfeit and pay to the United States of America the sum of two hundred thousand dollars, for and as said forfeiture the said contractor and his sureties shall be jointly and severally liable, as liquidated damages to be sued for in the name of the United States.

If the bidder to whom the first award may be made should fail to enter into a contract, as herein provided, then the award may be annulled, and the contract let to the next lowest responsible bidder, if not deemed too high by the Postmaster General, and so on until the required contract is executed; and such next lowest bidder shall be required to fulfill every stipulation embraced herein as if he were the original party to whom the contract was awarded.

The contract will also provide that if at any time during its continuance the sureties shall die or become irresponsible, the Postmaster General shall have the right to require additional and sufficient sureties, which the contractor shall furnish to the acceptance of the Postmaster General within 10 days after notice and in default thereof the contract may be annulled.

RESERVATIONS.

The Postmaster General reserves the right to reject any and all bids if, in his judgment, the interest of the Government requires it; also the right to annul the contract if, in his opinion, there should be a failure at any time to perform faithfully any of its stipulations, or in case of a willful attempt to impose upon the department stamps inferior to those required by the contract.

PAYMENTS.

Payments for stamps actually issued and delivered will be made quarterly, after proper examination and adjustment of accounts.

CONTRACT NOT ASSIGNABLE.

The contract cannot, in any case, be lawfully transferred or assigned.

EXTENSION.

Should the interest of the Government require, the contract may be extended beyond the time named, not exceeding three months, by order of the Postmaster General, and the contract prices and all conditions herein set forth shall govern in such extended contract.

ADDRESS.

All proposals must be made on the blank forms furnished by the department, securely enveloped and sealed, indorsed on the back "Proposals for Postage Stamps," and addressed to the Third Assistant Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

JAMES N. TYNER, Postmaster General.

INSURANCE WRECKING.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE COMPANY.

EXTRAORDINARY REVELATIONS BY A LATE AGENT OF THE CONCERN—THE "FREEZING-OUT" PROCESS FULLY DESCRIBED—THE PLAN ADOPTED FOR REDUCING THE RESERVE—HOW POLICIES WERE FORCED TO LAPSE.

Some startling disclosures regarding the manner in which the officers of the Continental Life Insurance Company, or, at least, some of them, managed that concern, were made yesterday at the hearing in the case of Stephen English and others against the company, before Mr. William Allen Butler, the Referee appointed by Judge Pratt. The witness who made known some of the inner workings of the company was Mr. S. M. Hammond, of the firm of Hammond & Grubb, of Cincinnati, and who was formerly employed as an agent of the Continental. He was called by Mr. Raphael J. Moses, of counsel for the policy-holders, and testified that he had not acted as the General Agent of the company in the purchase of policies, but he had purchased policies for them in California, Iowa, Nebraska, and the Southern States; witness made negotiations with the Southern Life Insurance Company of Memphis, Tenn., for the reinsurance of the Southern risks of the Continental Company, and the amount paid by the latter company was about $23,400. Mr. Hammond said, in answer to further questions, that he first went to California in September, 1875, and returned in February of the following year; Mr. L. W. Frost, the President of the company, went there with him and came back here in October, 1875; while in California witness purchased policies for the company, the reserve on which would amount to between $100,000 and $200,000; when he went out to California Mr. L. W. Frost gave him a descriptive list of the policies he was to purchase or change; in addition to these he found a great many others, not on the list, which, according to instructions, he ought to and did purchase; the highest limit he was allowed to pay for these policies was 50 per cent. of the reserve; he might at times have exceeded that amount, but if he did it was accepted. In answer to a question as to the manner of making these purchases the witness stated that an offer was made to the policyholder to buy his policy or to give in exchange for it another policy, which latter transaction was known as the "Continental plan," and consisted in the changing of the life policy for what is known as a 20-year term policy. The witness' impression was that this plan was the same as that in operation in the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company, and in regard to which Mr. Barnes, the former Superintendent of the Insurance Department of this State, had said there was 133 per cent. "loading;" it was a term policy on which there were mutual rates of premium, it being specifically agreed that the insurance should end after 20 years. Witness could not tell how many policies they got in Nebraska, but the amount of the reserve there would be about $25,000; he could not give the amount of the reserve that was run off, by the purchase of policies in the Southern States; his instructions when he went South were, he said, to buy up all the insurances he could get, and by so doing the liabilities of the company there were reduced from nearly $2,000,000 to between $500,000 and $600,000, and these were reinsured, as above stated, in the Southern Life Insurance Company of Memphis, which, however, failed about six months afterward; the contract of reinsurance he believed was drawn by Mr. Whitney, and the payment was made by draft from the Memphis company on the Continental.

Mr. Moses, who had thus far carried on the examination, then asked the witness what was done with the unexpended balance of the reserve on the policies purchased in the West and South by him, stating that he desired to show that the balance of the 100 per cent. was drawn out by Mr. Luther W. Frost and appropriated by him to his own use. The witness said he did not know what became of the balance; the payment of whatever percentage of the reserve the agent agreed to give the policyholder for a release of his claim was made by draft on the company. The witness was next asked if Mr. L. W. Frost kept a little book in which he calculated his [the witness'] transactions every morning, to which he replied that he did not think he did. He then related one instance where Mr. Frost had said the company (meaning the company that was purchasing the policies,) had made so much; witness did not remember the amount, but it was the balance of the reserve of a purchased policy. The witness added that he had asked Mr. Frost on one occasion how many persons there were in the company, and he replied that he could state the number but did not desire to do so; he afterward gave him to understand that this course was being pursued in order to make some money for himself and associates; the witness' report of his transactions was made to Mr. John Chaffee at the office of the Continental Company; he had nothing to do with the cash transactions, but only made the purchases; Mr. Blake, the company's coast agent, attended to the cash business; witness did not remember having bought a policy for $40 in Omaha, and sent a draft to New-York for $60, dividing the balance with Mr. Metzger, the agent of the company at that place; he remembered a man named Fitzgerald who held two policies—a life and an endowment policy; the amount of the reserve on one of these was about $6,000; they tried to purchase them, but were not successful. In response to further questions the witness said he did not carry the money from New-York to Memphis to pay for the reinsurance of the Southern risks of the Company; he did not pay to the officers of that institution $3,000 and divide the rest with Luther W. Frost; the whole amount was paid to the company; he could not say what disposition was made of the money subsequently. Mr. Hammond denied having said to Mr. Metzger in the Metropolitan Hotel, Omaha, in April, 1876, that he had divided $17,000 between Mr. Frost and himself.

In response to questions from Mr. Van Pelt, another of the counsel, Mr. Hammond stated that his compensation was a salary of $10,000 a year and expenses; he received the money from the Continental Life Insurance Company, and his vouchers were sent to the office of that institution. He was next questioned by the Referee as to the object of purchasing the policies, and said that he could only testify to what had been told him in regard to that subject. It was stated to him that the company could not meet certain obligations, and that there was necessity for purchasing them; the impression on the Pacific coast was that it was done to make money for the officers; when a policy-holder was called upon whose policy they desired to purchase, he was informed that the company was insolvent; this was as far back as 1874 and 1875, long before the company failed. "That was done," suggested Mr. Van Pelt, "for the purpose of operating on their fears?" "No, Sir," replied the witness, "at least it is what I cannot help in reply to a question as to whether or not the company had any such arrangement with parties other than himself, the witness said he believed they had agents here, but thought they worked on a slightly different plan; in California they had considerable rouble, and the Insurance Commissioner there denounced the Continental Company; the Governor of Alabama also denounced the company for its transactions there, but this was before the witness went South; they (the company) had resorted to the "freezing out" process, and all their agencies were dropped. The witness was called upon to explain the "freezing out" process, and said that when a company desired to force its policies to lapse they neglected to send notices to the policy-holders that their premiums were due, and subsequently, when these premiums were tendered, they refused to accept them unless the policy-holder would submit to a re-examination; in this way many policies were taken up; on being further examined in relation to the proposed transfer of the risks to the New-Jersey Mutual, the witness said that Mr. Frost had used language which led him to believe that the transfer would take place in September last; he did not know what had prevented it.

Mr. Robert Sewell, of counsel for the former Receiver, Mr. John J. Anderson, then examined the witness at length, and he testified that he never had any dealings with married women in whose names the insurance was effected; witness knew of the existence of a law in this State which prevented married women surrendering policies, but paid no attention to it, as his instructions were to have these ladies write their names across the face of the policy; he followed his instructions regardless of consequences; Mr. Frost had said it was a necessity that the policies should be purchased, and that if they could carry the matter far enough the company would again be made solvent; while in California, witness received 10 per cent of the reserve on every policy purchased or changed. When asked if he knew of any other companies that resorted to this process, the witness said there was not one in the South that was not practicing it; it was called the "recuperative process," but its technical term in insurance circles was "wrecking." There are, said the witness, various ways of wrecking a company, such as "freezing out," "sweating," "bulldozing," "intimidating," &c., witness was familiar with all these various modes of doing business, as he had been in the business a great many years; if the Continental had continued to do business he should have resumed the purchase of policies in January, for it was the intention that he should go all through the United States; he believed the process was to have gone on whether the company reinsured its risks or not; he had negotiated for the reinsurance of its Southern risks with the St. Louis Life Insurance Company, the Piedmont and Arlington Company of Richmond, the Equitable of Louisiana, and the Mobile Company of Mobile; the arrangement was that a certain quota of the reserve should be paid in cash and the balance when the risks were taken up; witness was simply the agent of the Continental Company to effect a reinsurance of its policies, if he could find any company foolish enough to take the risks.

Mr. G. H. Thomas, the book-keeper, was next called, and testified that Mr. L. W. Frost kept a private account which he (witness) was never allowed to see; there was a difference in the two accounts of $32,000, which Mr. Frost had credited to himself. The hearing was then adjourned.

SUIT AGAINST THE EQUITABLE COMPANY.

George K. Leet insured his life for the benefit of his wife in the Equitable Life Assurance Society for $10,000, and made 17 quarterly payments. He was not notified to make the eighteenth payment, which was for the last quarter of 1872, and he charged that the company in order to work a forfeiture of his policy fraudulently omitted to send him the usual notice. He subsequently offered to pay the premium, which was refused, and the officers, he said, persuaded him to surrender the policy without proper compensation, though enough of dividends was then due to buy two premiums. The case was argued some time since in Supreme Court, Special Term, before Judge Barrett, on a demurrer to the complaint. In a previous case against the company, by A. Hicks, in which the allegation was that the company's officers had fraudulently neglected to send a notice, and that Hicks was induced by fraud to sell his policy for $300, Judge Barrett sustained a demurrer. But the Leet case he distinguished from the other by the allegation of a positive act of fraudulent suppression of notice which misled Leet and directly resulted in the destruction of the contract, and in that it was not averred that Leet received anything upon the surrender of the policy. He therefore gives judgment for Leet, holding that he has the right to sue, though the policy was for the benefit of his wife.

VERDICT AGAINST THE NEW-JERSEY MUTUAL.

In the Superior Court, before Judge Curtis, yesterday, a case was tried in which Catharine M. Kiley, widow of James Kiley, sued the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Newark, to recover on a policy of $5,000 issued to her husband, Kiley, who was an old employe in the New-York Post Office, obtained the policy on March 10, 1874, and died on the 2d of January, 1875. The defense set up was that at the time the policy was issued to Kiley, he "had the seeds of consumption," and knowingly concealed that fact from Moses Solomon, the agent of the company, through whom the insurance was effected. It was also set up that defendant had made application previously to the Arctic and Manhattan Life Insurance Companies and a third company, all of whom had rejected him, and that he had concealed the fact of his rejection from the Mutual Company. The plaintiff claimed that her husband was not disqualified at the time of making the application, and that, if he was, he was not aware of it; that his previous applications were not rejected, to his knowledge, and that, if they were, Solomon, [the agent,] must have been aware of the fact, as he was the agent he applied to in all these instances. It was further claimed that Kiley was not sick until the Fall of 1874, and that his illness was the result of overwork in the Post Office. From the testimony of Joshua G. Wilber, the Medical Examiner of the company, it appeared that on Kiley's representations and witness' examination of him, he reported favorably on his application. Judge Curtis said that it was simply a question for the jury whether Kiley had truly stated his condition, according to his best knowledge, and if he had, plaintiff was entitled to a verdict, otherwise a verdict should be given for the company. After an absence of a few minutes, the jury found for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed—$5,000 with interest, making $5,604 71. Wakeman & Latting for plaintiff; S. A. & D. J. Noyes for the company.

EFFECTING UNAUTHORIZED INSURANCE.

Judge Barrett yesterday, in Supreme Court, Chambers, denied a motion, in the suit of the People ex rel. A. J. Gross and A. Faitout, to vacate an order of arrest against defendants. The suit is for $500 penalty, on the ground that defendants, as insurance brokers, had effected an insurance in a company outside of this State which had not filed security in this State. Judge Barrett said it was clear that the defendants aided in effecting an unauthorized insurance. The procurement of the policy completed the offense, and the fact that it was canceled for non-payment of premium made no difference.

THE NEW-JERSEY MUTUAL.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE LEGISLATURE—GROSS IRREGULARITIES IN THE MANAGEMENT OF THE COMPANY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Feb. 12.—Hon. Henry C. Kelsey, Secretary of State, submitted to the Legislature this evening the report of the proceedings in connection with the New-Jersey Mutual Insurance Company. He says that when Steadwell, the President of the company, was informed of the appointment of Mr. Fackler as Actuary, he protested against it on the ground that Fackler's connections and preconceptions were such as to endanger his impartial performance of his duties, Mr. Fackler was nevertheless directed to go on with his examination. The evidences of gross irregularities of management, coupled with the fact that the alleged assets were kept mostly in New-York, and the probable actual insolvency were so clear at the very commencement, that Mr. Kelsey applied to the Attorney General to take steps for an injunction against the transfer of the company's assets. The Attorney General advised him that the Chancellor could do nothing under the law till a deficiency had been shown and an opportunity to make it good had been allowed the company. It further appeared by examination of Stedwell that he had hypothecated $45,000 or $50,000 of the company's assets to secure a loan of about that amount to himself personally. It finally became known that Noyes, the company's attorney had taken up the loan, in order, as Stedwell admitted, that the bonds might be produced on exmination. Mr. Kelsey's demand that the bonds be kept in Newark was demurred to, and his subsequent effort to take possession of them for the purpose of retaining them was forcibly resisted, and the bonds were taken to New-York again. Mr. Kelsey then recounts the transfer to the National Capitol Life Insurance Company and the subsequent proceedings before the Chancellor. He says, as to the alleged reinsurance of the business of this company by the National Capitol Life Insurance Company, that it may well be asked how a corporation which has not assets sufficient to discharge its own liabilities can procure them to be assumed by another corporation. And when it is understood, as in this case is the fact so far as known, that the company assuming such liability has not assets of the value of $1, the transaction becomes more unworthy and discreditable than before. The supplemental and final report of D. F. Fackler, the actuary, is appended to Mr. Kelsey's report. In making his policy valuations, he says it was assumed that all premiums should have a margin for expenses of from 5 to 10 per cent., according to the class of policy. In 225 cases the premiums fell below his extremely moderate standard. Some of the most striking cases were those of three-year endowments with the same premiums as 10-year endowments. In 3,547 cases entered by the company as term policies, the premiums were found to be in very very nearly all cases fully up to the ordinary participating rates for whole life insurance. In all these cases a double valuation was made, one as a term policy, and one as a whole life policy, and the excess of the latter over the former was considered as a special reserve which, in equity if not in law, should be held by the company on behalf of those policies. Quite a number of cases of term policies were omitted from the calculation because the premiums were not up to the participating standard, although far above the ordinary term rates.

The results of these valuations are briefly as follows: "According to the American experience mortality table with four and one-half per cent. interest, 10,836 policies, insuring $19,861,682, requiring on ordinary assumptions a "net" reserve of $1,556,266. For 225 cases of insufficient premium must be added $49,330 and for 3,547 cases of peculiar term policies must be added $91,421, making a total of $1,697,017. The valuation should be made much larger, for a great many policies bear special indorsements reducing the premium payable below the rate stated in the body of the policy and in the register, which indorsements are not in the registers nor on the lists furnished me by the company. It should also be added that about 100 policies were omitted from the company's valuation sheets by an oversight. It will be observed that the reserve on outstanding policies is actually $1,697,017, which alone increases the company's deficit by $197,000 beyond the amount approximated in the preliminary report, or to a total of $612,500, and this, too, on the assumption that the mortgages submitted and examined are worth their face."

The report was ordered to be printed, and on motion of Mr. Vail it was referred to the House Committee on Banks and Insurance.

NATIONAL POULTRY SHOW.

CHICAGO, Feb. 12.—The second annual poultry show of the National Association opened this afternoon in the Exhibition Building with a remarkably fine display of about 1,200 chickens. The exhibition will last until Saturday night, and premiums to the amount of $5,000 will be awarded. Prof. Giovanni has an exhibit of trained canaries, and a steam-hatching apparatus is at work in the building.

RIOTOUS STRIKERS DENOUNCED.

TRENTON, Feb. 12.—At the delegate meeting of the Potters' Association, and at the public meeting held this afternoon, the riotous proceedings of some of the strikers and the burning in effigy of certain men who have gone to work were denounced in strong terms, and it was resolved not to stand by the persons who have assembled during the last two or three nights for purposes of intimidation.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

SHOOTING HIS FATHER-IN-LAW.

THE ATTEMPTED MURDER OF GEORGE CHARLTAN BY HIS SON-IN-LAW—PARTICULARS OF THE AFFRAY AT MORRISANIA.

Some further particulars in relation to the attempted murder of George Charltan by his son-in-law, Victor Oese, at the residence of the former on Linton avenue, near One Hundred and Forty-ninth street, Morrisania, on Sunday evening, were obtained yesterday. From the statements made by Mr. Charltan's family it appears that Oese married Miss Angie Charltan about two years ago, and with $400 which he received as a present from his relatives in Germany he set up housekeeping with his wife in Newark, N. J., where he was employed in a sachel factory. He spent nearly all the money in buying unnecessarily expensive furniture, and neglected his work so much that he was unable to support his wife decently. Mrs. Oese was taken sick, and as she was not receiving the care and nourishment rendered necessary by her condition, her father took her to his home in Morrisania, where she was tenderly cared for. Oese became dissatisfied at the absence of his wife, and called several times at Mr. Charltan's residence to induce her to return to him. Several altercations between him and his father-in-law were the natural consequences of these visits, and Charltan on one occasion called in the aid of the Police to eject Oese from the premises. Since that time the son-in-law has not intruded so frequently. On Sunday he went to his father-in-law's house with the avowed intention of shooting him. As Oese entered the house Charltan sprang to his feet, but before he could utter a word Oese drew a revolver and fired. The bullet entered the right cheek, grazing the jawbone and lodging in the muscles of the neck immediately behind and pressing upon the carotid artery. Mr. Charltan fell to the floor and Oese fired another shot at the prostrate form of his father-in-law, the bullet going wide of its mark. He was then secured. The wound is of a highly dangerous nature, and it is feared that it will result fatally. From its position the bullet cannot be extracted without laying bare the entire muscular portion of the neck, an operation which the patient is too weak to undergo at present.

Oese after his arrest made a statement charging his father-in-law with having endeavored to separate him from his wife. When his wife became ill and work was slack, the father-in-law proposed that they should both live at his house. He paid his wife's board whenever he was able, but it was soon apparent to him that his father-in-law was endeavoring to estrange his wife from him, and to separate them altogether. Charltan forbade him the house, and he was warned that it would be dangerous to him to meet his father-in-law, and he therefore armed himself with a revolver. He went to the house to see his wife and was refused admittance. He went there again on Sunday night for the same purpose, and on seeing his father-in-law his feelings overcame him and he did not know what he did. Oese was arraigned before Police Justice Wagstaff and remanded to await the result of the injuries to his father-in-law.

NEW-JERSEY CENTRAL TROUBLES.

AN ATTACHMENT AGAINT THE COMPANY'S BALANCE IN THE BANK OF COMMERCE—NOT AN AFFAIR OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Reports were in circulation yesterday that an attachment had been served by judgment creditors upon a balance held by the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company in the Bank of Commerce, and that this attachment was the beginning of a movement on the part of dissatisfied holders of securities. The officers of the bank admitted, when questioned, that an attachment had been served, but declined to give any more information on the subject. At the Sheriff's office the fact was also admitted, but further information was declined, as likely to interfere with the full operation of the attachment. The attorneys of the judgment creditors were ascertained to be Miller, Peet, Opdyke & Co., and from Mr. Peet a statement was obtained which will greatly relieve those shareholders of the company who had feared that the threatened Receiver was about to appear, and that the evil day in the railroad's history had come. It appears that the firm of J. & J. R. Gray sold the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company a ferry-boat, which the company considered was not what they wanted, and declined to take it. A verdict, upon suit, was given in favor of Gray & Co., and late last week a judgment was obtained in the Supreme Court for the amount awarded to the creditors. Upon this judgment an attachment was ordered, and the attachment having been placed in the hands of Sheriff Bailey, it was served on Saturday. Yesterday the Central Railroad Company made an arrangement with counsel for the creditors and gave security for the payment of the amount ordered by the judgment.

STEAM TO SOUTH FERRY.

COMPLETING THE ELEVATED ROAD ACROSS BATTERY PARK—CARS TO RUN TO SOUTH FERRY IN TEN DAYS.

Acting promptly upon the decision of Chief Justice Curtis in the Superior Court, rendered on Thursday last, the New-York Elevated Railway Company on Saturday took up the work which had been suspended when the suit of Jeremiah Spader to prevent it from building across Battery Park had been instituted against it, and an injunction had restrained them from finishing the road to South Ferry. A large force of men was employed, who diligently dug the holes and prepared the foundations for the uprights, beginning at a point opposite No. 10 Battery place, and operating at as many points as possible with the force employed to the end of the route on Whitehall street. The iron for all the uprights was already upon the ground, and some of the cross beams were also at hand to be placed across the uprights. Work was suspended on Sunday afternoon, as it was found that the iron-work for the beams upon which the tiles are laid would not arrive soon enough to warrant any further effort immediately. The structure across the Battery begins at a point opposite the end of Greenwich street, and describes the boundary of the park until it reaches Whitehall street. It passes between the trees standing in the park, and it will only be necessary to lop off a few overhanging branches to permit the cars to pass. The contractors in charge of the work promise to have it finished so that the company can run cars in 10 days from the time the work began. The Passaic Rolling-mill Company on Friday last began loading 30 cars on the Erie Railway with iron for the Elevated Railway, and this iron is expected to arrive to-day. Should no legal interference interrupt the work, it is expected that passengers will be carried from South Ferry to Central Park in less than two weeks.

A CASH BOY ASSAULTED AND ROBBED.

A man who gave his name as Hendricks, and who represented himself to be a boarder at the Metropolitan Hotel, entered the dry goods store of Messrs. Lord & Taylor, in Grand street, yesterday morning. The stranger selected 25 yards of black silk, which he ordered to be sent to his wife's address at the Metropolitan Hotel. At his request James Meehan, a cash boy, accompanied him to the hotel with the goods. On reaching the hotel Hendricks endeavored to obtain the silk by telling the boy to wait in the lobby until he took it up stairs to see if his wife liked the purchase. The boy refused to allow the parcel go out of his possession without its being paid for, however, and Hendricks then invited him to accompany him to his wife's room where he said the money would be given him. The boy consenting, they passed along the corridor toward the southern end of the building. When he had reached the staircase at the end of the corridor, the boy was suddenly struck a stunning blow from behind that buried him against the wall in a senseless condition. When he had recovered consciousness Hendricks had disappeared with the parcel. As soon as he was sufficiently recovered the boy returned to his employer's store, and, after relating his adventure, went to Police Head-quarters, where he recognized the portrait of his assailant in the rogue's gallery. Several detectives are now in search of the thief.

A PROJECTED STOCK EXCHANGE.

For a long time past many members of the Stock Exchange have fought persistently for a return to the low rates of commission prevalent a few years ago. They complained that the high rates drove away customers, but to no effect. The advocates of the high tariff have been too strong for them. Meantime business has continued to grow duller, and yesterday about 100 brokers held a preliminary meeting in Delmonico's, in Broad street, to consider the advisability of starting an opposition Stock Exchange. The proposition found much favor, and was finally agreed to and great enthusiasm. A committee was appointed to draft a set of by-laws and report on Thursday next. It seems from careful inquiry that this movement is a genuine one, and that its projectors are in earnest, whether they be successful or not.

A MERCHANT COWARDLY ASSAULTED.

At 9:30 o'clock on Friday night last, while a well-known carpet merchant, living at No. 107 East Thirty-first street, was passing along West Thirty-fourth street near Fifth avenue, he was suddenly struck from behind with some blunt weapon, which inflicted a severe wound in his right cheek. He turned upon his assailants and endeavored to grapple with them, until help should arrive. He called loudly for the Police, but no officer coming to his assistance, the men succeeded in making their escape, without, however, succeeding in their object of robbing him of his watch and money. The gentleman was subsequently found in a helpless condition by some passers-by, who summoned a carriage and had him conveyed to his residence. He now lies in a critical condition, and his friends are justly indignant at the fact that no Police officer was in the vicinity to answer his cries for help and aid in the capture of the ruffians. It is asserted that the neighborhood in which the assault occurred is never properly guarded and that a similar assault is liable to occur there at any time.

DISCUSSING THE DOCK SYSTEM.

FURTHER CONFERENCE OF COMMERCIAL BODIES ON THE SUBJECT—THE QUESTION OF SELLING THE DOCKS.

The conference of commercial bodies on docks held another adjourned meeting in the Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon, Capt. Snow in the chair. Mr. Webb, from Committee No. 1, said that on Thursday last the committee had sent a note to the Department of Docks expressing anxiety to have an early conference. No answer was received that day, but in the evening the speaker met President Wales in the Union League Club, and was informed that he had not his figures ready. He said, however, that the board would have a meeting next day, and if the committee would call the Commissioners would see them. The committee were present accordingly, but the Commissioners asked for further time to prepare some figures to show that the committee were mistaken in their estimates of the cost of stone bulkheads. Subsequently the Commissioners notified them that they will be ready next Thursday.

Mr. Schwab, of the same committee, said he had a personal conversation with Mr. Wales, who admitted to him that the books of the department were not kept in such a manner that any figures could be obtained from them. The money that had been spent in improvements had been put down to a general construction fund, and it was impossible to classify the items of past years without overhauling all the bills and pay rolls. This was the reason of the delay. The speaker had told Mr. Wales that such details would not be conclusive proof of the incorrectness of the committee's figures, and asked him to abandon the idea of controverting these figures; but he would not. The committee will require time to verify the Commission's figures when received, and Mr. Schwab suggested that when an adjournment was had it should be until the call of the chair.

Mr. Webb presented to the conference a map showing the plans upon which the Engineer of the Dock Department proposes to construct the wharves in the future. The comments of the members were not favorable to the Engineer's ideas.

Committee No. 5 reported progress and asked for further time, which was granted.

Committee No. 4 was then called out of order, the Chairman, Mr. Opdyke, not being present. Mr. Henry, one of the members, addressed the conference to the effect that it was impossible for the committee to agree. Three different reports had been written, and neither one had been signed by any two members. The Chairman was in favor of the City selling all its docks. Mr. Miller did not wish any sold. The speaker would sell a portion. Mr. Henry wanted to present his report. This gave rise to some discussion, and the conference finally agreed to allow the reports of Mr. Henry and Mr. Miller to be read as statements of those gentlemen's views only.

Mr. Henry presented a map showing that the management of the docks had not been satisfactory, from a financial or commercial point of view. He was, therefore, in favor of selling some of the docks to private persons, with the restriction that they should in no case sublet them, or impose excessive rates of wharfage. Nor should the sale be made indiscriminately. It is of paramount importance that no impediment should be offered to commerce. The docks can and should be made self-sustaining. Competition—not combination—should be the watchword. Mr. Henry combated Mr. Opdyke's views, and sustained his own at length.

Mr. Miller then took the floor. He said that the subject of wharfage is of vital importance to the commerce of the City. A considerable portion is already in private hands, and in no instance have proper accommodations been erected for the various steam-ship lines, although they have been a necessity for a twenty-four years. The largest steamships have all been driven over to the New-Jersey shore. While it is true to an extent that the sale of docks to private individuals does not prevent the City from subsequently exercising control over them, yet experience has shown that such control is not obtained without vexatious delays and annoying litigation. The value of the entire taxable real estate of the City depends upon commerce, and thus the rentals of the docks become a question of minor importance. Some might be sold to private persons with profit, but only under the most stringent restrictions. There should be a clause making them revert to the City in the event of non-compliance with the terms of sale, and the City should have the right to repurchase them at a price to be fixed by three appraisers when the parties owning them had no further use for them.

On motion, both reports were laid on the table, as were also a set of resolutions introduced by Mr. Henry, confirmatory of his views. The meeting then adjourned subject to the call of the Chair.

WORKING WITHOUT ORGANIZATION.

THE BROOKLYN ALDERMEN ACTING UPON VARIOUS MATTERS OF PUBLIC INTEREST.

During the past week the members of both political parties in the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen met in caucus to agree on some method, if possible, by which the deadlock that disclosed itself at the first meeting, on the 8th of January, might be broken. It was tacitly understood when the board met yesterday that—no agreement having been reached—only a formal attempt at organization would be made. The business transacted was, for the most part, of a routine character. The report of the special committee to whom had been referred a resolution offered at the last meeting in reference to awarding the bids for street cleaning, caused a long wrangle rather than a debate, during which it was once tabled and afterward passed. City Works Commissioner Fowler tried to lobby through the board a resolution dividing the City for street-cleaning purposes into three districts, and instructing the Board of City Works to award the contracts in the said three districts to responsible bidders. Under such a resolution only contractors of very large means could undertake the work, thereby shutting off competition to a large extent. The resolution was promptly voted down by a decided majority. The report, which directs the Board of City Works to recommend to the Board of Aldermen the lowest bidders for street cleaning in each ward was formally adopted. The Special Committee on Salaries reported a resolution, which was adopted, setting forth that the salaries of city officials and employes should be reduced, and that the Common Council was the proper body to make such reduction. The committee also reported the draft of a short ordinance for the Aldermen to act in accordance with the resolution. Alderman Burnett, Republican, tried, but without avail, to have the matter laid over on the general objection that tinkering with the city charter was not advisable. He thought a law ought to be passed preventing the amendment of the city charter more than once in 10 years. He was in favor, however, of having a carefully-drawn charter framed before the passage of such a law.

Alderman Griswold, Republican, offered a resolution, which was passed, instructing the Corporation Counsel to draft an act reducing the Commissions by which the city is now governed to single heads. Resolutions were also passed instructing the Chairman pro tem. to appoint Special Committees on Printing and Supplies and on Lands and Buildings. Alderman Fisher, Republican, offered a resolution of respect to the memory of the late Col. John O'Mahoney, who was at one time a resident of Brooklyn. The resolution, which was passed, instructed the Chairman to appoint a committee of five to attend the remains of the deceased to the steamer which is to convey them to Ireland. Alderman Fisher said Col. O'Mahoney was an alien, always owning allegiance to the land of his birth, but that during the war of the rebellion he had fought bravely for the Union, and had during his life made many sacrifices in the cause of human liberty.

Alderman Duane offered a resolution directing the Controller to issue certificates of indebtedness to the amount of $197,624 to pay the salaries of 215 patrolmen, which it is proposed by the Commissioners to add to the force, if the Aldermen consent, from the 1st of next March. The resolution recites the reasons, which have already been repeatedly published, why the increase in the force is absolutely necessary for the proper protection of life and property in Brooklyn. With 40 more miles of paved streets than New-York, not more than 275 policemen can now be on duty in Brooklyn at one time. Many of the "posts" are so long that it takes an officer all the time he is on duty during each tour to walk once over his beat. The Chairman was instructed to appoint a temporary committee on Police and Excise, and Alderman Duane's resolution was referred to that committee. After the ordinary business of the board had been transacted, Alderman Sterling, Democrat, moved that a vote be taken viva voce for permanent President of the board. After the votes had been taken, no candidate receiving a majority of all the votes cast, the board adjourned. As most of the committees, to which it is needful to refer local legislation have now been temporarily appointed, and the public business cannot suffer to any great extent, it is not probable, from the present aspect of affairs, that a permanent organization will soon be effected. The majority of both parties still stick to their original candidates—the Republicans to William H. Ray, and the Democrats to Robert Black.

Counsel for the Board of Supervisors have sued out a writ of certiorari in the case of the City of Yonkers against the board, in which it is alleged that the city was illegally assessed by the former for $10,000 more than the amount for which it was liable. The writ has been served on the members of the Board of State Assessors, in order that the decision of that body recently made, and sustained by Judge Dykman, directing the Supervisors to credit Yonkers with the amount stated, may be reviewed in the Supreme Court.

NEW-JERSEY.

Jacob Clark, aged 45, of Bloomfield, is missing from his home since Friday. He is insane.

Mrs. Boylan, of No. 545 Market street, Newark, who was burned recently by the explosion of a kerosene lamp, has died.

The Newark Police are scouring that City for the supposed hiding-place of English, the murderer of Hatfield, of Williamsburg.

William P. Ackerman, an old and well known resident of Passaic County, died in the 86th year of his age on Sunday at his home in Clifton.

James Griffith, alias Spaulding, one of the Newark bank robbers, sentenced to the County Jail for 90 days, is dangerously ill. He is suffering from a dis ease contracted while in Joliet Prison.

The Randolph Light Guard, the pet Tilden Democratic club of Newark, has split, and the civil officers and a number of members will form a new organization. The Guard were to attend the inauguration of Tilden.

Andrew McKay, son of Hugh N. McKay, was arrested in Jersey City yesterday on complaint of his father, who charged him with forging his name to a check for $10 and attempting to pass it. The prisoner was held for examination.

Officer Vogel discovered two men in the act of taking down the shutters of the store corner of Eighth avenue and Boyden street, Newark, on Sunday morning. When he attempted to arrest them they ran, and the officer fired several shots after them. He secured James McCann, alias Bishop, who was recognized as an old offender. Denis O'Hare was arrested subsequently on suspicion.

Daniel Reardon and John Howe were arraigned in the First District Court in Jersey City yesterday morning on a charge of assault and battery, preferred against them by James Clare. When Clare went on the stand and gave his testimony he succeeded in convincing Justice Rose that he himself was the aggressor and the Justice ordered him into custody, while the prisoners were released and made a complaint against him. Clare was placed under $1,000 bonds to answer.

PRIVATE CONFERENCE ON CITY AFFAIRS.

Shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Messrs. Howard Potter, Dorman B. Eaton, Jackson S. Schultz, and a few other members of the Booth Citizens' Committee called at the City Hall for the purpose of consulting with Mayor Ely in regard to legislation at Albany for this City. The Mayor ushered them into a private room adjoining his office, and soon after left for the day. In the meantime, the Controller and the Corporation Counsel arrived, and a conference ensued which lasted over one hour. No reporters were admitted while it was in progress. At the close, however, the Corporation Counsel stated that nothing definite had been agreed upon. It is said that various amendments to the Woodin bill, such as were mentioned by Mr. Kelly at the conference on Saturday, were proposed at the meeting, and were approved by some of the gentlemen and rejected by others. The reports that were circulated in the City Hall about the conference indicates that it was not harmonious.

PLANS FOR A STRANGE UNION CHECKED.

About midnight Sunday night, a carriage stopped at Justice McCoy's residence, on Grand street, Jersey City, and a man who occupied it requested the Justice to accompany him for the purpose of performing a marriage ce

TILDEN'S LATEST PURCHASE.

DISGRACEFUL SCENE IN THE HOUSE—MR. PURMAN, A REPUBLICAN REPRESENTATIVE FROM FLORIDA, FORMALLY DELIVERS HIMSELF OVER TO THE DEMOCRATS AND DECLARES THAT TILDEN CARRIED FLORIDA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—One of the most humiliating spectacles ever witnessed in the House was presented to-day by William J. Purman, a Republican Representative from Florida, who in a brazen manner stood up and delivered himself to the Democrats in accordance with what may be properly termed a formal contract. During the Presidential campaign Mr. Purman supported Hayes, and until very recently was earnest in publicly expressing his belief that Florida had been fairly carried by the Republicans. During the days of doubt and uncertainty immediately following the November election Mr. Purman remained steadfast in his faith that Hayes had carried Florida, and sent numerous telegrams to Republicans in the North to this effect. Since his arrival in Washington and until within the last month Mr. Purman was bold in maintaining Hayes' election, and in conversation with members boasted of his own labors in procuring this result. He was a candidate for re-election to Congress and was duly returned, although his seat will be contested by his competitor. About three weeks ago Mr. Purnam began to exhibit symptoms of a change of mind. Finally it became known that he was preparing to take himself over to the Democratic side by a speech prepared for him, it is said, by a department clerk, from notes furnished by Mr. Purman. No one, therefore, was surprised when to-day he fulfilled the contract made with the Democrats, and in an hour's reading from manuscript declared, in the hearing of the House, that Florida had been given to Hayes by illegal and fraudulent acts on the part of the State Canvassers. When Mr. Purman had concluded, a number of Democrats, led by Messrs. Cox and Hewitt, presented their congratulations for the manner in which he had fulfilled his part of the contract, and welcomed him in the name of Democracy and reform. There is no secrecy about the motive which induced Mr. Purman to barter himself to the Democrats. About three weeks ago he informed a Republican member of the House that the campaign had ruined him financially, and that he would be compelled to do something to recover from his pecuniary embarrassment. "The Democrats," said he in substance, "have now the lines in Florida, and will manage to hold them. I cannot go back there unless something is done for me; and if these Republicans don't help me, I must help myself." To another member he said, that during the campaign he had spent about $5,000, one-half of which he had raised on property owned by his wife; that he was not able to redeem the collateral, and would be compelled to do something to obtain relief. He requested Senator Conover to interest himself in having retained in the departments certain relatives and friends appointed upon Purman's recommendation. Other evidences of Mr. Purman's shameful conduct are not wanting. In his eagerness to obtain relief from his pecuniary embarassment, he has been bartering his own vote and negotiating for the sale of the votes of other members, with reference to the Texas Pacific bill. It can be proved that Mr. Purman approached several members, informed them that the Texas Pacific people were willing to spend money to pass their bill, and requested them to join him in a combination to exact money for their votes on that measure. It is also said that he was in negotiation in Florida, prior to the canvass of the vote, with agents of Tilden for bribing the Returning Board. This Purman stated himself, but explained that he entered into the negotiation merely to prevent Tilden's agents from opening negotiations with other parties who, being less honest than Purman, would have made an assault on the board. Samuel B. McLin, a member of the Florida Canvassing Board, as long ago as Jan. 8 wrote to a gentleman here cautioning him against Purman. McLin, in his letter, said that Purman told him prior to the canvass that Tilden had too much money to be defeated, and that they should not stick with the Republican Party and lose the opportunity of doing something handsome for themselves. Such is the man who to-day as a Republican Representative, declared that Tilden carried the State of Florida. It is believed that in consideration for his speech the Democrats have agreed to place his name on the rolls of the Forty-fifth Congress as a member from Florida—that is, giving him a prima facie right to the seat, which will carry with it about one year's pay and mileage, even should the contestant be finally awarded the seat. Purman has been afraid that he would not be put upon the roll, and it is beyond question that this speech is made to secure the object above mentioned. This is the end of his career.

THE OREGON INIQUITY.

THE CASHIER OF TILDEN'S BANK TO BE COMPELLED TO TESTIFY REGARDING THE $8,000 DRAFT—THE GOBBLE DISPATCH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The Senate to-day spent a long time in the discussion of the third question whether the officers of the Third National Bank of New-York shall be compelled to show the Democratic accounts, particularly with reference to the money sent to Oregon. The Democrats feel greatly outraged by this proposition, though they saw nothing wrong in Field's committee getting Mr. Chandler's account. Senator Kelly was drawn into the discussion, and explained that the only money received in Oregon from New-York was the $8,000 about which so much has been said. There was some difficulty about getting this money, and duplicate drafts were made, which made it look as though $16,000 were received. Mr. Kelly says the $8,000 was changed into gold netting, $7,300. Of this, $6,200 had been expended, including the $3,000 paid to Cronin, which Kelly intimated was in his opinion more than the service was worth. It was decided that the Cashier of the Third National Bank should be called.

Senator Mitchell has secured the dictionary key to the "Gobble" cipher dispatch. The interpretation is substantially that which has been published. By it Grover is recorded to have said that he would decide in favor of the Democrats, and afterward he went through the farce of a hearing in the case and a pretended consideration of it.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

Watts, the alleged ineligible Elector from Oregon, has returned to this city from the West, in view of objections being raised to the counting of the vote of Oregon as cast by the Republican Electors, on the ground of Dr. Watts being ineligible at the time the Electoral vote was cast, as well as at the time of his election. He will remain here for the purpose of giving testimony before the Electoral Commission when the Oregon case shall come before that body.

MR. FIELD'S COMMITTEE.

A LITTLE SCHEME OF THE REDOUBTABLE NEW-YORK BARRISTER FOILED BY JUDGE LAWRENCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—David Dudley Field's committee continues to investigate the Louisiana case, with even less success than attended them at first. To-day a number of unimportant witnesses were examined, but no testimony of interest was elicited. Mr. Field was at his old tricks again, however, and seemed to be very much astonished when one of his little schemes was discovered and stopped. He had another pet witness to-day—a waiter—who he stated could testify to a conversation which he had overheard between Gov. Wells and the clerk, Littlefield, while they were at dinner in the restaurant where he served. Unfortunately, however, he could not speak English well, and Field wanted him to give his testimony through a French interpreter, who would, of course, be under no oath to give a true translation. Judge Lawrence objected to this, saying very pointedly that if the French waiter understood English well enough to comprehend the conversation which had been carried on between Gov. Wells and Littlefield he understood enough to testify in English. The objection was sustained amid considerable laughter, and Mr. Field's waiter was obliged to tell his story in a language which was understood by all present.

ELECTION-DAY LAWLESSNESS.

REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL REGARDING THE EMPLOYMENT OF DEPUTY MARSHALS AT THE POLLS — LAWLESSNESS AND INTIMIDATION IN SEVERAL STATES — THE NUMBER OF MARSHALS EMPLOYED—GREAT FRAUDS PREVENTED IN THE CITIES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—In the Senate to-day the President pro tem. presented a communication from the Attorney General in reply to the resolution of the Senate of Dec. 12, adopted on motion of Mr. Bayard, directing him to communicate the information in regard to the employment of Deputy Marshals throughout the United States in connection with the election held on the 7th of November last. The Attorney General states that the several Marshals give in their reports the reason for the appointment of deputies, and the results of their employment. These were made generally on the application of citizens, who believed it necessary to the security of voters. He refers to the act of Congress on which his instructions to the Marshals were based. They constituted in no case a military order, but embodied a posse comitatus. The only difference between the exercise of the power of the Sheriff or Marshal in calling out civilians and that of calling out soldiers is that in the latter case, when soldiers are organized under the command of officers they are called in their organized form with their officers. The number of Marshals appointed in Alabama was 150, with 125 voting precincts; in Arkansas, Eastern District 785, with 381 precincts; Western District 214, with 16 counties; in California 244, with 56 precincts; in Delaware 135, with 10 precincts in Florida, Northern District, 745, with 19 counties; in Georgia, Northern District, 155 in 1 county; Southern District, 52 in 1 county; in Illinois, Northern District, 113 in 81 counties; in Louisiana, 840 in 120 precincts; in Maryland, 1,302 in 115 precincts; in Massachusetts, 117 in 25 counties; in Mississippi, Northern District, 239 in 65 counties; in Missouri, Southern District, 1,028 in 90 voting places; in New-Jersey, 249 in 66 precincts; in New-York, 3,565 in 895 precincts; in North Carolina, 178 in 176 precincts; in Pennsylvania, 347 in 237 precincts; in South Carolina, 338 in 17 precincts; in Texas, 1 to each precinct, and, in Virginia, 201 in 35 precincts. In the remaining States very few deputies were appointed. There were a total of 2,737 voting places at which the attendance of 11,615 deputies was had.

The Marshal of Florida reports that in addition to his regular force he appointed 745 general deputies. There were 75 in Escambia County, 50 each in Jackson, Gadsden, Leon, Jefferson, Madison, Columbia, and Alachua, and small numbers in the other counties, including 10 in Baker County. The Marshal says with the exception of Jackson County nearly every portion of the State was peaceful and orderly, but in that county his efforts to secure a fair election were an entire failure.

The Louisiana Marshal's report merely states that 849 deputies were appointed, that they were equally divided among 120 precincts; that 750 of them served for one day, and the remainder from two to 14 days each.

The Marshal of South Carolina reports that 79 deputies were distributed to 17 precincts in the City of Charleston, and important precincts throughout the State, but he says in many counties men could not be found who were willing to incur the personal danger of attempting to preserve the peace around the polls, and to protect colored Republican voters from the intimidation and violence of the Democrats. Emissaries from Mississippi had visited all parts of the State, denouncing the Democratic organizations. A Republican majority in that State had been overcome, and what was termed the "shot-gun" or "Mississippi" policy was vigorously indorsed with telling effect against the Republicans. The Marshal, in the course of his long report concerning this state of affairs, says: "At a number of precincts the deputies were driven away without being allowed to vote themselves, and in several counties on the Savannah River (particularly in Edgefield) men who were voting the Democratic ticket boasted of being Georgians, and dared the authority of the Deputy Marshals." Similar reports as to the necessity of employing special deputies are inclosed by the Attorney General from the Marshals of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. The Marshal of the Northern District of Mississippi concludes his report as follows: "I am justified in saying that to have carried out the law at any voting precinct in my district would have cost the life of the officer executing it. Myself and deputies were subjected to repeated indignities, and threatened with arrest for interfering to discharge our duties at the hands of the members of the party claiming to possess all the intelligence, virtue, and patriotism of the country. I have, therefore, to report that I was powerless to check the lawlessness which swept over this State at and prior to the 7th day of November, 1876, a lawlessness so organized and concerted and urged by madness that it paralyzed justice and made human rights a mockery."

The Marshal for the Southern Mississippi District reports that his deputies generally performed the duties required, but that in one instance a special deputy was obliged to flee from Jefferson County for safety prior to the election.

The Georgia Marshal does not report any lawlessness as having occurred in that State on the day of the election, but says: "Without the protection of the United States laws, and the officers appointed under them, the colored voters complained, and I believe justly, that they were unable to cast their ballots freely and fully for the candidates of their choice."

The Marshal for the Southern District of Alabama states the causes for the employment of deputies to be "the almost total disregard of the rights of Republican voters by the class in possession of the ballot-boxes." He continues as follows: "Bribery and cajolery is first attempted to control the vote of the colored people. This failing, violence and intimidation are practiced. This failing, fraud and obicanery are resorted to, and ballots cast for Republican candidates in the morning come out for Democratic candidates in the evening."

The Delaware Marshal reports that before the election it was repeatedly and publicly announced by prominent Democratic leaders that the Enforcement acts of Congress were unconstitutional and void, and that no officer of the United States in the State had the right to interfere with the November election, which was, they asserted, wholly under the control of State officers. In the morning of the election, in the Tenth Ward of Wilmington, a man who voted illegally was arrested, and at once rescued from the custody of the deputies. A force of 20 deputies was at once dispatched to the scene of the violence, who found the Mayor at the polls, and that official immediately gave orders for the arrest of the deputies, and three of them were arrested and one badly beaten. About 11 A. M. an illegal voter was arrested at the Fourth Ward polls, and while being conveyed to the Court-house the Mayor personally attempted to rescue the prisoner, when he himself was arrested by the Marshal and taken to the Court-house. Great excitement prevailed, and finally an agreement was made with the United States Supervisor, the Marshal, and the Mayor, that the special deputies and special police should all remain at a little distance from the polls, that neither class of officers should arrest men unless the United States Supervisor or Inspectors of election directed it. About 3 o'clock this arrangement was broken; a man voted illegally in the Fourth Ward; he was arrested by two Deputy Marshals and rescued by the Police, and four of the Deputies arrested; after some parley, the deputies were released, and from 3 to 5 P. M. the polls closed. There was a constant conflict of authority, the Police interfered with the Deputy Marshals, and rescued prisoners whenever and wherever they could muster sufficient force.

The Marshal of the Northern District of New-York states that the duties of the Deputy Marshal chiefly consisted in being present at the places of registration, where they were directly instrumental in preventing a great deal of illegal voting by a thorough personal scrutinty of the registry lists. In the Southern District of that State, the Marshal reports that the service of the deputies averaged one day to each man, and the causes and necessity for their employment were the excited condition of public feeling in connection with electing a President of the United States, the large fraudulent registration and naturalization, and the well-founded apprehension of serious disturbances occurring at the polling places. In the Eastern District the usual interest manifested in the election, and the great excitement, necessitated the appointment of a large force of Deputy Marshals in several districts of the two great cities. They were called upon to preserve the peace and assist in making arrests.

The Marshal of Pennsylvania reports that the Deputy Marshals employed in the Western District of the State were required to keep the peace at the polls and see that every man entitled to vote should have that privilege accorded him.

The Maryland Marshal reports that the outrages and frauds committed at the polls in Baltimore City at the election for Governor, in 1875, where voters were shot at and driven from the polls, produced such a state of terror that very many people, both white and colored, declared that they would be afraid to go to the polls on the 7th of November, 1876, unless protection by the United States authorities could be guaranteed to them, while others were afraid that by frauds in registration, and also on election day, they would be cheated of their votes if they ran the risk of making the attempt to vote against the regular Democratic ticket. These opinions were so generally and freely expressed that the Marshal felt it his duty to do all in his power legally to prevent fraud at the registration and election, and to secure protection to every voter in his effort to deposit his ballot. The result was that the election was very quiet. The duties required were to aid the Supervisors of Registration in preventing and detecting fraud, in keeping order at the places of registration, and to preserve the peace at the polls on election day and prevent fraudulent voting.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The investigation by the Treasury Department into the exaction of heavy fees for the collection of unclaimed interest, which practice has been going on for four or five years, will culminate to-morrow in the arrest of a New-York claim agent, and of a clerk in the office of the First Auditor. At least $50,000 have been collected through the connivance of this official and the New-York agent. The department does not yet consider it advisable to give their names.

Manton Marble published a card in the Daily Union of this morning denying certain statements of Representative Frye made in the House of Representatives. He says: "First, there were no New-York politicians in Tallahassee at the time mentioned by Mr. Frye; second, Attorney General Cocke never agreed to throw out the vote of Monroe County; third, Attorney General Cocke never voted to throw out the vote of Monroe County; fourth, nobody ever proposed, and no member of the Canvassing Board ever agreed, or ever voted, to throw out the vote of Monroe County." He says: "When the two Republican members of the State Canvassing Board of Florida had completed their share of the shameful partisan fraud which has now reversed the verdict of the people of Florida—a fraud denounced by the Executive, the Legislature and the Judiciary of that State in every possible way—it was perceived that the process of fraud had been worked out mainly in four counties. They took away 1,500 votes from the Tilden Electors and 500 votes from the Hayes Electors, a ratio of about 1,000 to the Hayes Electors, which was ten times more than enough to overbalance the actual majority of 86 which the lower Tilden Elector had over the higher Hayes Elector, as shown upon the face of the returns."

Gen. Sherman and Secretary Cameron have gone to New-York, to be absent until Saturday.

Ensign George K. Peters is ordered to the Ranger; Ensign Charles W. Haskell to the Trenton; and Mate William Janny to the Navy-yard, Boston. Lieut. THE NEW-JERSEY CENTRAL.

AN APPLICATION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER TO BE HEARD BY THE CHANCELLOR TO-DAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Feb. 13.—Rumors gained currency in this city this morning that an application would be made to-day for the appointment of a Receiver for the New-Jersey Central, and at 10 o'clock, when the Court of Chancery opened, John Taylor Johnston and others interested in the railroad put in an appearance in the Chancellor's Chambers. Ex-Chancellor Williamson, Attorney General Vanatta, Thomas N. McCarter, of Newark, and other lawyers who are to figure in the case, awaited an opportunity all day to have the matter heard by the Chancellor. At 6 o'clock a whispered conference was held with the Court, the result of which was ascertained to be that the Chancellor will not hear the application to-night, but set down the hearing for to-morrow morning at 9:30 o'clock.

HACKENSACK RAILROAD TROUBLES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Feb. 13.—The old Hackensack Railroad Company gave a first mortgage bond on its road for $100,000 in 1867. It was subsequently consolidated with the Haverstraw extension, the name of the consolidated companies being the New-York and New-Jersey Road. The consolidated roads passed into the hands of Receivers. The $100,000 bonds became due on Jan. 1, and were not paid. This morning Garret Aohersou, Trustee for the mortgagees, applied to the Chancellor for the appointment of a special Receiver to collect the mortgage. He claimed that the lien of the mortgage on so much of the road as was owned by the Hackensack Company was not impaired by the subsequent consolidation. Chancellor Williamson resisted the application. The Chancellor ordered the Receivers to keep their accounts so as to show the amount due the Hackensack Road; that a Master be appointed to ascertain the amount which should be paid the old company, and that the Receivers pay over such amount to the Trustee on account of the mortgage.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

ARGUMENT ON THE LOUISIANA CASE.

THE SECOND DISPUTED STATE REFERRED TO THE COMMISSION—SPEECHES OF MESSRS. M'DONALD AND JENKS, THE DEMOCRATIC OBJECTORS, AND MESSRS. HURLBUT AND HOWE ON THE REPUBLICAN SIDE—ARGUMENT BY DEMOCRATIC COUNSEL—A NIGHT SESSION—THE ARGUMENT TO BE CONCLUDED TO-DAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The Electoral Commission resumed its labors this morning at 11 o'clock, all the members being present except Senator Thurman. It was known that he was seriously indisposed, and for a time it was believed that it would be necessary to adjourn the meeting until he could be present. He arrived shortly after the opening of the session, however, and the business of the day was proceeded with. The court room was densely crowded, as it has been at all the sittings of the Commission, and among the audience were seated nearly all the well-known members of both Houses. The venerable Judge Campbell, of Louisiana, occupied a prominent place on the floor, appearing as one of the Democratic counsel. It will be remembered that the Judge at one time held a seat upon the Supreme Bench of the United States. He resigned to cast his fortunes with the South.

After Senator Thurman's arrival this morning, Mr. Justice Clifford announced that the Commission would take up the consideration of the Louisiana case, and the two objectors on either side should have one hour each to present their arguments. Senator McDonald and Representative Jenks appeared on the part of the Democrats, and Senator Howe and Representative Hurlbut on behalf of the Republicans. Senator McDonald was the first speaker. He said that he and his associates and his party objected to the counting of the Hayes certificates, known as certificates numbers one and three, for five reasons. The first objection was that the Legislature of Louisiana did not provide for the appointment of Electors; second, the Hayes Electors were fraudulently returned as elected by the officers who were charged with the canvass and count of the vote; third, that two of the Hayes Electors were incompetent, under the Constitution of the United States, to serve in the capacity named; fourth, that others of the Hayes Electors were disqualified by the Constitution of the State; and, fifth, that at the time of their appointment Louisiana was not enjoying a republican form of government. Upon this somewhat remarkable foundation Senator McDonald built a very flimsy superstructure of words which would not be dignified with the name of an argument, and which certainly did not prove that any of the objections advanced by him and his party were well founded, either in law or in fact. He contended at great length that the Louisiana Election law of 1872 superseded and took the place of all laws previously passed, and that under it there was no provision for the appointment of Electors; that by its provisions all Electors had to be chosen at a popular election. Senator McDonald did not explain what his object was in making this statement, but it is presumed that he intended by it to show that the Electors Brewster and Levisse, who, because they held Federal offices at the time of the election, did not meet with the college, and who were appointed to fill the vacancies caused by their own absence, were not eligible to such appointment, and that such appointment was not legal. Mr. McDonald next referred to the constitution of the Returning Board and its action in throwing out the votes of certain polls and precincts. He repeated, with much noise and bluster, the old and long since exploded argument that there should have been five members of the board, who should represent all political parties, and that as there were only four members upon it at the time the votes for Electors were counted, their action was void and illegal. Referring to and misquoting the report made by Messrs. Hoar and Frye, as members of the Congressional committee that visited New-Orleans two years ago, he stated that the vote of Louisiana was not counted in 1872, not because there had not been an honest election in that year, but because the Returning Board had not been properly constituted, and because it had not acted in conformity with law. After attacking the members of the board in a way which was neither justified nor called for, and denouncing as a fraud their action in declaring the State for Hayes, Senator McDonald turned his attention to the Commission, and in not very choice language warned the gentlemen who composed it that they were watched by the whole country, and that they should do their duty without fear or favor. After this Mr. McDonald sat down amid a somewhat amiable smile occasioned by his rude and injudicious attack upon the Tribunal whose favor he was trying to gain.

Mr. Jenks was the next speaker. He commenced by going over the worn-out Democratic buncombe about truth, justice, and the universal rights of man. Then he succeeded in repeating a number of figures of speech which he had evidently carefully committed to memory. Referring to the refusal of the Commission to go into the evidence in the Florida case, he broke into a somewhat wild flight of eloquence. "If," said he, "if the Governor of Louisiana had been taken on board a ship by a party of pirates and compelled to sign the certificates of a set of rascals for the position of Electors, would it not be the duty of this Commission to go into an investigation of the matter. How much more, then," continued Mr. Jenks, "is it the duty of the Commission to investigate the acts of a set of insidious scoundrels, worse than pirates, who, under false pretenses, had secured to the Republican Electors the certificates of Gov. Kellogg." After this outburst Mr. Jenks went into a discussion of the Louisiana election laws, referring particularly to the provisions for the filing of protests, and claiming that these provisions had not been complied with by the local and parish election officers. He then went through a list of the parishes where, he claimed, the law had not been complied with, naming among others East Baton Rouge, Ouachita, and the Feliciannas. He did not state, however, that by the murder of a score or so of American citizens, the whipping and outraging of hundreds more, at least 4,000 votes in those parishes were suppressed and never went to the polls. He concluded by a long argument in which he tried to show that the Electors, Brewster and Levisse, were not eligible to the positions named.

Representative Hurlbut next spoke on behalf of the Republicans, appearing as an objector to the counting of the Tilden vote, certified to by the pretender McEnery. He argued very clearly that no man could cast a vote as Elector unless he had received a certificate from the chief magistrate of the State in which he had been elected. In the case of Louisiana it was a vital question which of the two gentlemen signing the rival certificates sent to the President of the Senate, was, in fact and law, the Governor of the State. Then there could be no question that Mr. Kellogg was that man. He had been repeatedly acknowledged as Governor, both by the President of the United States, by the two houses of Congress, and by the capitalists of the world who held many millions of dollars' worth of the bonds of Louisiana signed by his hand. Mr. McEnery could certainly lay no claim to that position, for by the terms of the Wheeler compromise he and his party had given up all the idle pretensions in that direction which they at one time held or professed to hold. If Kellogg was Governor, McEnery consequently was not. The importance which was to be attached to any certificate was to be attached to those signed by Gov. Kellogg. After referring to the fact that in 1873 the Supreme Court of Louisiana decided that it could not go behind the action of the duly constituted Board of Canvassers, Mr. Hurlbut argued that this decision should be accepted as a safe precedent, and that the Commission should refuse to examine any other evidence than that submitted with the certificates. In conclusion he referred to the strictures upon the Commission and the Returning Board which had been made by Messrs. McDonald and Jenks, and held that it was highly improper for gentlemen speaking in such a presence to make use of expressions which implied, even remotely, that the Commission would not act with strict justice and fairness to all parties, to all men, and to the people of the United States. Every menace which had been uttered against the Commission was in accord with the very spirit of intimidation, that very "bulldozing," so to speak, of which the Republicans of Louisiana complained.

Senator Howe closed the argument on the part of the Republicans. He referred to the charges of fraud which had been made by the Democrats against the Returning Board, and said he would like some gentleman who was familiar with the matter to tell him what fraud could be so great as McEnery's claim that he was Governor of Louisiana, and was authorized to sign certificates of election if Kellogg was Governor, which Mr. Howe, with all the rest of the world, claimed he was. Why, his right to the office had never been attacked by any tribunal or body, other than the White League. Senator Howe then went into an exhaustive discussion of the manner in which the last election was conducted by the Democrats in Louisiana, referring particularly to the reign of terror which had been established by the Tilden agents in the parish of Ouachita.

At the close of his address, Mr. Carpenter, on behalf of the Democratic counsel, asked that the time for arguments be extended to six hours on a side. Mr. Evarts said he could see no necessity for this extension, and pending the discussion of the question, the Commission took a recess for three-quarters of an hour. When they reassembled it was announced that the time would be extended to four hours and a half on each side, and then a further recess was taken until 5 o'clock, with the understanding that the Commission should sit till 9.

A NIGHT SESSION WITH CANDLES.

The Electoral Commission made an unsuccessful attempt at progress with the arguments this evening. The time of counsel was extended to four and a half hours on each side, on the understanding that there was to be a session of the Commission till 9 o'clock to finish four hours of the nine which the new grant of privileges provided for. The concluding five hours was to be taken to-morrow, so that the Commission could have the case on Thursday morning. Such a course would insure the decision of the Louisiana case before the end of the present week. The Commission met after recess at 5 o'clock, and Mr. Carpenter opened the Democratic argument. When the evening grew late the court-room presented a novel and picturesque scene. The room had not been used at night for many years, and perhaps not at all since the Senate met in it nearly 20 years ago. The Commission has had already one or two secret evening sessions, but to-night, for the first time, the public was admitted. There are no chandeliers, nor gas fixtures of any kind, and for light, about five dozen candles in as many painted tin candlesticks were scattered about the tables and along the desk, behind which the Commissioners are seated in a row, and three or four were set like beacons on the high shelf which serves the purpose of a reporter's gallery. The candles, of course, gave but a dim light, and the room abounded in deep shadows, as impenetrable as the Democratic revolutionists. Mr. Carpenter spoke till 6:20, and then complained of being unable to see, and of being made sick by the smoke of the candles, and he plead so tenderly with the Commission that a postponement was ordered till to-morow at 10 o'clock. Mr. Carpenter's excuse was probably valid enough, though he seems a healthy and rugged man, and quite able to endure as much as Senator Morton, Justice Bradley, and Justice Clifford, who are old and not very strong men, and they sat in the candle smoke till 9 o'clock not long since. The uncharitable suggest that Carpenter, who has about 40 minutes more to speak, has concluded his argument, and will spend the remaining time in making a display of oratorical pyrotechnics. This he desires to let off when the room is crowded, and there being but few persons present to-night, except the lawyers and the Judges, the time was not propitious, nor to his taste. Mr. Carpenter spent some time in attempting to explain to the Commission that they are a legislative body. He then quoted and expounded Louisiana State laws. He presented the case, and concluded that he did not care a fig what the decision of the Commission might be on the points made, because if they decided one way it would throw out all the Electoral votes, and if they decided the other way it would throw out two or three Hayes Electors, which he remarked would equally well answer the purposes of this case. Carpenter made a rather elaborate effort to show that Electors are Federal and not State officers. He was put in an unpleasant predicament by a question from Senator Edmunds as to the provisions of the Constitution that the President shall commission all officers of the United States. Carpenter flippantly disputed that there was such a provision, and when it was shown to him acknowledged that he did not know it, but still he adhered to his argument. In the beginning Mr. Carpenter took pains to declare that he did not appear as the counsel of Samuel J. Tilden. He had voted against him, and would vote against him again. He appeared as the counsel of 10,000 disfranchised citizens of Louisiana, for money, of course, though he did not say so. This is not the first time Mr. Carpenter has appeared as counsel for Louisiana people, disfranchised or otherwise. He is on record as having received $3,000 from Gov. Kellogg for services, the value of which is not stated. It is charged that the $3,000 was increased to $5,000, Carpenter being retained as Kellogg's counsel while the investigation of the State election was going on in the committee of which Carpenter was a member. Afterward, for some unexplained reason, Carpenter made a different report from what was expected, in which he undertook to have over half the people of Louisiana disfranchised. He did not mention these things in his speech, nor refer to sundry letters of his which would, it is said, upset his pretended anxiety about disfranchising 10,000 citizens of Louisiana.

It is the intention of the Commission, in spite of the forced adjournment to-night, to sit to-morrow till the arguments are concluded. There are seven hours and a half remaining, under the agreement to extend the time, but it is quite possible the Republican counsel will not use all the time to which they have the right. Only those points which relate to the ineligibility of Electors are regarded as needing much argument. The Democrats can gain nothing in any other part of their case, unless the ruling in the Florida case is reversed and evidence other than that sent to the Commission from the joint meeting be received. The Commission, no doubt, intended in the former decision to cover all the disputed States, and therefore the arguments of Carpenter and Trumbull will be more expensive than useful to the Democratic cause.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

The Electoral Commission convened at 11 A. M. to-day to hear the argument in the case of Louisiana. All the members were early in their places, with the exception of Senator Thurman, whose prolonged absence rendered it necessary to proceed without him. The minutes of the previous session were read.

Mr. Justice Clifford announced the three certificates that were before the Commission under objection. For convenience he said they had been numbered one, two, and three, and objectors to numbers one and three would first be heard.

Senator McDonald, for the Democratic side, before beginning, requested that the proceedings be delayed a few moments, until Senator Thurman could arrive, and inquired also as to the rule of the Commission in case of the absence of a member.

Mr. Justice Clifford replied that no rule was settled in regard to it, only in case of physical inability to attend measures may be taken to fill the vacancy.

Senator McDonald said he understood that Senator Thurman had been ill for some days.

Senator Edmunds said it did not seem to him that the Commission was justified in waiting in the absence of a single member of the Commission at the present stage of affairs. There were only 16 working days left in the month, and it seemed to him important and their duty to proceed. Of course, in case of the Senator's illness the vacancy must be filled, but without any evidence of his illness the Commission should proceed.

Senator Bayard here stated he had sent a message to the room of the committee of which Mr. Thurman was Chairman to inquire of the Clerk in reference to the Senator's absence.

Pending the interval that ensued while the messenger was on his way, Mr. Evarts, of counsel for the Republican side, called the attention of the Commission to certain laws of Louisiana which were not in the compilation before the court, and then the messenger arrived, bringing word that Mr. Thurman was suffering with neuralgia, but would attend during the day. The Presiding Justice then put the question whether the Commission should proceed, and, the question being carried, Senator McDonald was invited to express the views of the objectors to the certificates numbers one and three.

SPEECH OF SENATOR McDONALD.

Senator McDonald said:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMISSION: The certificates announced by the President as first under consideration embrace the Electoral votes cast for Hayes for President and Wheeler for Vice President. If the evidences contained in these certificates are the evidences provided for in the Constitution then they are to be counted. To constitute them the votes provided for in the Constitution they must have been cast by Electors who are competent and who have been appointed Electors in the manner prescribed by the Legislature of the State. The objections that were made to the evidences embraced in these certificates are, first, that the Legislature did not provide the manner of their appointment; second, that they were fraudulently returned by the officers entrusted with the canvass and return of the votes; third, that two of them were incompetent under the Constitution; fourth, that others of them were disqualified from acting by the Constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana; fifth, that at the time of their appointment the State of Louisiana did not have a Government republican in form. With respect to the laws of the State authorizing the appointment of Electors, I shall call the attention of the Commission to the statutes which have heretofore been enacted, and which are understood to stand still upon the statute books. It will be found in the Session Laws of 1868 that a special law was enacted for the appointment of Presidential Electors, and that this special law was re-enacted in the Revised Code of 1870.

The speaker then gave a detailed history of the legislation on the subjects of elections in Louisiana, showing that a revision of the statutes was in progress while laws were passing in the Legislature. Continuing, he said: These acts embraced in the revised statutes are the revision of the law compiled by authority of the Legislature, and to take effect by its will, and at the same session in which it acted on revision it was passing laws. Its session acts were from day to day considered and passed by it, and in contemplation that there might be conflicts between these session acts and this revised code that was being prepared, they declared the force and effect of their session acts as well as with respect to those revised statutes; so it is not to be said that, when they passed, this act was restricting the operation and effect of the revised statutes, that notwithstanding that the revised statutes contained the last will of the Legislature made the last of April, or at a later period than the passage of this law, I have not time to elaborate this proposition, and can but state it for the consideration of the Commission; but if it had the effect which the law of the Legislature desired that it should have, the act of 1850 then went upon the statute book as the election law of 1870, and provided the mode and manner which the State designed to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution with reference to her right and authority to appoint Electors. If the section of that law to which I have called your attention fully covers this question, and in point of fact it was so considered by the authorities of the State of Louisiana, and when the election for the appointment of Electors in 1872 took place, the election took place under the special acts of 1870, both of election and the returns. The act of 1868, carried forward into the revised statutes, was ignored and the act of 1870 was the one regarded as in force, and was so regarded until the 20th day of November, 1872, when another act was passed. You will, perhaps, take notice of the fact, judicially, that at that time the Legislature of the State of Louisiana was not in session. The act had been passed at the previous session, but had not been signed by the Governor, and was not signed by him until the 20th of November, 1872. This he was authorized to do under the Constitution, and the law took effect from the date of his signature. The first section declares that the elections therein provided shall be styled the General Elections. The seventy-first section, which is the repealing clause, is as follows:

"That this act shall take effect from and after its passage, and all others on the subject of Election law be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

This unquestionably repealed the session act of 1870. It is an act on the same subject throughout, so far as the general elections of the State of Louisiana are concerned, but it omits to make any appointment of Electors. Section 29 is the only one that makes any reference to the subject of Presidential Electors. It is as follows:

"That in every year in which an election shall be held for Electors of President and Vice President of the United States, such an election shall be held at the time fixed by the act of Congress."

And it follows that such elections should be held under the provisions of this act. You will see by comparing this section with the one I have already quoted on the the session acts of 1870, that while it refers to Presidential Electors and their appointment it makes no provision, as the other act does, for their election or appointment. If the act of 1868 stood unaffected by the Legislature of 1870, then this section would leave something to apply to, but the Session laws of 1870 repeal the act of 1868. Then this act could not be held to apply, for there can be no question but what the act of 1870 in toto was repealed by this act of 1872. If the provisions had not been such as would bring them in genuine. If either fails to conform to the law of the land in those particulars, that is false. In reference to the McEnery certificate, or certificate No. 2, as it has been designated by the board, we claim and are prepared to prove that those Electors were elected in the manner prescribed by the State of Louisiana; second, we are prepared to prove that the Electors that are certified to by Mr. Kellogg were not elected in conformity with the laws of Louisiana. We are also prepared to prove that in pursuance of the statutes of the United States the one was elected on the 7th of November, and the other was not elected until the 6th of December, so; that affirmative law, in addition to the Constitution, will be in favor of counting certificate No. 2. We are also prepared to show that those who claim under certificate No. 2 voted and exercised their right of office on the day prescribed by law. That is a very essential point, and in this respect certificate No. 2 is in precise conformity with law. Certificates Nos. 1 and 3 lack, first, the qualifications that they are not elected in pursuance of the mode prescribed by the Legislature, and were not elected on the day prescribed by act of Congress. We propose to prove that the certificate, as signed by Gov. Kellogg, was procured through the fraudulent acts of the Returning Board. But it may be objected that we have no right to inquire into that. In Congress compelled to certify to what is known to be false, and to transmit it in history in that way? Has the State of Louisiana, Florida, or any other State the right to put in the food we all eat of, poison, and require us to eat it? The Government, until the votes are opened in the House, has no opportunity to know whether it is food or poison, and if a State violates the Constitution of the United States by force, we will call a million men to arms and crush her to the earth; but, if by fraud, we will take the poison and let the nation die. Is that true, or is it false? This nation is prepared to guard against fraud as she has force. Suppose the certificate of the Governor had been procured by a band of buccaneers sailing up the river to New-Orleans, who captured him and took him aboard and forced him to sign his name to the certificate—would you hesitate a moment to inquire into that? And if, instead of that, a band of more insidious scoundrels deceives him and induces him to sign it as certificate, does that render of the more sacred? Mr. Jenks claimed that the vote actually cast was in favor of Tilden Electors by a majority of 5,000 to 9,000. The papers that passed into the hands of the Returning Board were only ephemeral; they were not made records for preservation, and after they had passed into the hands of the board no one knew what became of them. The law provides no place for their preservation, and they are only used for the temporary purpose of canvassing. But there is recorded evidence by which you contest the veracity of the acts of this Returning Board. The only evidence preserved is that which the law directs. That the Commissioner of Election shall file his statement with the Supervisor of Registration in duplicate, and the Supervisor of Registration shall make his statement in duplicate, one finally passing to the Clerk of the court of the parish and the other to this Returning Board. That of the Returning Board is secretary, the other becomes a standing muniment of title. Then the only muniments of title that are placed on record in that a State are in the civil courts of record. But the result was changed in some way. It was changed so that a certificate was given by Gov. Kellogg and it was done by the excinding of 13,236 Democratic votes and 2,178 Republican votes, a difference of 11,653. It has already been elaborated before the Commission that where there is a protest filed, if the law be constitutional, there is power on the establishment of certain facts to exclude certain votes of certain polls. Now, this is a law conferring special jurisdiction, and is one where it must receive a strict construction. In order to obtain jurisdiction there must be a protest filed by the Supervisor of Registration, if there be any intimidation or fraud during the period of the registration. He has no power to file a protest with reference to violence or anything of the kind on election day—only during the registration and the revision of the registration. But the Commissioners of Election on election day may file protests because of fraud or violence. Now, if it be not shown by one of these parties there is no power to inquire concerning it, and if inquiry is made it is an usurpation, and, in addition to that, we will prove it is a fraud. Then, with this preliminary statement, and also this protest, there must be a duplicate in court in order that there may be a prosecution by the District Attorney, if there be any criminality attached. If there be no duplicate filed in court there is no jurisdiction. I may now state that, except in the Parishes of Bossier and Concordia, there was not a single protest in a single parish of Louisiana. The law of Louisiana requires that the parish officers shall be citizens of the State, and yet in Bossia Parish one man named Glover, who was appointed Supervisor of Registration in East Baton Rouge was a citizen of Misaissippi, and held two offices there until the 1st of January, 1876, whereas it requires one year's residence in Louisiana to become a citizen. He was appointed Supervisor of East Baton Rouge because it was known that that parish was becoming strongly Democratic. Clubs have been organized there in which there were from 500 to 700 colored voters, and it became necessary to put this parish under the charge of an approbriate Supervisor of Registration. This man filed no protest with the Clerk of the court, and none is found on file, and is so proved by this testimony. Then, this Supervisor of Registration of East Baton Rouge threw out 1,147 votes, making a change of 1,100 in that parish. That was before it came to the Returning Board. Mr. Jenks then enumerated the different parishes and gave a list of the number of votes thrown out in each, and then took occasion to call attention to this fact into consideration, that the acting Governor of the State is a Republican. He appoints the State Supervisor of Registration. He also appoints every Supervisor in the State and the Supervisors of registration appoint every Commissioner of Election in the State. The colored Supervisors of Registration were all Republicans. The general Republican; I believe there were one or two exceptions. Now, every single mistake that was made happened to go one way, and we suggest the possibility that there might be a design in it, because it seems to me conclusive evidence of design. If a claimant for an office has a right to come before this board and allege that he is elected, of course his opponent has a right to come and deny that allegation. We then find every element constituting a court, every judicial characteristic in all its particulars, and yet the Constitution says and the law of Louisiana says that all judicial powers shall be vested in certain courts, and that none shall be exercised by any other, and yet these parties claim that a certain man may come from the State and file a protest in the case, and I say that, if there was a protest by the officers that claim to be elected, there was no protest at all as contemplated by this act.

There are certain persons who are alleged to be disqualified. A. B. Leviase and O. M. Brewster who allege that disqualification under the Constitution of the United States. We will prove that Leviase was a Commissioner appointed by a certain court of the United States holding at the time of the election. We will prove that Mr. Brewster was Surveyor of the land district for the State of Louisiana. He swears himself that three or four days after the election he wrote a letter of resignation, asking that it might take effect as of the 4th of November. This was written on the 10th or 11th of November. It was received in Washington the 18th, and on the 23d he received a reply, accepting his resignation as of the 4th. Hence, on the day of the election he was disqualified from holding the office, and as we decided so promptly that, when the number is limited by the Constitution, it is our duty to decide equally promptly that the disqualification is binding equally upon us.

The disqualification of the Constitution does not extend to the officer alone, but goes down and pervades the whole country. The Elector who casts his vote for a disqualified person does the same as though he cast a blank vote, for he is as much bound by the Constitution as is the officer to be elected. The supreme fundamental law is binding every citizen, from the lower to the higher, and a disqualification made it equivalent to the absolute not voting for the party who threw a vote for a Constitutionally disqualified man. That is the view we take of that. Then, with reference to the other officers, we find that J. A. Birch was a State Senator from Louisiana. By the provisions of the Constitution of the State of Louisiana it is provided that no person shall hold any two offices under the said State, excepting those of Justice of the Peace and notary public. Mr. Birch was a State Senator prior to the election, and continued so, as we will prove, up to this date. By holding that which he held before then, the disqualifications of the State Constitution render the vote of a citizen and the vote of Birch the same as if not cast. He was not elected even if he had a majority of votes. Morris Marks, another of the Electors was, prior to the election, District Attorney for the district in which the Parish of St. Tamee is and continues to hold down to this date. He is disqualified by the Constitution of the State. We will also show that Oscar Jefferson was Supervisor of Registration from Point Coupee Parish. He is disqualified by the Constitution of the State, and also disqualified by this present enactment; because, in the Registration law, section 13, you will find that a Supervisor of Registration is expressly disqualified from being a candidate for any office voted for during the time of his officiating as Supervisor of Registration. The proviso is that no Supervisor of Registration, appointed under this act, no clerk of such Supervisor of Registration shall be eligible to any office of election when such officer officiates. So there is an express statute disqualification with reference to him, and we will prove that he was acting or connected clear through as Supervisor of the election of the Parish Point Coupee. We will show that in addition to this, prior to the meeting of the Returning Board, there was a telegram sent by John Ray, who was the attorney for the Returning Board, and went through all its sessions, public and private, in which he makes the following statement:

J. R. West, Washington.

That is dated Nov. 16, before the Returning Board met, showing that the attorney whom they selected to discharge the functions of their advisor, stated in advance that five districts were to be thrown out. We will corroborate that by predictions made from another source. On the 17th of November, 1876, J. R. G. Pitkins United States Marshal, telegraphs to J. R. West: "Our Northern friends stand firmly by us. The Returning Board will hold its own." This shows that there was no reliance on the votes of the people, but their hopes centred in the Returning Board. Then the attention of the board was called to the fact that it was their duty to fill the board and to deliver them from suspicion. Everybody knew that prior to this these man had been guilty of doing dishonest acts with reference to the election. The law was laid before them, and admitted it was the law. but submitted that they could regard or disregard a directory law as they pleased. Their attention was also called to the fact with reference to making their compilations from the statements of votes. They made in violation of the law their returns from the Supervisors of Registration, and thereby threw out the whole Parish of Grant, and excluded the statements which were not returned by the Supervisors of Registration, by which they made 2,000 difference in their action. History will judge and will know the truth, and we are asking now the simple truth, that the great moral law of the universe may be permitted to shine upon this transaction and clear out all this pollution, and let our country be free from the disgrace of being poisoned by the act of this vile Returning Board.

SPEECH OF MR. HURLBUT.

Mr. Hurlbut followed. He said: Mr. President I wish that my mind could be relieved of the difference of opinion expressed by the several members who objected in advance of me, and the important question could be determined either, as claimed by Senator McDonald, that this is a judicial tribunal, or, as claimed by Mr. Jenks, of the House, that it is a legislative tribunal. The judicial power is limited by the Constitution and you certainly possess not that. The legislative power is equally limited by the Constitution and you certainly possess not that. I apprehend that the duty of this Commission is to determine the laws as a committee—if I may call it so—appointed by the two houses to determine upon certain questions which have arisen with regard to this Presidential election, and that this committee, or this Commission, is supposed to pass upon these questions in conformity to well-settled and regularly-established principles, and not at all in conformity to any vague suggestion of matter which is before the record, which is among the things committed to you by the Vice President, and which already, if I understand the decision of the Commission, are barred by the decision made in the Florida case. Now, I am here in the discharge of a duty that has been cast upon me, to do two things, to object to the papers known as "No. 2"—the McEnery certificate. That may be done, as I understand it in two ways: First, by showing that the certificate itself is not good; second, by showing that McEnery himself is not Governor. That is an attacking process to the certificate and to the title of the man who gives it. Again the attack may be made just as well by supporting by law and the evidence the existence and legal effect of the other counter certificate, purporting to be given by William P. Kellogg, and the establishment of the Government to the satisfaction of this Committee and of the world that William P. Kellogg is and was, at the time when that certificate was given, the only legal and recognized Governor in the State of Louisiana. Fortunately there is an abundance of proof upon that question. There is no Governor that has held office in these United States that is so abundantly bolstered up by proof of his existence as a Governor. Here Mr. Hurlbut stated the many ways in which Kellogg had been recognized as Governor of Louisiana—by the State itself, by the President, by the Senate and the House of Representatives. Continuing he said: The committee of the House known as the Louisiana Committee, which has been referred to by Mr. Jenks in his argument, reported certain resolutions. On the Journal of the House of Representatives, page 603 of the session 1874-5, this resolution appears:

Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg be recognized as the Governor of the state of Louisiana until the end of the term of office fixed by the Constitution of that State.

That resolution was adopted by a vote of 165 to 89. Among those voting for it, of which Mr. Waeeler and Mr. Hoar were members, were anxious, as all true men ought to be, to put an end to the bad state of things which confessedly prevailed then in Louisiana, and to that end they undertook, at the request of those parties (John McEnery, the contesting Governor, being one), to make an award which was to be carried out by certain changes by resignations on the one side, and putting into office on the other, in the Legislature of that State. That award was made by them, and in pursuance of that award the Legislature of Louisiana passed a resolution by which they agreed that the tenure of office of William Pitt Kellogg, during the time for which he had been elected, and until his successor should be appointed should not in any way be interfered with by that Legislature of the State of Louisiana in consideration of this award. Now, I will come back first to the question of his election. In 1872 the contest was between the McEnery and William Pitt Kellogg for Governor. Gov. Warmoth, who undertook to manipulate more things than he could carry, endeavored to complicate the matter by breaking up the legal Board of Returning Officers which existed under the act of 1870, and to create a board of creatures of his own, so that in fact at that election of 1872 there were two conflicting boards of Returning Officers of Election, one of them known as the Lynch Board and the other as the former board. Now, the court of the State of Louisiana has settled that question. The Supreme Court, in the twenty-fifth annual reports, in the case of The State ex rel. Attorney General against Wharton and others, renders this decision on page 14: "It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the Board of Returning Officers composed, &c., &c., was the legal Returning Board of the officers of election in Louisiana." And that was the board by whose certificate of election Kellogg derived his title.

Now, if it be true that William Pitt Kellogg was Governor of the State of Louisiana on the 6th of December, 1876, it is manifestly true that John McEnery was not, and whatever virtue or value in the way of evidence this Commission may attach to the certificate of a Governor must be given to the Governor, who, by election, recognition, and all other steps known to the law, was at the time actual Governor, and not to a mere pretender who retired from that contest by his own will in 1874, and has not in any way undertaken to assert or exercise any possible control over the office of Governor of that State from that day to this.

Again, I call the attention of the committee to the peculiar wording of the certificate given by McEnery. He was careful as far as he could not to commit himself to a statement of essential fact as appearing by evidence. This is a certificate that, "the following is a true and correct list of the names of the Electors of President and Vice President of the United States for the next ensuing regular term of the regular offices thereof, being the Electors duly and legally appointed by and for the State of Louisiana, having each received a majority of the votes cast for Electors in the election of the State of Louisiana, held in accordance with law, this certificate being furnished, as directed by law, by the executive authority of the State of Louisiana." There is no record there of any source known to the law from which he derives his recognition. There is no reference to any returns on file in his office, because he had no office. He had no returns. He had no Secretary of State. He had no man in all Louisiana who would come forward and verify the seal of the State and the signature of the Governor, by signing, "By the Governor; So-and-so, Secretary of State." Now, this brings me to consider what are the evidences that ordinarily, in the regular course of law in all cases of elections, come up before a canvassing or determining tribunal? Does any one contend for a moment that this Commission either has the power, the authority, or the means, or time to purge the election in Louisiana; to pass through the whole system as it was displayed there on the 7th day of November; to examine into every roll, or even to read that mass of balderdash under the name of evidence that is sent up here and half of which is not unprinted? Is it not true that this Commission is exercising, to a certain extent, a political, not a judicial power, and that you are exercising it as all political bodies, determining bodies, pass upon elections, not upon the very facts that may be taken place away down to the remotest poll in the different parishes, but upon the regular returns of the officers constituted for that purpose and sent forward to it. Now, it was stated, and stated correctly by the distinguished counsel who argued another case before this tribunal, [Mr. Mathews,] that an elaborate system consists of certain steps moving forward. Now, where you have a community in which general education is diffused, and in which there is a general desire to maintain fair dealing and support the law—as prevails fortunately in most of the States of this Union; but unfortunately not in Louisiana—then the election processes begin from the bottom, then commences in the community the lowest possible subdivision of political power, and the people themselves are fit to be trusted, and ought to be trusted, with the power of determining in those little local communities, under the inspection of their neighbors, who shall be judges of their election. So we have and we can have judges of election, and from that basis the election processes go up by returns from township to county, from county to district, from district up to the State Canvassing Boards, and in every one of those processes the subordinate tribunals—every one of them election tribunals—have and exercise the power properly meant by the power of making returns. They are Returning Officers. In Louisiana there has been a deliberate, settled, persistent resolution to crush out by violence and force all those things, no matter what they were, which stood in the way of the party that sought to make itself dominant by force, when it was not dominant by numbers; and thus the Legislature commenced in 1868 by first creating a sort of Returning Board, consisting of the Governor and certain officers, and using a Judge for the purpose of determining these facts of intimidation, and having constituted them Judges they make them the final judge and the only tribunal which has the right to give a prima facie certificate of election for all elections held in the State, and the question gravely resolves itself back to this: Whether the Presidential election of 1876, in which certain persons were chosen as Electors was an election held within the State of Louisiana. If it was, then these men have jurisdiction. Now, the election of Electors in Louisiana stands upon two statutes. There is one statute in the Revised Code, which is on the question of elections, which makes the provision that in every year (section 14, p. 110) in which an election shall be held for Electors such election shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, and such election shall be held and conducted in the manner and form provided by law for general and State elections. Now, there is another law in the Revised Statutes, on page 551, section 2,823. It is simply a repetition of section 1,410, and section 2,824 proceeds to direct the manner in which they shall vote, and sections 2,826 and 2,827 and others relate to a special mode of return provided by that law. Now, I apprehend that in considering the effect of statutes that are claimed to repeal the one or the other, the first question is as to what the probable intent and meaning of the Legislature was. No man pretends that it was the probable intent and meaning or purpose of the Legislature of Louisiana to repeal the right of the people to cast their votes for Electors for President and Vice President. Why? Because it is inconsistent with the actual state of things that has prevailed since that time; for there has been a Presidential election held since that in 1872, and held, by the same process of voting by the people. There has been a Presidential election held in 1876, and that held in the same manner and by the same process of ascertaining the choice of the people in the matter of appointment of Electors, so that the construction to be derived by the name of the Government itself is against the theory of repeal. And, besides, there comes in another great principle of interpretation, that laws repeal only so much of the preceding law as is inconsistent with the one to be enacted, and hence it has been held in practice in Louisiana, and undoubtedly is the clear law of the case, that the repealing act of 1870-2 creating this Returning Board, only interfered with the act in regard to Presidential Electors so far as to do away with the special tribunal provided under that prior act and to submit that election and all other elections held in that State to the ordinary arrangements and action of this Board of Returning Officers. Now, I may perhaps be pardoned in saying that, whatever may be the amplitude of the power committed by these statutes, under the will of the people of Louisiana, to this Board of Returning Officers, whatever may be the peril—and I can see it—of giving so large a jurisdiction to any board, the thing which was behind it and the cause of it, the cause of the enactment, is infinitely worse, and deserves the condemnation of every man who loves his country and believes in the rights of the down trodden and the oppressed. For I say here, from some knowledge and from the facts and the investigation, that the history of Louisiana since the reconstruction has been nothing more nor less than a series of deliberate attempts to overthrow existing law by force; that the old Anglo-Saxon method, by which existing evils are corrected in the form of law, never seems to have entered into the mind or imagination of that rash, rash, and imperious people; they have adopted rather the Latin form that their neighborhood to Mexico would induce—sounding pronunciamentos, revolution, followed up by forced loans upon the commerce and industry of the country, to support in illegal and irregular armed force in breaking down that which the Constitution and the laws give to the people of that State, and therefore the board with all its powers came into existence. Mr. Hurlbut then argued that the Commission could not go behind the action of the board.

SENATOR HOWE'S ADDRESS.

Senator Howe then addressed the Commission on behalf of the Republican objectors. He said:

I am somewhat mortified, having been assigned to speak in support of Objection No. 4, to find how very small a thing it is. But we respectfully object that you shall not count the votes tendered by McEnery and his associates. First, because you have no evidence that they were directed by the Legislature of Louisiana to vote for President, and you ought to have such evidence before you receive them. The statutes of the United States require you to have it. No man can have his vote as Elector counted for President and Vice President unless his right so to vote is certified by the Governor of the State. These gentlemen who adjure you to accept this vote considered here by McEnery do not seek to derogate from the authority of the United States at all. Their effort is, you find, to elevate John McEnery himself to the dignity of Governor of Louisiana, and so you find him certifying as Governor of that State to the authority of that Board of Electors as to which you find him to be Governor by name. There is a practical difficulty which imperils the success of that effort, and it is this: John McEnery was not in November last and never was Governor of Louisiana. How do we know that? Why, simply because we are rational beings and as such we are now bound to know that he was not, and part which was to be carried out by certain changes by resignations on the one side, and putting into office on the other, in the Legislature of that State. That award was made by them, and in pursuance of that award the Legislature of Louisiana passed a resolution by which they agreed that the tenure of office of William Pitt Kellogg, during the time for which he had been elected, and until his successor should be appointed should not in any way be interfered with by that Legislature of the State of Louisiana in consideration of this award. Now, I will come back first to the question of his election. In 1872 the contest was between the McEnery and William Pitt Kellogg for Governor. Gov. Warmoth, who undertook to manipulate more things than he could carry, endeavored to complicate the matter by breaking up the legal Board of Returning Officers which existed under the act of 1870, and to create a board of creatures of his own, so that in fact at that election of 1872 there were two conflicting boards of Returning Officers of Election, one of them known as the Lynch Board and the other as the former board. Now, the court of the State of Louisiana has settled that question. The Supreme Court, in the twenty-fifth annual reports, in the case of The State ex rel. Attorney General against Wharton and others, renders this decision on page 14: "It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the Board of Returning Officers composed, &c., &c., was the legal Returning Board of the officers of election in Louisiana." And that was the board by whose certificate of election Kellogg derived his title.

Now, if it be true that William Pitt Kellogg was Governor of the State of Louisiana on the 6th of December, 1876, it is manifestly true that John McEnery was not, and whatever virtue or value in the way of evidence this Commission may attach to the certificate of a Governor must be given to the Governor, who, by election, recognition, and all other steps known to the law, was at the time actual Governor, and not to a mere pretender who retired from that contest by his own will in 1874, and has not in any way undertaken to assert or exercise any possible control over the office of Governor of that State from that day to this.

Again, I call the attention of the committee to the peculiar wording of the certificate given by McEnery. He was careful as far as he could not to commit himself to a statement of essential fact as appearing by evidence. This is a certificate that, "the following is a true and correct list of the names of the Electors of President and Vice President of the United States for the next ensuing regular term of the regular offices thereof, being the Electors duly and legally appointed by and for the State of Louisiana, having each received a majority of the votes cast for Electors in the election of the State of Louisiana, held in accordance with law, this certificate being furnished, as directed by law, by the executive authority of the State of Louisiana." There is no record there of any source known to the law from which he derives his recognition. There is no reference to any returns on file in his office, because he had no office. He had no returns. He had no Secretary of State. He had no man in all Louisiana who would come forward and verify the seal of the State and the signature of the Governor, by signing, "By the Governor; So-and-so, Secretary of State." Now, this brings me to consider what are the evidences that ordinarily, in the regular course of law in all cases of elections, come up before a canvassing or determining tribunal? Does any one contend for a moment that this Commission either has the power, the authority, or the means, or time to purge the election in Louisiana; to pass through the whole system as it was displayed there on the 7th day of November; to examine into every roll, or even to read that mass of balderdash under the name of evidence that is sent up here and half of which is not unprinted? Senator Howe then addressed the Commission on behalf of the Republican objectors. He said:

Again, I call the attention of the committee to the peculiar wording of the certificate given by McEnery. He was careful as far as he could not to commit himself to a statement of essential fact as appearing by evidence. This is a certificate that, "the following is a true and correct list of the names of the Electors of President and Vice President of the United States for the next ensuing regular term of the regular offices thereof, being the Electors duly and legally appointed by and for the State of Louisiana, having each received a majority of the votes cast for Electors in the election of the State of Louisiana, held in accordance with law, this certificate being furnished, as directed by law, by the executive authority of the State of Louisiana." Now, this brings me to consider what are the evidences that ordinarily, in the regular course of law in all cases of elections, come up before a canvassing or determining tribunal? Does any one cont fused. It was simply an investigation carried on by a partisan majority, handled for a purpose, and handled solely for the accomplishment of that purpose.

Mr. PURMAN, of Florida, favored the resolution of the majority, declaring the Tilden Electors duly elected. In the course of his remarks he said: I solicit the indulgence of the House while briefly calling attention to a certain class of men by whose labors and bravery the Republican Party in the South was first ushered into organized existence. At the close of the war, these men who changed the uniform of the soldier for the garb of the peaceful citizen, and cast their lot in the States their valor had saved to the Union. With energy and brain, and often with capacity, they embarked in various employments and pursuits, seeking that reward and respect which never fail to come to the honorable and enterprising citizen. Ties of friendship, of marriage, of success in business, and of permanent investment, fixed many of this class so that they became indissolubly linked with the fortunes or misfortunes of the communities and States in which their destiny was now cast. I refer to that class of heroic men commonly but erroneously called "carpet-bag politicians." This opprobrious epithet only came into political parlance after the adoption by a Republican Congress of a civil and political reconstruction policy for the South, and which, for a time, seemed likely to fail for lack of proper agency to execute it. As is well known, the soul of this policy was the legal recognition and enforcement of the political equality of the colored race. Against this scheme of reconstruction the hostility and prejudices of the whites in the South at once arrayed themselves, and with such a degree of intolerance that to be even friendly to the scheme was enough to call down a visitation of the severest ostracism. The colored race, whose rights in the reconstruction measures were the bone of contention, were entirely unable from want of knowledge and experience to carry into operation so vast a system. At this important juncture in the political history of the South, the Northern-born men as a class stepped out to the front, took hold of the machinery of reconstruction, and carried into successful execution what, without their direct agency, might have been the thwarted and discarded policy of a Republican Congress. Then were opened the vials of a pent up wrath upon the heads of this class of men, and since then language has been exhausted to put upon them words of bitterness, detestation and epithets to apply to them. But uninfluenced by all this unjust opposition, States were reconstructed on new and improved Constitutions, and the statutes abounded with the wholesome and progressive laws born of a Republican dispensation. The more enlightened, and prosperous era, the State of Florida never saw than that which is distinguished as her eight years of experience under the rule of the Republican Party. When the Republican Party assumed possession of the Government of Florida in 1868 the sum of $1 50 was found in the State Treasury, and the public credit on her State bonds was down to 20 cents on a dollar, while less than three months ago, when the State Government again changed hands and passed under the control of the Democracy, the retiring Republican officers turned over $145,000 in the Treasury, and with a credit on State bonds of 94 cents on the dollar. In 1868 there was not enough money in the State Treasury to buy matches for one school-house; now there are common schools established in every county, and $30,000 in cash belonging to the school fund was lately turned over by the Republican to the Democratic Treasurer. When the Presidential campaign of 1876 announced the Republican Party in the Southern States buckled on its armor and entered the field band in hand with its Northern ally—I mean the Northern wing of the Republican Party—determined to do valiant battle for its candidates and principles. Every where in the South we labored under some disadvantages and discouragements, more particularly under a really depressing spirit caused by the determined front of the Democracy everywhere, who now carried upon their banners the prestige of their victory in Mississippi. To counteract the silent power of this prestige it became necessary to put forth renewed exertions and to invoke renewed enthusiasm, and the efforts of these new auxiliaries we partly succeeded, though unaided by our ally in the North, to whom we appealed in vain for a few public speakers and from whom we could obtain not one dollar of assistance to help defray the legitimate expenses of the Presidential campaign. A simple statement will complete how much in achievement and in rascality is expected from Southern Republicans in national elections, and yet how studiously they are unaided in their campaign emergencies, and ignored in the hour of victory and possession. Can any one solve the political conundrum, why it is that Republican speakers will eloquently vibrate from Maine to Indiana, and from New-Hampshire to Maryland, and yet never put a foot across the Potomac River to help us in the Southern States to fight the same great battles for principle and country? Can any one tell the reason why not a Southern Republican why money was collected from office holders in the South, and then why not one dollar was contributed by any of our National Committees for campaign purposes in Florida? Is it any wonder, Sir, that the Republican Party has been growing weaker and weaker each year in the South, and all for want of fostering care and encouragement from our national party functionaries? Is it any wonder that both our leaders and masses are filled with disgust and demoralization when, before the election and during the campaign, they were compelled to hear the proposition grave and learned, whether a "solid South" should not be encouraged and be permitted as the safest issue upon which to rally or fire a "solid North," and upon which sectional excitement, "that red sea of trouble in which so many of our countrymen were swallowed up in civil war," our candidate should ride in triumph into the White House. Yes. Ask your fellow Republicans in the South to calmly commit suicide. "Ask the colored voters to suspend their exercise of suffrage, and calmly accept the consequences of a Democratic Government." Ask these encouraging favorites before the campaign has advanced far enough to scatter your paper calculations, and leave only blank wonderment in their places, and then if we decline, "more in sorrow than in anger," refuse to send us either speakers or assistance, look indifferently or not at all upon a brave band struggling single handed against a well organized and powerful political foe, but wage a useless war against impregnable Democratic fortifications in New-York and Indiana; and then, on the day after election nervously ask yourself what is the result of this haphazard campaign. Sir, they reorganized "the people," and this, Mr. Speaker, brings me to the gravamen of my remarks upon the subject, which I now take occasion to present to the reflection of my countrymen who believe that the purity and exactness of the ballot are the first foundations upon which to rear and preserve the liberty and stability of our constitutions.

I waited impatiently for the Special Committee on Florida to submit the report of their investigation to this House, and again I looked forward with a reasonable expectation that the Electoral Commission would decide to admit evidence, at least at least to satisfy the country as to what Electors were really elected by the people of Florida, but I find now the appropriate opportunity to state from my own knowledge the true condition of the Presidential vote in my State concerning which so much is involved in misunderstanding and controversy. The Republican Party in my State, with all its dissensions healed, and with the whole machinery of the State Government in its hands, went into the last campaign determined to win if our resources and efforts, coupled with the most heroic devotion on the part of our voters, could achieve such an end. With the exception of the most peaceful election ever held in the State, and not one case of violence or disturbance on election day has come to my knowledge. It seemed the peculiar privilege of the Republicans to win under all these advantageous circumstances; but it is a fact, to which I can appeal to every one who can deny, and which every man, woman, and child in my State knows, that Florida was lost by the Republican Party in the late election, and that the Democratic Governor and the Tilden Electors were truly elected. I make this declaration now under the most solemn sense of public duty, and from an irresistible feeling of obligation to the people of my State, who have a right to expect that however partisan their representative may be in his political faith, he should at least, on questions of public fact, be an honest man.

Mr. WOODBURN, of Nevada, (a member of the committee,) criticised the statement of Mr. [Mr. Purman] for characterising the Canvassing Board of Florida as a bold, unscrupulous, and dishonest set. The gentlemen composing that board would compare favorably with the gentleman from Florida, or with any member on the floor, and he wished to remind that gentleman that he had been canvassed into this House by the very same board and in the very same manner in which the Hayes Electors had been declared elected. The testimony taken by the committee, upon which it based its report, would be totally inadmissable in any court of justice in the country. He referred to the details of the elections in the different States in order to show that if any fraud was perpetrated in Florida it was perpetrated by the Democrats. But, notwithstanding that fact, the Hayes Electors had been duly elected.

The previous question being seconded it was agreed that the vote on the resolutions should be taken to-morrow at 12 o'clock, although Mr. FOSTER, of Ohio, suggested that the funeral ceremonies should be finished to-night and the corpse buried.

On motion of Mr. COX, of New-York, the Senate resolution that each calendar day should be considered as a legislative day, and that the journal of the day before should be so dated, was adopted.

THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

The Speaker laid before the House a Message from the President, transmitting a memorial from citizens of New-York, asking for the passage of a law authorizing the proper department to set apart sufficient ground on either Bedloe's or Governor's Island, in the harbor of New-York, as a site for the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," which has been presented to the United States by the French people. The memorial is signed by W. M. Evarts, E. D. Morgan, William C. Bryant, and others. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The House, at 4:30 P. M., took a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

INCOME OF ISAAC M. SINGER'S CHILDREN.

Application was made to Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, by several children of the late Isaac M. Singer, for an allowance from the income of the estate. Caroline Virginia Fosdar, one of the applicants, says that under Mr. Singer's will she is entitled to about $260,000. She is a minor, being only 19 years of age, and is married. David Hawley, her testamentary guardian, has allowed her $500 per month. She says that her health requires that she should have a carriage and horses and ride out. She asked $2,500 for a team and an increase in her allowance to $1,000 per month. This application was referred to ex-Judge Mitchell as Referee. Three other children of Mr. Singer applied to have an allowance given them of $500 per month each. Judge Barrett awarded each $4,000 per year.

LAW REPORTS.

BOODY'S SUIT AGAINST TILDEN.

THE PLAINTIFF ALLEGES THAT THE DEFENDANT OWES HIM $26,000—HOW THE STOCK POOL OF 1864 WAS FORMED.

The long delayed suit of Henry H. Boody against Samuel J. Tilden and others was brought to trial yesterday morning in the Special Term of the Superior Court, before Judge Sedgwick. The suit is for an accounting, Boody alleging that Mr. Tilden owes him $26,000 on a stock pool formed in 1864 for the purpose of consolidating the Chicago and North-western Railway and the Chicago and Galena Union Railroad Companies, which amount, it is alleged, was overpaid to Mr. Tilden under a misapprehension as to the supposed profits of the pool. The other defendants are William B. Ogden and George M. Bartholomew, who were interested in the pool with Boody and Mr. Tilden, and who Boody alleges were also overpaid. Mr. Bartholomew, however, is only a nominal defendant, as he desires an accounting, having, as claimed, acceded to the justness of Boody's demands therefor. Mr. Dexter A. Hawkins appeared for Mr. Boody, and Mr. William W. Niles for Mr. Tilden, who is regarded as the real defendant.

The complaint recites that the pool was formed by an oral agreement on the 28th of March, 1864, to buy enough of the stock of the Chicago and Galena Union Railroad Company to enable those in the pool to control the next election of Directors of the Company to be held early in the following June, and thus enable them to consolidate that company with the Chicago and North-western, of which company Ogden was President, and of which all in the pool were Directors, and all except Bartholomew were members of the Executive Committee. Ogden was to have an interest of 6,000 shares in the pool, Tilden 2,000 shares, Bartholomew 1,000, and Boody as many shares as it should be necessary to buy of the Chicago and Galena Union stock, in addition to the 9,000 shares mentioned, and what proxies might be obtained to help to effect the consolidation, which interest of Boody turned out to be 9,450 shares, making 18,450 shares in the pool. Boody was to manage the pool, and all were to share profits or bear losses in proportion to their interest in it. Boody, in the interest of the pool, purchased, on the 28th of March, 1864, 11,000 shares of Chicago and Galena Union stock, and continued to purchase afterward until he obtained 18,450 shares, costing from 129⅞ to 144 per share, making the total costs, including commissions and incidental expenses, nearly $3,000,000. Tilden contributed no capital whatever, but, on the contrary, borrowed from Boody to the extent of $60,000, without security. Boody did not discover until long after Tilden and Ogden had received large payments from the pool that they had overdrawn their share of the supposed profits, the discovery not being made until the Fall of 1875, when Boody immediately demanded an accounting and settlement, to which request Bartholomew was willing to accede, but which was refused by Tilden and Ogden.

Mr. Hawkins, in opening the case, said that on Sunday, the 27th of March, 1864, the pool project was hatched by Tilden, Ogden, Henry H. Smith, the Vice President, and James R. Young, the Secretary of the Chicago and North-western Railway Company, while they were riding in Central Park.

Mr. Niles made a sarcastic objection that a contract made on Sunday was illegal.

Judge Sedgwick said that some contracts made on Sunday were found to be binding.

Counsel resumed, saying that Boody's office was at Nos. 8 and 10 Wall street, where the office of the Chicago and North-western Company was also located. On the following morning (Monday,) Ogden went early to Boody's office and told him about the project into which Boody entered. When it was found that enough stock had been accumulated to control a consolidation of the companies, Tilden told Boody that when the consolidation was effected they would have so much stock that it would be better for him (Boody) to begin immediately to sell the Chicago and North-western stock, and thus get the larger part of the stock sold before the consolidation was completed, as otherwise they might break the market down; and Boody went on and sold a large amount of the stock. A rough calculation was made by Mr. Boody in August, 1874, of the condition of the pool, and Tilden was allowed to pay only $10,000 for 500 shares of Chicago and North-western preferred stock at 90, the stock being worth $45,000 at that figure, but Tilden receiving credit for $26,000, which were supposed to be coming to him as profits from the pool. when, in fact, as an after examination showed, he was indebted to the pool instead of the pool being indebted to him. It would be claimed, on behalf of Boody, that the parties to the pool were copartners, and that the court should take the accounts and adjust them equitably.

When Mr. Hawkins had concluded his opening Mr. Niles moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that this was a suit brought for an accounting, when, on the allegations, it ought to be an action to recover an overpaid balance.

The motion was denied, Judge Sedgwick saying he would hear evidence to ascertain whether an accounting should be ordered, and that, if he so determined, the accounts would be sent to an auditor.

Mr. Boody was called by Mr. Hawkins, and testified that he had known Tilden since 1857, and had had several transactions with him before the one relating to the pool; Tilden had been counsel for the Illinois and Chicago North-western Railroad Company in 1859; witness saw Tilden at the latter's office in reference to the formation of the pool, on Monday, March 28, 1864, and found out he already knew all about it; witness asked Tilden what interest he intended to take, when Tilden, in his peculiar way, put his mouth close to witness' ear and whispered: "I never go largely into anything; I will take 2,000 shares;" Tilden and Ogden left town that day for the North-west; on their return they strongly approved of a coalition witness had made with other parties and he found were buying Chicago and Galena stock; when a large amount of Galena stock had been secured Tilden said it could not be carried on call loans, and he introduced witness to William G. Coleman & Co., with whom negotiations were made for time loans to carry the stock. When the panic came in Wall street witness thought he would be ruined, as he had invested all he had to carry the stock he had bought, and he went to Ogden and Tilden for aid; Ogden immediately loaned him $5,000 himself and got a loan of $50,000 from Mr. Booth, President of the American Exchange Bank, but Tilden gave no aid whatever; sold all of the common stock of Chicago and North-western, except a small portion, and been sold just previous to the consolidation of the two companies, and the sales of the preferred stock were continued after the consolidation had been effected up to the 9th of August; when Tilden said he would take 500 shares of the preferred stock at 90, and he was to be told how much he would have to pay for them after deducting his share of the profits of the pool; Mr. Young, Ogden's confidential Secretary, and witness went hurriedly over to the pool account to see what balance of profits there would be, and made up rough memoranda with pencil, which memoranda was afterward lost or destroyed. Witness then let Tilden know that if he took 500 shares at 90 it would require his check for $19,000 to balance his account; Tilden gave the check on the 22d of August, and the shares were delivered to him on the 31st; the shares at 90 were worth $45,000, so that in paying only $19,000 he got credit for $26,000 as coming to him from the pool. It would have been necessary, in making an accurate examination of the accounts, to have gone over at least seven books; but not more than four were examined. The books in which these accounts were kept were open to all those having accounts in them.

An adjournment was taken at this point to 10 o'clock this morning.

Mr. Tilden was not in the court-room during the day, and Mr. Niles, his counsel, said that he would not probably be present during the trial, unless it was necessary to call him as a witness.

COURT NOTES.

Judge Sedgwick, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday ordered a reference in the case of Salina Ralph against Joseph E. Ralph. The parties were married in 1843, and the wife now seeks an absolute divorce on the ground of the alleged adultery of her husband.

Mary Dunleavy, a servant, who on March 1, 1875, stole a watch and chain, valued at $95, the property of Mrs. Jane Byron, of No. 402 West Thirty-first street, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. She was sentenced to one year in the State Prison.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, John Williams, a negro, who made a burglarious entry into the premises of Charles A. Greene, No. 79 King street, with intent to steal, pleaded guilty to burglary. Judge Sutherland sentenced the prisoner to three years in the State Prison.

The will of William Jay Haskitt, the lawyer, who died recently, is being contested by the widow on the ground of mental incapacity on the part of the testator. The matter was yesterday referred to Mr. W. J. McKenna as Referee, and will come up again to-morrow. The estate of the deceased is valued at $30,000.

The jury in Part III. of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday gave a verdict for the defendant in the suit of Edward Aaron against Samuel Godchaud and another. The case, which has been reported hitherto, was brought to recover damages for an alleged wrongful seizure of the plaintiff's goods by a City Marshal acting for the defendants.

On the night of Jan. 27 William Schroeder, of No. 85 South Fifth avenue, broke into the stable of Patrick Slevin, No. 240 East One Hundred and Thirteenth street, and stole a turkey. He was arrested, and pleaded guilty yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Sutherland sentenced Schroeder to two years and six months in the State Prison.

The will of Margaret Fritz, who died recently, leaving property valued at about $30,000, is being contested before Surrogate Calvin by the nephew of the deceased on the ground that the will was not properly published. There is a codicil to the will, however, which is properly published, and the Surrogate yesterday held that this fact makes a publication of the will good and sufficient.

The trial of the suit of Duryea against the Mayor, &c., in which the plaintiff seeks $50,000 damages for injuries to his land caused by the discharge from the Thirty-fourth street sewer, was resumed before Judge Donohue and a jury in Part I. of the Supreme Court, yesterday. The plaintiff called several witnesses to prove the extent of his damage, and also called one of the Sewer Inspectors. The latter testified that he built the sewer outlet by the direction of Mr. Craven, of the Croton Aqueduct Board. It appeared, however, that the consent of the then owner of the land had been obtained. The City's side of the case will probably be opened to-day.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Lyon called the case of Elijah W. Houghton, of No. 47 East Twenty-eighth street, against whom three indictments had been found for grand larceny and embezzlement. It appears that Houghton, while engaged as book-keeper in the employ of Hamilton Gordon, No. 13 East Fourteenth street, appropriated to his own use a note of Gibbons & Stone, of Rochester, N. Y., for $175. He also appropriated a check for $60, and a number of bills for $38, and various sums of money, the property of his employers. On being arraigned Houghton pleaded guilty, and was sentenced by Judge Sutherland to four years in the State Prison.

OVER FIVE HUNDRED CITY LOTS IN SUIT.

The trial of one of the most complicated of cases which have yet come before the courts was begun before Judge Van Vorst in the Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday. The suit is brought by Robert L. Fowler against Solomon Mehrbach, and numerous others, and in it the plaintiff seeks fees, an accounting, and to be removed from a trust in regard to between 500 and 600 lots of ground in this City. The property is mainly between Ninety-seventh and One Hundred and First streets, First avenue, and the East River. It was formerly purchased by the Street Cleaning Association, a joint stock company of which the late John L. Brown, the street-cleaning contractor, was President. In this company were also interested William M. Tweed, Jr., and drew J. Smith, James M. Sweeny, E. F. Smith, Richard M. Tweed, Sheppard F. Knapp, Charles Devlin, William King, and John Scott. An agreement was made in 1873 between John L. Brown, as President of the association, and Solomon Mehrbach, by which the property was conveyed to the latter. Under the conveyance the mortgages, which, in all, aggregating $79,000, were to be paid, and Brown, as President, was to retain an interest in one-half the profits of the sale of the lands. Mr. Fowler and one McCahill were afterward appointed Trustees, and the property was conveyed to them, they giving back a trust deed according to which they were to sell the lots at certain specified rates before May 10, 1875, and distribute the proceeds properly between Mehrbach and Brown as President. Only four lots were sold, and the prices brought aggregated $7 000 less than they should have been. However, Fowler now seeks to make up the difference. Mr. Fowler now seeks to be released from his trust and to have the court determine the claims of different parties to the property. The trial will be resumed next week.

A PUBLISHER ON TRIAL FOR PERJURY.

The trial of James Sutton, President of the Aldine Publishing Company, indicted for perjury in swearing falsely to the amount of his losses by a fire at No. 23 Liberty street and No. 58 Maiden lane, June 24, 1875, was resumed before Recorder Hackett yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. The evidence of the Fire Marshal has been concluded, Assistant District Attorney Herring called Julius Bien, of No. 16 Park place, as an expert in lithographs and chromos. Mr. Bien estimated that the lithographs and chromos held in stock by the Aldine Company at the time of the fire, could be produced for a much less sum than that sworn to as their value by Mr. Sutton in his proof of loss. Frank Lawrence, a former employe of the Aldine, testified that he had packed up a pile of stereotype plates ready for removal previous to the fire, and had seen some of the chromos damaged. He had heard it said among the employes that the firm was about to collapse, and that the fire insurances were to be renewed. The witnesses were cross-examined at length by Col. Fellows. At the adjournment of court, Assistant District Attorney Herring asked the court to hold the accused in additional bail of $5,000 during the trial. Recorder Hackett granted the desired motion, and the necessary bail was furnished by John Silsby, of Brooklyn.

A HIGHWAY ROBBER PUNISHED.

On the afternoon of the 3d inst., as Mrs. Catherine Chauncey, of No. 49 West Thirty-second street, was walking toward her home, she was attacked by a ruffian who struck her a violent blow on the shoulder with his clenched fist, nearly throwing her to the ground. While the lady was suffering from the shock of the blow, her assailant seized her hand, in which she held a pocketbook containing $20, and forcibly twisted it until he compelled her to relinquish her hold. The highwayman then ran, but was subsequently arrested and identified by the lady. When the case was called by Assistant District Attorney Phillips yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, the prisoner, a well-known thief named Thomas Burns, alias James Murphy, living at No. 235 East Twenty-eighth street, pleaded guilty. Judge Sutherland sentenced him to six years and six months in the State Prison.

MAJOR CORLISS DISCHARGED ON BAIL.

Several friends of Major G. W. Corliss, Mrs. Sparr's belligerent lodger, called at Essex Market Police Court yesterday just before the hour of closing, and deposited with Justice Wandell $1,000 in bank notes as temporary security for the reappearance in court of the Major to-morrow with regular bail. His fine of $10 was also paid, and, being released, he left the court bowing with Chesterfieldian grace to the Magistrate.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Barrett.

In the Matter of Matthews; in the Matter of Matthews; in the Matter of Matthews.—The amount reported seems to be extravagant. These young people should have an allowance in accordance with their condition and expectations, but the court ought not to encourage, and will not authorize, extravagance and waste. For all proper purposes of education and comfort I think $4,000 per annum would be ample.

Banman vs. Frychtrecht,—motion for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, &c., denied, with $10 costs.

In the matter of Foster.—The guardian in such matters should not consent. The question should be left to the court.

Perry vs. Chave.—I cannot read much of those papers nor understand the matter. The plaintiff should proceed upon legible papers. The motion was really, so far as I can make out, erroneously made for January and not February. The plaintiff should get somebody to copy his papers in a legible manner and, if possible, get his proceedings clearly before the court.

Hudson vs. Schiffer.—Without passing upon the necessity or propriety of the amendment the plaintiff may amend as she may be advised upon payment of $10 costs of motion.

Lyon vs. Connell.—Order granted.

By Judge Donohue.

Horsndt vs. Chase.—Motion denied.

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

We fear that but few of our readers will find either time or patience to wade through the somewhat tedious speeches made before the Electoral Commission yesterday. The orations of the Democratic objectors are largely occupied with the rhetorical flourishes by which the Congressman of the period delights to dazzle his constituents and bring down the gallery. What they ought to have been, is a clear and concise statement of the reasons which are alleged in support of certain well-defined positions. What they are, is a loose and wordy argument about the Democratic complaints against the Louisiana election in general and the character and methods of the Returning Board in particular. No attempt is made to discriminate between matters not before the Commission and the questions to which alone they can address themselves, and there is an equal absence of any effort to avoid imputations of motives where they are equally irrelevant and incapable of proof. Senator CARPENTER made the remarkable announcement that he did not appear as counsel for Mr. TILDEN, but for the ten thousand disfranchised citizens of Louisiana. It happens that most of the disfranchised voters of the State are on the other side, but Mr. CARPENTER is probably less concerned about pleasing his clients than earning his fee.

The Senate has adopted Mr. MITCHELL'S resolution for an attachment to bring to Washington CONRAD N. JORDAN, the Cashier of the Third National Bank. His testimony is required in regard to the bank accounts of Messrs. TILDEN, PELTON, and HEWITT, and when it is forthcoming some very interesting developments may be expected. The cool remark of Senator KERNAN that "there never was a suggestion that money should be used for improper purposes in Oregon," is about as good as Senator SAULSBURY'S solemn utterance about it being "no slight thing to arrest a citizen and deprive him of his liberty without due process of laws." Democrats in Congress are quite agreed that it matters a good deal whose ox is gored.

Mr. SALGAR, Consul General for the United States of Colombia, writes a courteous note correcting an impression which might have been made by a recent comment in these columns on the revenue derived from the Panama Railroad by the Colombian Republic. Mr. SALGAR points out that the Republic receives only $250,000 annual rent from the railway company, and that the franchise and other concessions are worth much more than this. In addition to this, it is urged that the duty of Colombia to protect the lives and property of passengers has made it necessary to maintain an expensive garrison at Panama. Nothwithstanding this, however, more than $150,000 was paid to the United States Government as damages arising from a riot in Panama in 1856. It is evident, therefore, that the direct receipts of the Colombian Government from the railroad company cannot afford that republic its main subsistence.

The State Senate has taken up the reform bills for New-York City in a spirit which means business. The first of the Woodin bills for cutting down expenses—that relating to the remuneration of Coroners—was ordered to a third reading yesterday. The tone of the debate on this measure showed that members of both parties in the Senate are pretty thoroughly impressed with the fact that the people of New-York will stand no more trifling with their demand for a less expensive City Government. Senator MORRISSEY reiterated the sentiments which he expressed at the Municipal conference the other day, and for which he has justly received so much credit. He expressed his determination not only to vote for all properly considered measures of reform, but also to test the sincerity of the desire for better and more economical government expressed by the Mayor and his colleagues. It is to be hoped that the sleepy movements of the Assembly Committee on Cities will be perceptibly accelerated by the very prompt and business-like action of the Senate.

The bill defining the powers and providing for the remuneration of the new Superintendent of Public Works passed the Assembly by a vote of ninety-nine to one. A good deal of credit is due to Mr. BAKER, of Washington, the Chairman of the Committee on Canals, for the vigorous and persistent way in which he has pushed this very important measure through the House in the face of an adroitly managed opposition which sought to defeat the bill by loading it down with unnecessary amendments. It is to be hoped that it may find an equally pertinacious advocate in the Senate. It would also be well for the Assembly committee which has in hand the Senate bill providing for the appointment of the Superintendent of State Prisons to take some prompt action on that matter. It has had ample time for deliberation and the necessity for carrying out the prison amendment to the Constitution is too pressing to be made the subject of partisan or personal intrigue.

The strike of the locomotive engineers and firemen on the Boston and Maine Railroad is a fair sample of demonstrations of this kind. The men demanded an advance in wages. This was refused. At a certain hour in the day, previously agreed upon, engineers and firemen abandoned their engines wherever they happened to be. Trains in transit were brought to a standstill, and the road was at once blocked from end to end with deserted locomotives. The damage to the corporation was considerable. The inconvenience to passengers was very great. Yesterday, an attempt was made to resume business, and passenger trains were run by men who do not belong to "the Brotherhood," as the organization is called. This excites the ire of the strikers, who try to bribe the new men to quit work. They also threaten to stop business on all the Boston roads, if other railroad corporations assist the Boston and Maine Company. It is urged that the men need higher wages. But it is noticeable that they are now paid a daily stipend equal to the amount which they formerly received for their labor. Besides this, large sums are offered to the new men to induce them to leave work. This money, so freely disbursed, is part of the savings of the strikers. Like most dissatisfied men who engage in this species of warfare, they are wasting time and money, and depriving their cause of public sympathy.

THE SUPREME COURT AND THE COMMISSION.

Probably most men of intelligence recognized as the worst feature of the Commission scheme, the injury it was sure to work to the Supreme Court. It gave to the Judges of that court purely political duties, and it gave these to them not as Judges, but as politicians. Nothing could have been worse for the future of the court, for its own self-respect, for the influence it would exert, for the reputation it would have with the people, and for the position it would hereafter be assigned in the governmental system. The law, almost in terms, published the Justices as partisans, because it employed them as partisans. The plea that the selection of the Justices was made from considerations of their sectional distribution, only made the real motive plainer and more injurious. It added the taint of false pretense to an act which was in itself a grave error. It was an acknowledgment that the real motive was unjustifiable, and an attempt to cover it up by a device which only made its actual character more apparent.

With such an implication involved in the law creating the Commission, it is not surprising that the Judges who sit with that body should already be the subject of bitter partisan attack. Up to the present time, the action of the Commission has been favorable to the Republicans, and it is the Democrats who are assailing it. But if the action of the Commission had been in the contrary direction, we should no doubt have plenty of Republicans ready to accuse any one of their own party among the Commissioners found on the Democratic side of having been controlled by unworthy motives. Democrats call the Republican Judges partisan now; had their decision been the other way they would hardly have escaped even harsher epithets. We have no doubt, from our standpoint, that the judgment of the Commissioners has been entirely impartial, and that both the Democrats and the Republicans have decided in sincerity as they believed the law and their duty required. We should hold the same opinion if the number who agreed with our own view had been seven instead of eight, and though the Presidency had been turned over to Mr. TILDEN on the Florida case, because we know of nothing to cast the slightest suspicion on the fairness of any one of the Judges. But it would have been idle for us to try to convince a great part of the Republican Party that a Republican Judge could sustain Mr. TILDEN'S cause in the Commission honestly. Still more difficult is it to persuade the Democrats that the Republican Judges can and do consider the Democratic arguments with clear and unprejudiced minds. Moreover, it must be added that the more intelligent Democrats, who can themselves conceive of the Republican Justices being wholly candid, make little effort to spread that impression.

Indeed, the most unpleasant illustration of the evil influence which the Commission plan is having on the Supreme Court is the persistency with which the Democratic press is trying to warp the action of the Judges by considerations wholly foreign to their real duty. The allegiance of the Judge is to his own conviction of what the law demands. He is bound to ask himself the single question, what is the law? He is bound to inform himself by all available means; but the moment he sets up any other standard than his own clear conclusions from his own examination of the case before him, he departs from his line of duty. He has no right to inquire what the public will think of him, or of the court of which he is a member. There is only one absolutely safe way for him to guard his own reputation and that of his court, and that is by strict fidelity to his own conscience. When, therefore, the World asks the Judges on the Commission to change their view of their powers and of the scope of their jurisdiction in order to defeat the accusation of partisanship, that moment it seeks to pervert their action and to introduce a motive at once specious and bad. In substance, it declares that if the Justices who are Commissioners, and who have been classed as Republicans, do not allow the Democrats to go behind the certificates, the public will lose all faith in their judicial integrity. But obviously this is a mere threat addressed to the Judges. It is an appeal which no lawyer would be allowed for a moment even to suggest before the Commission. It is a plain attempt to frighten the Judges, and it shows that the World has a very imperfect conception of what judicial impartiality really is.

If it were proper to make any suggestion to the Judges at all, as to what would be the effect of their course on their own reputation, and on that of the Supreme Court, the World should address itself to the Democratic Judges, and should tell them that the only way in which the absence of partisanship can be completely proved is for them to act with the Republicans. This would have a double effect. It would, of course, be conclusive proof that the Democratic Judges were not acting as partisans, and it would be strong presumptive proof that the Republicans were guided only by the law, which their Democratic associates interpreted in the same way as themselves. Surely, never was there a simpler means of doing so great a good, and we wonder that the World has not adopted this suggestion which we took the trouble to make for its benefit some days ago. Whatever real basis there is for prejudicing the public mind in regard to the Justices on the Commission is contributed quite as much by the Democrats as by the Republicans. If the Judges have divided on a party line, the minority have recognized that line quite as much as the majority. Under the law, the vote of the majority prevails, but the members of the minority have the same responsibility with their fellows. A change of one of their votes would destroy the presumption of partisanship at once. If the Democratic organs really cared for the reputation of the Court, and wished to see it redeemed, and believed it proper to advise the Justices how to redeem it, they would urge them to straightway divide on the next political question which arises, or, better yet, to both vote for Mr. EVARTS' side.

THE GREAT SUBSIDY SWINDLE.

Innocent people may have imagined that the amendment to the rules adopted by the House of Representatives on Monday was intended to facilitate the transaction of legitimate public business. A great deal of work remains to be done, and the time available is too brief to be wasted. Hence, we are told, has arisen the new rule. The influences which contributed most to its adoption, however, suggest other and less creditable considerations. The great subsidy swindle of the session happens to be at the bottom of the calendar, with no possibility of rising to the surface without extraneous help. The predicament was not a pleasant one for the schemers and jobbers, great and small, who are associated in support of the Texas-Pacific bill. It is the measure by which the feasibility of other subsidies may be tested. The well-organized lobby who look to Messrs. SCOTT and HUNTINGTON for orders are reinforced by representatives from the States which are to be benefited by the construction of the branch lines. These, again, have the assistance of the Southern members generally, who imagine that their section is to be a great gainer from the projected transcontinental road, and who, moreover, see in it a precedent that would make the way easy for other attacks upon the Treasury.

If no other reason than this could be found to justify the new rule, we should not regret its acceptance by the House. The question whether the subsidy system shall be revived for the benefit of the South, or any other section, is one that ought to be answered decisively and without delay. The Northern Democrats have claimed credit for the support given to Mr. HOLMAN'S resolution of last session, condemnatory of all subsidies. The Southern Democrats declare that the passage of that resolution was a trick, designed to produce effect upon the Presidential campaign. Their newspapers state explicitly that the Democratic Party never proposed to be bound by the Holman declaration any longer than might be expedient for election purposes; and the election being over, they insist that the Northern wing of the party shall fulfill its bargain with the Southern wing, and concede the material aid which is called for in behalf of various Southern enterprises. None of them pretend that the Texas-Pacific bill will fully satisfy them. It is to be the beginning of a fresh era of subsidies, that shall include the Louisiana levees and we know not how many other plans for squandering the money of the United States to enrich the South. We desire to see the subject disposed of, one way or another. Was the Holman resolution a sham, so far as the Democrats are concerned? Are the Southern Democrats so completely dominant in the direction of their party's affairs that they can commit it to the various plans which have been heard of for overloading the credit of the country, and heaping burdens upon its tax-payers? These inquiries have an obvious significance in connection with the Texas-Pacific bill, and the proceedings in Congress within the next few days will probably supply an answer.

Certainly, no more searching test could be applied than that which Mr. LAMAR'S Texas-Pacific scheme supplies. Nothing more impudent or more profligate has been before Congress in many years. If it can be passed, we can conceive of no swindle that might not claim Mr. LAMAR'S indorsement with a good chance of success. The main line alone—that is to say, the Texas and Pacific, west from Fort Worth, and the Southern Pacific, east from Fort Yuma—would require a Government loan amounting to nearly $48,000,000. Add the five branches provided for in the bill, and which are the bribes offered to certain States to secure the support of their Senators and Representatives, and the bonds to be guaranteed by the Government will be somewhere between $81,580,000 and $89,470,000, the difference depending upon detailed estimates of routes. The interest to be paid by the Government, in gold, is at the rate of five per cent., and the duration of the liability is to be fifty years. The total payments on account of interest involved in this guarantee, as calculated in Mr. KASSON'S minority report, amount, on the lower estimate as to distance, to $203,950,000, or, on the higher estimate, to $223,675,000. Either amount is sufficiently formidable to startle those who recognize the necessity of guarding the credit as well as husbanding the resources of the Government.

What security do the companies propose to furnish for the reimbursement of either of these enormous sums? The net proceeds of the land sales are one item; in other words, the sales of the nation's own property, with part of the Texas grant added, are to be relied upon by the Government as in part an equivalent for its guarantee. A portion of the earnings of the roads is another item. A lien on the roads and their equipments is a third. The Government transportation is a fourth. But who supposes that these sources will be at all commensurate with the drain which for fifty years is to be kept up on the national Treasury? The contest now going on between the Union and Central Pacific Companies and the Government may serve to throw some light upon this inquiry. The total bonded indebtedness of the two companies to the Government is $55,092,192, or $34,377,808 less than the amount on which it is proposed to guarantee interest for the Texas Pacific. We know what the Union and Central Companies say in reply to the demand that they shall make provision for reimbursing the Government on account of the interest payments in their behalf. They are finished roads, well equipped, and doing a large business; yet they plead that they are unable, without detriment to the working of the roads, to contribute to the proposed sinking fund the sums required to save the Government from loss. No man in his senses can believe that the Texas Pacific will be able to pay $4,473,500 interest yearly, for fifty years, out of its earnings and land sales. From first to last, the burden will rest upon the Government, which the successors of Messrs. SCOTT and HUNTINGTON, borrowing a leaf from the record of the latter gentleman, will probably propose to pay by selling to the country all that may remain of its land grant.

The whole scheme is a fraud. It is a proposition to the effect, as Mr. KASSON'S report puts it, "that the Government shall create a property by a definite and absolute liability of its own, and shall accept what it creates as security against its liability." Not a word is said about capital stock. The Government is to supply the money and the stockholders are to spend it. The checks which the Government is empowered to apply would be, as experience has proved, practically worthless. The stockholders are to have the manipulation of $89,470,000, while of their own bona fide interest in the concern we have no knowledge whatever.

We think, then, that the Texas Pacific bill affords an excellent opportunity for determining whether the subsidy system shall or shall not be renewed. Messrs. SCOTT and HUNTINGTON are not open to the imputation of mock modesty. They scorn paltry pretenses. They make no parade of public virtue. They go to Congress boldly and ask that it shall assist them in perpetrating, at the public expense, a colossal fraud. Now let us see how many votes they control in the House of Representatives? There can be no mistake about the demerits of the bill. It is as bad as it can be. If it have any chance of passage, the country is entitled to be informed of the fact in order that it may understand the liabilities that are in store for it.

THE TRIBUNE METEOROLOGIST.

In these times of doubt and uncertainty at least one public man keeps his head. We refer, of course, to the meteorological philosopher of the Tribune. There may be convulsions of nations, foreign wars, and internal commotions; the philosopher goes on his cheery way, picking up the fragments of yesterday's broken prophesies, and putting them together again as if nothing had happened. Every morning he exhibits his checker-board, with the track of a fly in milk across it, with the serene indifference to disaster of a man whom no catastrophe can shake, no cataclysm alarm. Such an optimist is invaluable in a community like ours. It is a pity that he has such a limited clientage. The few people who read his newspaper derive solid comfort from his historical statements of the weather of yesterday and day before. Therefore, though they know that what he predicts is valueless, they enjoy his poetic descriptions of what has happened and is beyond recall. The way in which he accounts for a failure of all his predictions is ingenious; and though he never guesses rightly, the ease with which he, next day, explains why he didn't is beautiful to see. A philosopher who divines the past so clearly cannot be expected to be equally sure of the future. It is an old saying that one's "hindsight is much better than his foresight." This is especially true of the Tribune philosopher.

It is entertaining, in these days when the newspapers are full of politics and Electoral debate, to read a history of yesterday's weather. It is as fresh as last year's almanac. And the Tribune philosopher thereby escapes the necessity of saying what the weather will be to-morrow. For example, he cautiously predicted for Monday "another pleasant day, with a slight increase of warmth and haziness." The cold rain of the afternoon and the freezing blast which succeeded it did not dismay the philosopher in the least. He rose next day, equal to the occasion, and cheerfully declared that "the erratic curve of air pressure, yesterday, faithfully mirrored in advance the rapidly changing weather of the day." To those who expected warmer and hazy weather, and went forth with umbrellas and light wearing-gear, this was consolatory. They were overtaken with a freezing gale, to be sure, but it was due to the "erratic curve of air pressure." In the midst of the commotion of Tuesday morning, while the poorly-informed Governmental observers were flying their danger signals, the smiling philosopher proclaimed that "the present wind-storm will not be of long duration," and that "decreasing and warmer winds will follow." This was not true; but it reads well. The good man, of course, knew what the weather would be, but he did not want to come upon us too suddenly with it. It was far better to break it to us gently—to let the gale tell its own story, as it were. Why should the philosopher of the Tribune distress his readers with Cassandra-like prophesies when, if he amused them for a while, they would know the worst in time?

The philosopher is aged. He delights chiefly in reminiscences of the past. The wayfarer who, shivering in last night's icy gales, blamed him who had promised decreasing winds and warmer weather, expects too much. Let him be content and read to-day the elegant language in which yesterday's weather shall be described. If he wants to know just how much he has been deceived, let him gaze on the Tribune's checker-board, where he will see "the erratic curve of air pressure faithfully mirrored." We venture to say that no living man can describe yesterday's weather so beautifully as the Tribune philosopher. It never rains with him, but there is a precipitation of moisture, accompanied by increased cloudiness. He never stoops so low as to say that the wind blew, but there was a decided elevation of air pressure. And at the worst, he applies to the weather no more opprobrious epithet than "marked depression of the barometric curve."

We commend the cheerful philosophy of this sage observer to politicians. The political atmosphere is confessedly cloudy. A great many people are running about and watching the barometer, and betting for or against TILDEN, as the indications seem to justify. How much better it would be if they would imitate the philosopher of the Tribune and wait until they can find their politics in history. They would save themselves much wear and tear of mind; and then they could eloquently describe how it all happened. Instead of predicting that in the national game of poker, the objectors on the part of the House would see the Senate and go one better, they could, next day, record how Judge STANLEY MATHEWS went out on a blind, and Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD'S erratic curve showed that he had four aces in his shoe. Of course, this would not be so satisfactory to a community which declines to invest in pea-nuts until it knows precisely who is elected; but it would be a much safer way of doing business. It is easy to say that a Kentucky statesman will produce 100,000 unarmed Democrats from the cellar of his Washington boarding-house and seize the Presidency for TILDEN, wherever he finds that useful office lying around loose. It does not cost anything to predict that Justices FIELD and CLIFFORD will resign from the Commission in order that two Republicans may be put in their places. But all these vaticinations, like certain weather prophecies, are extra-hazardous. Besides, they worry people by exciting false hopes and false alarms. How much better it is to follow the example of the Tribune philosopher, and confine one's self, as far as possible, to what has happened. When predictions are exacted, the philosophic politician may mystify the public with parabolic curves, precipitations, and learned nothingness. Then, when caught tripping, he may escape by a neat and "chipper" description of his own mistakes.

ROTATION IN ANIMALS.

Rotation in crops is one of the fundamental principles of scientific agriculture. If a particular field is sown year after year with the same kind of seed, the soil becomes exhausted; whereas, if it is sown one year with oats, another year with maccaroni, the next year with grass or cheese, and the fourth year with oats again, the soil is constantly in good condition, and is always prepared to answer any reasonable requisition which may be made upon it.

This great principle of rotation in crops is, however, capable of a wider application than that usually given to it. Years ago an ingenious person proved experimentally the wisdom of rotation in animals. He had swallowed a mouse, and, thereupon, in order to avert the abdominal disasters that might follow the exclusive swallowing of mice, he swallowed a young cat. There is no doubt that this ingenious man grasped the principle of rotation in animals, but centuries passed away before the true value of his discovery was appreciated. The recent action of the Australian colony of Queensland is the first instance in which any attempt to apply the principle of rotation to wild animals in a thorough and systematic way has been made.

Several years ago the pastures of Queensland were so thickly infested with weeds that the sheep began to perish from starvation. No hoe wielded by merely human hands could eradicate these weeds, and there was a prospect that the grass would be completely exterminated and the business of sheep-raising destroyed. It so happened that these weeds were of a variety which is held in high estimation by the ordinary English rabbit, and it therefore occurred to certain wise men that the introduction of rabbits would save the Queensland pastures. The suggestion was promptly adopted, and a whole cargo of particularly hungry rabbits was imported and let loose in the fields.

The result more than answered the popular expectation. The rabbits devoured the weeds with a steady energy worthy that of a small boy at a Sunday-school strawberry festival, and before very long there was not a weed left in the colony. Unfortunately, the rabbits did not pause when their legitimate business was finished, but fell to at the grass and vegetables, as if the latter were a second course and they had only whetted their appetites on the weeds. Moreover, they increased with alarming rapidity. As a multiplier, it is well known that the rabbit can give odds to the ablest mathematician now living; and the Queensland rabbits multiplied rather faster in Australia than they would have multiplied had they remained in England. Not only did they evince a determination to eat any given thing in the colony, but they swarmed in the streets and houses to that extent that life became almost unendurable to the unhappy colonists. They galloped over the beds of troubled sleepers at night, they infested the kitchen and the store-room, and they gnawed the books, household linen, and the extremities of helpless infants with insatiable appetite and impudent boldness. Heavy old gentlemen were daily tripped up by rabbits on the sidewalk, and even during church services ladies were in the constant habit of leaping upon the seats, violently shaking their skirts, and frantically imploring the nearest man to "take it away." It was plainly evident that unless something was speedily done to suppress the rabbits, Queensland would become a wilderness howling exclusively with those hungry beasts. The rabbits had exterminated the weeds, but a new kind of animal was imperatively needed to exterminate the rabbits.

Now, the weasel is the natural foe of the rabbit, and hence it was determined that the next crop of Queensland animals should consist of that sleepless and penetrating beast. A ship-load of weasels was accordingly imported, and at present they are reveling in rabbits. The rabbits fairly melt away before them, and the weasels, with delight beaming from their happy faces, pursue them to their hiding-places and massacre them by thousands. It is estimated that within the next six weeks there will not be a live rabbit in Queensland, and that the soil, enriched with the remains of millions of the departed beasts, will produce grass at a rate never before known.

So far the Queensland people have practiced the system of rotation with eminent success. The four successive crops of grass, weeds, rabbits, and weasels have thriven wonderfully, and they are now ready for a new crop. If, however, they undertake to return at once to grass, they will make a serious mistake. Wild-cats, and not grass, are the crop which Nature intended should follow weasels. In fact, unless the colonists import a very large quantity of the very best quality of wild-cats they will soon find that their weasels are quite as unprofitable as were their rabbits. To sow weasels one year and grass the next would be unscientific and unsatisfactory; whereas wild-cats, if sown the next season after a harvest of weasels, will not only flourish luxuriantly, but will completely crowd out the undesirable second growth of the previous crop.

After a crop of wild-cats, science points unmistakably to a crop of tigers. These might be distributed over the land at intervals sufficiently wide to permit of the simultaneous growth of a crop of wolves—just as the farmer plants pumpkin-seeds between his hills of corn. As to what should succeed the tigers, authorities differ, but it is probable that the early elephant would prove a good and remunerative crop. The truth is, rotation in animals is wider in its scope and necessarily slower than rotation in vegetables. The Queensland colonists should not, however, be discouraged. Let them go on in their present path, sowing new animals every year, and trusting that in time they will arrive at the proper period for planting grass, and thus complete the most satisfactory experiment of rotation that agriculturists or zoologists could well desire.

NEW-JERSEY CONTROLLERSHIP.

THE REPUBLICANS LOSE AN OPPORTUNITY BY THE ABSENCE OF A SENATOR—GEN. SEWELL'S FLYING TRIP FROM CAMDEN—A SPLIT IN THE DEMOCRATIC RANKS—INSURANCE MATTERS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Tuesday, Feb. 13, 1877.

All of last night the greatest excitement prevailed over the joint meeting of the houses for the choice of a State Controller. The feeling against Gen. Stockton because of his affiliation with the State-house Ring was bitter. More than 10 members declared they would not support him. They were all strict party men. This morning they were as obstinate as ever, but at the joint meeting time they kept their bile measurably under control. The greatest solicitude was felt over Kreuger, the German Democrat, of Newark, on whom the party traces rest but lightly. He emphatically avowed that he would not vote for Gen. Stockton, and that if Samuel Morrow, of Newark, who is his counselor, were accorded the Republican nomination, he would give his support to that gentleman. The reason which he assigns for his defection is this: That his district is largely Republican; that he was returned to represent it by the aid of Republican votes, and that his constituents expect some independence of action on his part. To his intimates, a different reason is given. He wishes the Governor to appoint ex-Judge Ise a lay Judge on the Essex County bench, and as Gen. Stockton is generally understood to be the "Governor's candidate" for Controller, he refused to cast his vote for the nominee till the Governor should have appointed Ise. This effort to intimidate the Executive was not successful, and as the proceedings of the caucus showed to-day, Mr. Kreuger could not be induced to recede from his position. This morning the Republican caucus nominated Mr. Morrow, but when the joint meeting assembled it was discovered that Gen. Sewell, one of the 40 Republicans, was absent. That left the Democrats 41 votes, including Kreuger, and the Republicans but 39. When nominations for Controller were called for, Mr. Bergan, for the Democrats, named Stockton; Mr. Hill, for the Republicans, presented Morrow's name; Mr. Egan, for a bolting faction of Democrats, named William P. McMichael. On the roll-call, Kreuger voted with the Republicans for Morrow, leaving him short but 1 vote, which Gen. Sewell, had he been present, would have cast for him. Thirty-six of the Democrats gave their votes to Stockton. Egan, Winants, Hannon and Harris voted for McMichael, but they changed their votes to Stockton, giving him, like Morrow, 40 votes. There was a tie and no election. It was known that Sewell was in Camden, attending the yearly meeting of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and a dispatch was sent directing him to come on at once. He had a locomotive attached to a place-car, and started for the capital at the rate of 50 miles an hour. Meanwhile, the Republicans, seeing their opportunity, filibustered vigorously for time to allow Sewell to make his distance, and succeeded in staving off unfavorable action for an hour. Speaker Rabe finally got in a motion to adjourn till Tuesday next, and called the previous question. President Abbett refused to entertain the intervening dilatory motions, and the vote was taken. Kreuger voted with the Democrats, and the meeting arose. At the same moment, the special train bearing the one needed vote thundered into the depot. Senator Sewell alighted, and jumping into a carriage drove at break-neck speed for the Capitol building. As he arrived at the gate, he received the unwelcome intelligence from the members who were pouring out of the doors, that he was too late by five minutes, to be of service.

The bill abolishing commissions in Jersey City was called up in the House this morning. Mr. Drohan moved the suspension of the rules, so that it might be put on its final passage. The motion was agreed to without opposition. Then Drohan made a speech in which he detailed the iniquities of commission rule. Finally it was laid over till the afternoon, and at the opening of the 3 o'clock session was laid over till to-morrow morning.

The agitation of insurance matters has led to the introduction into the Senate by Mr. Sewell of a bill forbidding any insurance company organized under the laws of the State to reinsure the whole or any part of its obligations in any other company, unless effected within 60 days after the date of the issue of the policy, and only after that date by the consent of the owner of the policy, and only upon the sanction of the Superintendent of Insurance and Attorney General. The Receiver of any life insurance company may reinsure the policy obligations, or percentage of them, in any other solvent company, whenever the assets are sufficient to effect such insurance on the omitted names.

ALBANY.

CITY BILLS IN THE SENATE.

THE DEBATE ON THE CORONERS' BILL—IT IS ORDERED TO A THIRD READING—THE COMMISSIONER OF JURORS' BILL PROGRESSED—IMPORTANT STATE LEGISLATION IN THE ASSEMBLY—THE PUBLIC WORKS BILL PASSED.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Feb. 13, 1876.

In the Senate the special order was the consideration of the four bills introduced by Mr. Woodin, making the County Clerk, Register, Commissioner of Jurors, and Coroners of the City of New-York salaried officers. The Coroners bill, being first in order on the calendar, Mr. Woodin read to the Senate extracts from a communication made last year by Controller Green to Coroner Croker, exposing the practical workings of the Coroners' office as now administered in New-York. The facts detailed in this communication, Mr. Woodin thought, were amply sufficient to show the need of a radical reform in those offices, and it was the design of this bill to effect such reform. He said it met with the approbation of tax-payers of both parties. It would reduce the cost of Coroners to New-York $60,000 annually, and he knew of no one who would oppose it except politicians who wished to retain patronage for party purposes.

Mr. Gerard was in favor of retrenchment and reform, and, in the main, was in favor of this bill; but he doubted whether the two Coroners provided for in the bill were enough for a city like New-York, and he thought their salaries should be $5,000 each instead of $4,000.

Mr. Bixby also believed in the principle of reducing the compensation of officials in New-York, and approved of the main features of this bill. Heretofore the efforts at reform had been mostly in the reduction of the wages of labor, and he thought it was about time that the occupants of fat offices were looked after. The office of Coroner in New-York was worth at present about $17,000 a year. He thought that $5,000 would be a fair compensation, and he also believed, with Mr. Gerard, that there should be three Coroners.

Mr. Morrissey said that in regard to those bills introduced by Mr. Woodin he was in favor of all of them, with, perhaps, some slight amendments. He said he attended, by invitation, last Saturday a meeting of seekers after reform at the Mayor's office in New-York. All the heads of departments were there, and they all appeared to be entirely satisfied with their present condition. Not one of them could see where the expense of his department could be reduced a cent, or how anybody could be discharged. None of them had apparently ever seen or heard of Woodin's bills. Now, for his own part he would like to go further than these bills proposed. A number of the departments, in his opinion, ought to be abolished altogether. There was the Department of Docks, for instance, which spent more money and gave less satisfaction than any other department in the City; it ought to be made a bureau in the Department of Public Works. The Building Department ought to be consolidated with the Fire Department, and the Excise with the Police. It cost the City $40,000 to run the Excise Department when it ought not to cost more than $3,000. He said he would like to have these bills postponed till the heads of departments, who were all coming to Albany this week, could see them. He wanted to see whether they were really in favor of reform or not. He would take the bills to these heads of departments himself, and ask them whether they were in favor of them or not, and it made no difference whether they were or not, he would vote for them. He wanted to see whether Tammany Hall was for reform or not. The leaders were all present at the meeting the other day, but they did not say how they stood.

Mr. Woodin thought that if all the New-York heads of departments were coming up here this week, it was the best reason in the world why the bills should not be postponed. He could well understand how Mr. Morrissey might have a motive for compelling Tammany Hall to take a position for or against the bills, but he could not see the necessity of delaying action on them.

The bill was then read and discussed section by section, and ordered to a third reading without opposition, after being amended so as to provide for three Coroners with salaries of $5,000 each. The provision prohibiting Coroner's Juries except on the certificate of the physician that they were necessary, was also amended so as to provide for a jury whenever the Mayor or District Attorney shall demand it, or whenever any citizen shall make affidavit that he has reason to believe that death was caused by violence or foul play. With these amendments the bill will probably pass to-morrow unanimously.

The bill relating to the Commissioner of Jurors was next considered. Mr. Woodin explained that the Commissioner, under the present law, received the enormous salary of $15,000 a year—more than the Mayor of the City or the Governor of the State, and that the fees, amounting to $20,000 more, were all spent by the Commissioner in clerk hire. It appeared during the discussion of this bill that the law does not fix the term of office of the Commissioner of Jurors. Mr. Bixby, on being asked what was the term of office, said he didn't know; he only knew that the present incumbent had held office continuously in New-York for a period of about 50 years. [Laughter.] Pending the discussion of the bill the Senate adjourned, Mr. Woodin having first given notice that he should offer an amendment that the term of the present Commissioner of Jurors expire three days after the passage of this act and that his place be filled by the Mayor.

THE ASSEMBLY.

In the Assembly the following important bill was presented by Mr. Husted this morning, as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and on his motion it was read twice, ordered printed, and committed to the Committee of the Whole, thus greatly advancing it toward final passage. The bill reads as follows:

The Treasurer of the State shall pay on the warrant of the Controller, the sum of $2,169,543 71, which is hereby appropriated from the moneys in the Treasury to the credit of the general fund debt sinking fund, to be applied to the payment of that portion of the general fund State debt held by the Controller in trust for various funds, including $4,000, reimbursable July 1, 1875, not paid.

The explanation of this bill, as substantially stated by Mr. Husted to the House, is this: On the amount of debt referred to in the bill the State has to pay interest at 7 per cent.; on the amount of money which is now in hand and ready to reduce the debt the State only gets 4 per cent. interest. By paying off this portion of the debt the difference in interest, being 3 per cent., is saved, and the saving amounts to about $150 per day, or about $50,000 per year. The bill was drawn up at the suggestion of the new State Controller, Mr. Olcott.

Mr. Dimond, of the Fifteenth District, has already one bill in the House to reduce the rate of interest on arrearages of assessments from 12 to 7 per cent., and this morning he brought in another bill to make the same reduction in regard to unpaid taxes, the reduction to apply to the tax for 1876 and every year thereafter. Interest is to begin one year after the confirmation of the tax.

Mr. Cowdin introduced a bill which recites that hereafter no local improvement shall be made in, on, or along any street or avenue in the City, and the expenses of such improvement or of any part be assessed upon the property intended to be benefitted, unless said improvement be made on the petition of the owners of at least one-half of the lineal feet of frontage on such street or avenue.

Mr. Grady, Democratic member from the Second District, introduced another Police bill, which is as follows:

SECTION 1. The Board of Police of the Police Department of the City of New-York is hereby authorized and empowered to make contracts for one or more years with any responsible person or persons for the removal of ashes, garbage, and street sweepings, or any one of them, from the City of New-York; provided such removal can be effected at less cost and with greater efficiency by means of such contract than by the methods heretofore employed.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

There was a long and warm debate in the Assembly this morning on the bill to prohibit pool-selling. The point of attack being the amendment inserted on motion of Judge Hogeboom when the bill was under consideration last week. Rochester and Buffalo, where there are very costly driving parks, were against the bill so long as the prohibition of selling pools on race tracks was continued in it. At the conclusion of the debate, in which endless questions of parliamentary law had been raised and ruled upon, the bill was recommitted to the Judiciary Committee, to allow further hearing upon it. It will be reported back to-morrow, and every effort made to push the bill to immediate passage. Just before the fined, Mr. Alvord put in one on this subject, which proved to be the pool-selling bill, as it appears on the printed files, but the clause prohibiting pool-selling on elections was stricken out. He explained that if the bill which had been recommitted was going to be confined simply to pool-selling on elections, he would have another to prevent the selling of pools on horse races.

The bill in relation to the office of Superintendent of Public Works was read a third time and passed by the Assembly this morning. It now goes to the Senate. This is one of the two most important State measures of the session. The other is the bill in relation to the office of Superintendent of State Prisons, which was passed by the Senate some time ago, sent down stairs, and for some unaccountable reason seems to stick firmly in the Ways and Means Committee. It is a comparatively simple bill, but it appears to require a long time for its consideration. The Public Works bill is so important that it is given entire, as follows:

SEC. 1. The Superintendent of Public Works, to be appointed by the Governor by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum, together with all necessary traveling expenses, to be audited, allowed and paid monthly by the Auditor of the Canal Department, by warrant, to be countersigned by the Controller. Before he shall enter upon the duties of his office he shall take and subscribe the constitutional oath of office, and file the same in the office of the Secretary of State, and shall execute a bond to the people of this State in the penal sum of $25,000, with two or more substantial freeholders of this State as sureties, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office and for truly accounting for all moneys intrusted to him as such Superintendent, which bond shall be subject to the approval of the Controller, and when so approved shall be filed in the office of the Controller, and shall be renewed whenever and as often as the same shall be required to be by law, or by concurrent resolution of the Senate and Assembly.

SEC. 2. The Assistant Superintendents, to be appointed by the Superintendent of Public Works, shall each receive a salary of $3,000 per annum, together with all the necessary traveling expenses, to be audited, allowed, and paid monthly by the Auditor by warrant to be countersigned by the Controller. Before either of them shall enter upon the duties of his office, he shall take and subscribe the constitutional oath of office, and file the same in the office of the Secretary of State, and shall execute a bond to the people of this State in the penal sum of $10,000, with two or more substantial freeholders of this State as sureties, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office and for truly accounting for all moneys intrusted to him as such Assistant Superintendent; which bond shall be subject to the approval of the Controller, and when so approved shall be filed in the office of the Controller, and shall be renewed whenever and as often as the same shall be required to be by law, or by concurrent resolution of the Senate and Assembly.

SEC. 3. The Superintendent of Public Works shall have the power to purchase, from time to time, all materials which shall be necessary for use in keeping the canals and structures thereof in safe condition for good navigation; and for that purpose he may designate and authorize any one of the Assistant Superintendents of Public Works to purchase all such materials as may be required for the repair, maintenance or improvement of the canals, under such regulations as the Superintendent may adopt, subject to modification by the Legislature.

SEC. 4. The Superintendent of Public Works shall divide the canals of this State into sections, and shall appoint a competent foreman to take charge of each section and to oversee and direct the work of such mechanical and common laborers as shall be required for the repair, management and improvement thereof, and such patrolmen or watchmen as may be employed thereon. The foreman of each section shall, on the first day of each month, make a monthly statement of the names of all laborers employed upon his section under him, including his own, the kind or labor performed, the price per day or per month allowed, and the amount due each for the preceding month, which statement shall be duly verified by him and forwarded by him to the Superintendent of Public Works, who shall thereupon file the same with the Auditor, together with a statement duly verified by him of all bulk materials purchased and delivered on account of the canals for the preceding month, and payment for all such labor done and performed, and all materials so purchased and delivered, shall be made on or before the 15th day of each month.

SEC. 5. All payments for labor and materials done and provided on account of the canals shall be made under the direction of the Auditor of the Canal Department; for that purpose, he shall appoint one or more, and not exceeding three paymasters, who shall hold office for one year, or until their successors are appointed, whose duty it shall be to pay off and discharge all claims and demands contracted by the Superintendent of Public Works, or by his authority, on account of the canals, subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted therefor by the Auditor and the Superintendent of Public Works. Each of the several paymasters thus appointed shall execute such bonds to the people of this State as the Controller shall require of him for the faithful performance of his duties and for truly accounting for all moneys intrusted to him as such paymaster. The Auditor may direct a paymaster to attend upon the occurrence of any break in the canals or their structures requiring immediate repairs, and the employment of labor and the use of materials beyond the ordinary estimate and allotment, and payment therefor shall be made under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commissioners of the Canal Fund and the Superintendent of Public Works, and approved by the Auditor.

SEC. 6. Whenever any work for construction or improvement shall be ordered by the Legislature or Canal Board to be done upon any of the canals of this State the labor and materials shall be paid for as provided by the Superintendent of Public Works, and the execution of the work be charged upon him, after surveys, maps, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor shall be made by the Chief Engineer and Surveyor, with his approval indorsed thereon, and which may be adopted by the Canal Board and the Superintendent jointly, payment for such labor and materials shall be made in the same manner as is herein provided for the payment of ordinary repairs.

SEC. 7. The salary of the paymasters shall be fixed by the Auditor, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the canal fund, and shall be subject to suspension or removal by the Auditor. The compensation for all officers and employes under the superintendent of Public Works, not hereinbefore provided for, shall be fixed by the Superintendent, subject to the approval of the Canal Board, and when so fixed, the schedule of prices shall be filed in the office of the Controller.

SEC. 8. The offices of Superintendent of Canal Repairs, and of Division, Resident, and Assistant Engineers on the line of the canals are hereby abolished; and whenever the services of an engineer may be required by the Superintendent of Public Works upon any portion of the canals undergoing repairs and involving substantial changes of plans or the construction of new work, the Superintendent may call upon the State Engineer and Surveyor for assignment of said Engineer, who shall receive such compensation for the time employed as may be determined by a schedule of prices previously adopted by the Canal Board.

SEC. 9. In case any officer or employe in the service of the State, under the provisions of this bill, shall use his power, position, or patronage for the promotion or defeat of partisan or party purposes, shall be deemed guilty of misconduct in office, and in case any superior officer, having authority, shall refuse or neglect to take cognizance thereof, and to remove therefor, the question of such violation may be tried and determined by any Justice of the Supreme Court having jurisdiction in the county wherein such alleged violation occurred, upon the written charges made and sworn to by five substantial freeholders of the neighborhood, and in case the said Justice shall sustain such charges he shall certify that fact to the Superintendent of Public Works, or, in case of the hearing of charges against the latter, to the Governor, who, upon the receipt of such certificate shall remove such implicated officer or employe. And no increase of the force upon the canals shall be made at any time within 60 days preceding any annual election for State officers, except when the Superintendent of Public Works shall certify that the needs of the public service make such increase necessary at that time, which certificate shall be immediately published when made in the official State journal.

The Committee on Cities gave a hearing this afternoon on some Brooklyn bills, in regard to which Mayor Schroeder appeared, and on the Salary bill of Mr. Langbein, and on the bill to repeal the Parade-ground act. There was no time for the discussion of any other measure. The last-named bill was argued on behalf of the property-owners by a representative, and on behalf of the tax-payers by Mr. Fitch, of the Council of Political Reform. The committee will probably report the bill favorably. In respect to the salary bill Mr. Fitch also spoke, but only in general terms. Indeed, the object of getting him to speak at all was mainly to see how the Democrats would act, and they left no doubt on the subject. Almost from the first moment they began to interpose objections, push interrogatories, and question statements. Mr. Grady, who appeared to come forward as the self-appointed champion of the Tammany obstructionists, was so constant in his interruptions that the committee had to call him to order to keep him quiet. He made the extraordinary statements that the New-York members of the Assembly had expressly agreed at the conference on Saturday that they would advance no measure in the Legislature until Mayor Ely had been consulted upon it and given his consent thereto. This was instantly and flatly denied by Mr. Langbein. When Mr. Fitch had finished speaking the committee intimated they were ready to hear Mr. Grady. Then commenced one of the most laughable farces which has been enacted in a committee-room at Albany for some years. The young man prepared himself to speak with solemn deliberation. Taking off his overcoat and carefully laying it on his chair, he cleared his throat, struck an oratorical attitude, and instantly was soaring away into such cloudy regions of rhetoric and politics that he had to be brought down by several requests of the Chairman and others to speak on the bill under consideration. This he tried to do, and to answer the numerous questions put to him. Each moment he waxed warmer under the inspiration of his own eloquence until he was wildly pacing the floor, throwing aloft his arms, sprawling over the table, striking tragic attitudes, and altogether making such a spectacle of himself that at last everybody in the room gave way to continuous and inextinguishable laughter, and the committee had to adjourn. This only could be gathered from the proceedings of the afternoon, that in whatever shape or form the proposition to cut down the City expenses is put—whether it comes with Mayor Ely's sanction or without it—it will be fought to the last extremity by the Democrats. Come in what shape it may, or under any auspices it will, they will favor nothing that looks like retrenchment. Let any other idea be abandoned at once. The spirit displayed this afternoon was unmistakable. For instance, when Mr. Grady was declaiming about the right and justice of allowing the Mayor of the City to determine what reforms should be made, he was asked if he was ready to agree to any reductions which Mayor Ely should suggest. He at once declared he was not, asserting he was not to be caught in any such trap. Mr. Cowdin also must have been convinced by what he heard to-day of the essentially mischievous and useless character of his Advisory Council bill, for while the City Democrats are seizing upon this as their main hold for effecting delay, they intimate that they do not bind themselves to support what such a council may propose. Delay and delay is the whole policy until it is too late to do anything. It is abundantly evident that any measure of real reform for New-York will have to go through on a strict party vote, and with a call of the House to back it if necessary.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

An adjourned meeting of the Committees on Ways and Means of the House and Finance of the Senate, was held at No. 148 State street this afternoon. The committees were present in full numbers. Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer addressed the committees on behalf of the Advisory Board, during which he stated under the law passed last Winter the Advisory Board are only authorized to advertise for bids and report to the Legislature, which they have done. He charged that the interior of the old plans was a sham and deception, while the interior of the new plans was a reality. Under the old plans the cost would be $1,369,569, and under the modified plans, $793,796. The Advisory Board made a statement that the cost of the entire building, including approach stairs on the east front, without terrace, would be $4,368,366 76; terrace, $851,097 extra; cost of building from its present state to top of cornice, without roof, cornice, chimneys, or exterior finish, $1,045,891; cost of building from present state to top of roof, finish inside and out, $3,651,131 75.

Architect Fuller presented a statement showing that the total cost of the building under his plans up to the roof was $4,245,222. The estimate for putting on the roof, including dormers and chimneys, was $1,553,754. These figures were based upon the estimates of last year. The Joint Committee went into executive session, and on coming out adjourned.

THE BOSTON ENGINEERS' STRIKE.

EFFORTS MADE TO BUY OFF THE NEW MEN — NO VIOLENT DEMONSTRATIONS MADE—OTHER ROADS THREATENED IN CASE THEY AID THE MAINE COMPANY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Feb. 13.—The strike of the engineers and firemen on the Boston and Maine Road continues. Thus far no outbreak has occurred, though crowds have been all day long at the Maine station and about the engine-houses, and the substitutes who have been put on—"scabs" the strikers call them—are jeered and hooted at as they go about their work. The strikers appear to be quite as confident of the ultimate success as when they left their machines. The Brotherhood of Engineers have ample funds, and are caring for the men who are out, giving them the same amount per day they were receiving when at work. Officers of the brotherhood have been busy during the day endeavoring to buy off the new engineers, but they have succeeded in only a very few cases. The railroad company offer the substitutes the same wages paid regular men, and in some cases a bonus. The running of trains to-day has been a trifle more regular than yesterday, after the strike. There is no denying the fact that the business of the road is seriously interfered with. The running of freight trains has been entirely discontinued. The through Portland passenger train, due in this city at 7:30 Monday evening, which was abandoned between Biddeford and Kennebunk by the engineer, did not reach here until 7:30 this morning; and the trains which left this city at 12:30 and 3:30 Monday afternoon for Portland were joined at Kennebunk, and carried along to Portland as one train, arriving there at 1:15 this morning. The road was cleared entirely of abandoned trains during Monday night, and all the stray locomotives were brought to shelter. Nearly all the local trains were sent out on time to-day and to-night. Superintendent Furber to-day sent the following dispatch to leading railway superintendents in New-York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore:

"Our engineers have all struck, and the brotherhood are buying up every man whom we can employ. If you can send us any men who will be true and will stick, please do so."

A dispatch sent this evening to the same points states that the brotherhood has paid as high as $500 in one instance to one of the newly-employed engineers to quit, and Mr. Arthur, the head of the organization, states that if the other roads continue to furnish help to the Boston and Maine, he will stop every road running out of Boston. The head-quarters of the engineers at No. 47 Hanover street have been thronged all day. The men say they are determined to hold out to the bitter end, and no man who "struck" will be allowed to go back till all are reinstated. They say that they hold themselves ready at any moment to meet the officials of the company, and they think that if a fair and impartial hearing was given them the matter would be adjusted. Many of the men who have left their engines have been in the employ of the company for years. Two of them for 30, 12 or 15 for 25, and a large number for from 8 to 15 years. The action of other roads in sending engineers to run the trains on the Boston and Maine is severely criticised by the organization.

To-night a strong Police force guards the station and the yards, prepared to prevent any interference with the new engineers. None, however, is expected, as no attempt was made in the city or along the line in the suburbs to create a disturbance, or to make trouble with the new men. Travel on the road is much lighter than usual, and fewer trains are run. There is no doubt that the strikers have the public with them in their demand for better wages and better treatment, though their action in leaving their machines is condemned. To-night a large meeting was held in Faneuil Hall, called by the strikers' committee, to listen to P. M. Arthur, the Grand Chief Engineer of the Brotherhood. He defended the organization, maintaining that it had done much toward raising the standard of character among locomotive engineers, and was an organization for their good and for the benefit of their families. He asserted that it was opposed to strikes, only as a last resort; that in the case of the Maine Railroad there had been every effort to settle the difficulties amicably. Had there been a courteous spirit shown by the managers of the road, and those of the New-Jersey Central and the Grand Trunk there would have been no strike along the lines of either. The brotherhood had gained the victory over the New-Jersey Central and the Grand Trunk, because they had asked only their rights, and manfully defended them, and they would gain the victory over the Boston and Maine. They could hold out till the grass grew green over the rails of the road. Mr. Arthur denounced the engine dispatcher, Smith, as a perjured villain who had violated his oath. He gave warning to the Old Colony Railroad managers that if they did not immediately desist from giving aid to the Maine Road they would have a strike on their road.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE ESSIPOFF CONCERTS.

Mme. Essipoff gave the first of a series of three concerts at Steinway Hall, yesterday evening. Her reappearance brought together a tolerably numerous audience, and her performances were heartily applauded. After what has been written of Mme. Essipoff, in this place, time and again, it will scarcely be thought necessary to dwell upon the artist's talent. Volume and quality of tone, and breadth and elegance of phrasing are still conspicuous characteristics of her style, and a more beautifully sonorous, varied, and tasteful delicacy of the compositions she interprets is not likely to be enjoyed in many years. Beethoven's sonata numbered Opus 110 opened the concert, and subsequently Mme. Essipoff rendered a nocturne by Chopin and the well-known and vigorous polonaise in A minor, the Chopin-Liszt "Chant Polonais;" excerpts, if we are not mistaken, from Schumann's "Phantasie stück" and "Faschingschwank," and Rubenstein's pretty Romance in F and odd "Study on False Notes." M. Vivien contributed to the programme a violin and piano sonata by Rust and a fantasia on operatic airs by Vieuxtemps, and Mlle. Palma sang several songs.

TURKEY'S MENACING ATTITUDE.

PRINCE NIKITA DETERMINED TO NEGOTIATE FOR PEACE AT VIENNA—DISTURBANCES FEARED IN CONSTANTINOPLE—THE RUSSIANS ASSUMING THE OFFENSIVE—THE INSTRUCTIONS TO THE VARIOUS DELEGATES TO THE RECENT CONFERENCE.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—A telegram from Constantinople says, despite the Porte's request that a Montenegrin delegate should be sent to Constantinople to negotiate for peace, Prince Nikita persists in his desire to have the negotiations take place at Vienna.

The uneasiness on the Stock Exchange and the Paris Bourse, in consequence of the uncertainty of Eastern affairs, is intensified by various adverse rumors that Russia will precipitate a conflict; that negotiations with Montenegro are suspended, &c., none of which are traceable. No business is doing in international stocks, and the tone of the general market is flat.

LONDON, Feb. 14.—A dispatch from Berlin says that despite all the official denials, disturbances are feared in Constantinople. The troops are confined to their barracks, and numbers of the "Young Turkish" party have been imprisoned.

A letter to the Cologne Gazette from South Russia reports that the Police have been ordered to hasten the general levy, which will defend the country and maintain order, but is not liable to service outside of Russian territory. This is thought to indicate that the Southern Army will soon assume the offensive.

A correspondent at Paris summarizes the instructions given to the various foreign delegates to the conference. Gen. Ignatieff, he says, was instructed to press three points, viz., the occupation of Bulgaria by a Russian force, the autonomy of the Christian provinces, and the disarmament of the Mohammedans therein. He had the widest discretionary powers, being even authorized to order an advance of the Russian Army. The following telegram was sent to Ignatieff on his "name day:"

"The General of the Army of the South and the Generals under his orders, and his Imperial Majesty's troops address the sincerest congratulations to Gen. Ignatieff on the occasion of his fête, and impatiently await his order to begin their march."

The foregoing was not in cipher, and was consequently known to the Porte. MM. De Chandordy and Burgoing, the French representatives, were instructed not to agree to the occupation of Bulgaria by any regular army; to concur with any design intended to prevent or modify an occupation so as to render it inoffensive, to try to prevent any rupture between Russia and England, to maintain constant accord with all the neutral powers, and to agree to no proposal which would conflict with the will of Germany. The instructions of Count Corti, the Italian delegate, were almost identical with those to the French delegates. Count Zichy, the Austrian Ambassador, was instructed to refuse any proposal for occupation by Austria in order to be able to oppose Russian occupation; to join the neutral powers in any proposal designed to prevent war, and to sound Baron Von Werther's decisions as far as possible. Baron von Werther, the German Ambassador, was directed to associate himself with Russia and Austria in all questions on which they agreed. The above are the open, as distinguished from the secret, instructions to the Plenpotentiaries.

Roumanian papers again assert that a treaty has been signed to permit the passage of Russian troops through Roumania.

M. Ristics has left Belgrade for Constantinople.

A special from Pera says the Grand Vizier at a recent interview, said he was quite sanguine that peace would be concluded with Servia in three days after Ristics' arrival.

It has been decided to grant Montenegro's request for a rectification of her frontier. An amicable arrangement is also probable as to the place where negotiations shall be held.

THE POSITION OF ENGLAND.

A DISCUSSION OF THE SITUATION—THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE TO BE ABANDONED TO ITS FATE—POSSIBILITIES OF INTERVENTION—THE WARLIKE PREPARATIONS AT PERA—THE FORTHCOMING PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—The Times, in a leading article discussing the momentary lull in the Eastern dispute, says:

"The opening of Parliament has shown the direction in which English influence will be exerted. There is no radical difference between the views of the Ministry and the opposition. Thus at home and abroad the conditions of the problem are now better discernible. We cannot approach a moral certainty, but as regards things of utmost moment which were previously in doubt, we have the very highest degree of probability—we know what Turkey has done; we can speak with the greatest confidence of our own country; we think we know what Russia will do. Even the policy of Germany and Austria is defining itself, while it comes to this, that taking the political situation as it supervened on the dissolution of the conference, there is imminent danger of a great war between the Russians and Turks in which the European Governments will leave the Ottoman Power to its fate, reserving to themselves the right of interference at some future time should the disposal of the occupied or conquered territory affect their interests. This contingency is not even provided for, but it has generally been met with a sort of incredulity that danger would ever become urgent. Some subsidence of national excitement, some return of prudence and reflection, the conscience of an Emperor, the remonstrances of a Finance Minister might remove the causes for apprehension; or when the two adversaries stood opposed to each other they would find means to come to terms; or, finally, Europe would reconcile them by the conference. Nothing of this has been done, and seemingly the inevitable hour draws nearer and nearer. The pause of which we are conscious arises from the feeling that the die has been cast—that perhaps the power to change the course of events exists no more. There is no longer anything properly in suspense. The crisis is past so far as diplomatic influence is concerned, and any further appointment must be of a different order. But such a phase of feeling cannot endure long. When the people recover from the bewildering effect of all these events and revelations, they will combine and compare them in their minds and ask whether there is nothing more to be done. That is a question which will daily, hourly become more urgent, and will animate the forthcoming parliamentary debate, which would otherwise take the form of an historical disquisition. It is pretty certain that on both sides there will be a disposition to admit that the European Statesmen ought not to gaze in scandalous helplessness on a terrible catastrophe. But the nature of the intervention, which might range from the whisper of a dragoman to the thunder of an 80-pounder, will exhibit as wide diversities of opinion. The debate will be pointed by the knowledge that the Russian ultimatum has been dispatched and requires an answer. It has been said that the Governments objecting to answer in a body, and finding it inconvenient to answer singly, may take refuge in a resolve not to answer at all, but the worst of this would be that when a document is not answered the author has a certain right to assume that it cannot be answered. If the Governments content themselves with formal phrases, the decent veil of the admission that they have nothing to say, we give a moral advantage to a power which we may be sure will not be slow to use it. These considerations tend to show that the Government cannot better pursue a policy which, during the last three months, has conciliated national confidence, than by using every opportunity, and if possible making one, to retrieve the errors into which the Porte has been led by its own natural obsinacy and the suggestions of thoughtless or interested Europeans. This may indeed be a difficult task. Our correspondent at Pera describes the preparations for war, the effect of which is that while they ruin the State industrially, they bring a large armed force into Europe, and fill the capital with martial spirit, and make a compromise almost impossible. Every nerve is strained, every farthing lavished to make ready as if for an inevitable contest. The Asiatic provinces have been for a whole month drained of able-bodied men, muskets come from America by hundreds of thousands, and metallic cartridges by millions. Though it is impossible to refuse our admiration to a people who thus prepare to defend themselves, we cannot forget that they are outnumbered many times by the population of the hostile Empire, and seem to be entering on a perilous struggle with mistaken notions of their own strength and of the relations of the other powers toward them."

THE EXTRADITION CONTROVERSY.

LORD DERBY'S EXPLANATION OF THE NEGOTIATIONS.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—In the House of Lords this afternoon Lord Derby, Foreign Secretary, in reply to a question by Earl Granville, gave details regarding the extradition controversy. He said the difficulty arose because America intimated that she would try Lawrence, who was extradited, for another offense than the one named under the treaty, if the first failed. America communicated in August that she never intended to try Lawrence for a second offense. The British Government, therefore, while maintaining the construction it adopted, felt that there was no reason for longer suspending the operation of the treaty. The surrender of Brent, the Louisville forger, was unconditional because conditions were not required, arrangments continuing as before. Negotiations are now pending for a new treaty.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—A correspondent at Paris telegraphs: "There is a coalition in the Chamber of Deputies against the Duke Decazes, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and his position is regarded as endangered. It is reported that he will shortly exchange his present post for the St. Petersburg Embassy. Though the same report has been circulated several times heretofore, I cannot say that it is now at all improbable. In that event, M. Jules Simon will become Foreign Minister. This change, or any disturbance of the Cabinet at this time, would be little short of a public calamity.

A later dispatch says it is stated in official circles that the importance of the attacks on the Duke Decazes, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has been exaggerated. It is certain that the Cabinet and the leaders of the majority in the Assembly are now disposed to exert all their influence to sustain him.

ANOTHER FIGHT WITH CRAZY HORSE.

THE STORY TOLD BY AN INDIAN RUNNER—ATTEMPTS OF SAVAGES TO AMBUSH 350 SOLDIERS—THE RESULT ONLY A SKIRMISH.

CHEYENNE, Feb. 13.—A Red-Cloud Agency special to the Cheyenne Sun says Red Sack, an Indian runner from Crazy Horse's village, brings particulars of a fight which occurred near there about Jan. 3. This runner has been closely questioned by different parties, but adheres strictly to the following which he told yesterday to Gen. Crook and other officers: About a month ago the main body of hostiles, consisting of 800 lodges, was encamped on Tongue River near the mouth of Hanging Woman's Creek. A small band of Cheyennes were encamped further down, and about Jan. 3 they discovered some 350 infantry advancing from the direction of the Yellowstone. A skirmish ensued, the Indians retreating to the main village. The small squad of savages gave the alarm, and a large force of the Crazy Horse warriors advanced 18 miles down Tongue River to meet the soldiers. A few Indians were thrown forward as a decoy, while the remainder arranged themselves along the cañon to ambush the advancing troops. According to Red Sack, however, the Indian skirmishers were not followed into the trap, and after a desultory fire of three or four hours the military returned northward by the same route by which it had advanced. The Indians had three men badly wounded, two of whom died. The village has since moved westward to the head water of the Rose bud.

FIRST WARD ROWDIES.

A NICE SPECIMEN OF A DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMAN—"NICK" MULLER'S AMUSEMENT IN SHAUN RYAN'S LIQUOR SIORE.

A fierce free fight, in which political loafers of the First Ward were the participants, took place at 1 o'clock yesterday morning in "Shaun" Ryan's liquor store on State street, opposite the Battery Park. The affray is made specially disgraceful by the fact that one of the actors in it was Nicholas Muller, who was elected a member of the United States House of Representatives last Fall, having been nominated by Tammany Hall. After the antagonistic Assembly Conventions of Monday night, at which ex-Alderman John Moore was nominated to fill the place of the late Assemblyman Healey by the Tammany-Duffy faction, and John F. Berrigan by the Mullerites. Both parties enjoyed themselves after the usual manner of Tammany politicians. About midnight, Nick Muller, accompanied by four or five followers, entered "Shaun" Ryan's drinking-saloon. They found there a party of men who favored the election of Moore to the Assembly. An acrimonious discussion immediately arose. Muller and his party denounced Moore and the others condemned Berrigan. A young man named John O'Connor, said something which was resented by Congressman elect Muller, who deliberately spat in O'Connor's face. O'Connor struck at him, other persons interfered, and a free fight began. Muller struck at a person called Matt Stripp, and in return was knocked under a table. While he lay there the conflict raged about him. When he arose he drew a pocket-knife, opened it, and uttering an oath, ran toward Stripp. He struck at him once, but failed to hit him, and before he could repeat the blow a burly laborer, named Thomas Coughlin, wrested the knife from his grasp. He was then held back, and the conflict was stayed for a moment. It was reopened, however, by Mike Connors, who is employed by Muller to look after his business in Castle Garden. Connors struck John O'Connor, and was hit in return. Once more the crowd struggled around the room, and, although their oaths were loud, no policeman appeared to prevent possible murder. When the fighting ceased again in the saloon Mike Connors was not satisfied. He challenged a little tailor, whose name nobody appeared to know, to fight him, and the challenge being accepted, the two repaired without friends to the Battery Park. There in the darkness they fought nuseed, but, when they reappeared in the bar-room Mike's face was much worse looking than his diminutive but sturdy opponent's. When Ryan's bar-room and State street generally were quiet once more, Congressman elect Nick Muller was lighted to his home by "Torchlight" Docharty, a gentleman who owes his title to the ruddy cund character of his visage. The First Ward is now in a condition of ferment, and it is likely some fierce fighting will occur previous to and at the election of the successor of the late Assemblyman Healey, which occurs to-day.

ACCIDENT TO MR. ARTHUR CHENEY.

Mr. Arthur Cheney, proprietor of the Globe Theatre, Boston, was an inmate of the Mercer Street Police Station last night. An officer of the Fifteenth Precinct, while on patrol, noticed a man sitting on a doorstep in Fourth avenue near Thirteenth street. He was well dressed, being attired in a full dress suit, and was bleeding profusely from a severe cut on his forehead, and was almost unconscious from loss of blood. Assistance was procured and the man was taken to the station in a wagon. His injuries were carefully attended to, and after he regained consciousness he informed Capt. Byrnes that he was Mr. Arthur Cheney, and that he had dined during the evening with Mr. W. R. Floyd, the well-known actor at the Union Square Theatre, and with some other friends. After dinner he started to visit the Union Square Theatre, and on his way he slipped and fell heavily on the sidewalk, cutting his head severely. He became unconscious, and some passers by picked him up and seated him on the stoop where the officer found him. Owing to his condition, Mr. Cheney remained at the Station-house for the night.

SHORTCOMINGS OF LAWYERS.

At the meeting of the Bar Association last evening, Mr. R. Darling, from the committee appointed to investigate the charge made against William C. Barrett, a late member of the association, reported they had every reason to believe that he had been guilty of gross irregularities in his practice. They had presented the matter to the Judge of the Supreme Court, who had promised to look into the matter. The Executive Committee reported that the case of Titus H. Eldridge, who was accused of irregularity in practice in the Surrogate's Court, had been referred by the Supreme Court to William H. Leonard, Referee, to take testimony and recommend that the association appropriate $500 for counsel to prosecute the matter. It was so ordered. A general and lengthy discussion on the question of the morals of the Bar followed. Mr. Charles Price said that he knew of at least two members of the association who should be made the subjects of discipline, and that it would be well for the Executive Committee to take the work in hand. Mr. Clifford H. Rand said that the condition of the Bar of New-York was fast becoming a source of public discussion. He believed there was a terrible amount of piracy and extortion practiced in some of the courts by members of the Bar, and the Supreme Court Bench should be aided in bringing the offenders to justice. He moved a resolution to the effect that the Executive Committee should investigate the matter, with power to appoint sub-committees or employ counsel to aid the Supreme Court of the district in its efforts to remedy the evil. The resolution was adopted.

A BUSY LIFE ENDED.

DEATH OF A NOTED BROOKLYN MAN.

DEATH OF HON. CYRUS P. SMITH—A CAREER THAT COVERS THE MOST IMPORTANT PART OF BROOKLYN'S HISTORY.

In the death, yesterday morning, of Mr. Cyrus P. Smith, the City of Brooklyn lost one of its most prominent and respected citizens. Passing away full of years, his life is the history of Brooklyn during the period in which it grew up from a mere village into a great city, and the influence that Mr. Smith exerted in developing the trade and commerce of the city will gain for his memory in years to come a meed of heartfelt and deserved recognition. Cyrus Porter Smith was the son of Edward and Hannah Smith, and was born April 5, 1800, at Hanover, N. H. He worked on his father's farm during his boyhood, gaining such an education as could be obtained by irregular attendance upon district schools. Determined, however, to have a liberal education, he studied hard with his brother Noah, then in college, and entering Dartmouth when he was 18 years of age, paid his way by teaching district schools during the Winter in New-Hampshire and Vermont, and was graduated with honor in 1824. Entering the office of Chief Justice T. S. Williams, in Hartford, Conn., he studied law under the direction of that jurist, and was admitted to the Bar in 1827. While studying in Hartford, to eke out his scanty resources, he taught singing schools in different parts of the State, and on one of these excursions became acquainted with the lady who afterward became his wife. He looked about for a place in which to practice his profession, and decided to locate in Brooklyn, to which village he removed from Hartford in September, 1827. He was a lawyer without a client until the following April, when he earned his first fee of $5. He was not discouraged with tardy success, but determined to trust his fortunes with the growth of the town. He made many friends, and having connected himself with the First Presbyterian Church, of which Dr. Cox was Pastor, was its chorister from 1827 to 1833. During the Presidential campaign of 1828, when Jackson was a candidate, Mr. Smith came into notice as an active Whig. He was Clerk of the Village Board of Trustees from 1833 to 1835, and Corporation Counsel of the new city from 1835 to 1839, enjoying during this time a practice as large as that of any lawyer in the city. He was the fourth Mayor of the city in 1839, when he was elected by the Board of Aldermen. An act of the Legislature having sent the election of Mayor to the people, he was elected to that office by a popular majority in 1840, holding the office until 1843, or, in both terms, a period of three years and four months. He was Supervisor in 1836 and 1837, and in 1843, seeking to establish a company for supplying the City with gas, was elected Alderman from the Third Ward, and to his efforts in public and private was largely due the successful inception of the first gas company in Brooklyn. Being deeply interested in public education, he became an active and influential member of the School Board, and was the President of the Board of Education for 21 years. The present system was put into practical operation during Mr. Smith's official connection with it, and when he retired in 1867 the association undertook with his committee the important duty of definitely establishing the shore-lines of New-York and Brooklyn. Taking always a deep interest in ferry communication between the two cities, he became in 1839, upon the organization of the New-York and Brooklyn Ferry Company, one of the Directors of that corporation. In 1844 he was appointed one of a committee selected at a public meeting where it was resolved that measures should be taken to ascertain whether the assumed right of the City of New-York to lease the ferries was a franchise or simply a privilege to be recalled by the State. Subsequently, on July 4, 1844, when the Brooklyn Union Ferry Company was organized, he became a Director, and with Mr. George Wood—who, like Mr. Smith, was fully conversant with the previous condition of the ferries—submitted the articles of association. Upon the consolidation of the Fulton, South, Catharine, Hamilton avenue, Wall street, Roosevelt street, and Governeur street ferries, on Nov. 10, 1854, under the name of the Union Ferry Company of Brooklyn, Mr. Smith was chosen as Director. In 1855 he was elected Managing Director, and retained that position to the day of his death. In 1839 an accident occurred in Fulton street near the City Hall, by which a stranger had his leg broken. Mr. Smith witnessed the accident, and learned that there was no public provision for such cases nearer than the alms-house at Flatbush, four miles distant. He met the late Gen. Robert Nichol a few moments later, and had the injured man conveyed to a house near by. The two gentlemen defrayed the expenses of the injured man, and the circumstances impressed upon both of them the necessity for a city hospital. This was effected, after many obstacles had been overcome, in 1839, during Mr. Smith's first term as Mayor, when an appropriation was made for the purpose by the Common Council. In January, 1869, Mr. Smith was appointed Acting President of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company, with which he had been connected for many years, thus becoming controller of the two leading means of egress and ingress for the city. He was President of the Board of Trustees in the First Presbyterian Church, was one of the corporate members of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, the wealthiest institution of the kind in the City, a member of the Board of Directors of Green-Wood Cemetery, a Trustee of the House of Refuge, a Director of the Packer Female Collegiate Institute, also a Director of the Brooklyn Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, and was a member of the Advisory Board of the Graham Home for Aged Women, on Washington avenue.

Mr. Smith had been affected with a troublesome complaint for five years past, but fought bravely against it. He was present on Saturday afternoon at a meeting of the Directors of the Brooklyn City Hospital, and Saturday night at a reception at the house of Hon. Jonathan Ogden to Rev. Mr. Hall, recently called to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church. He complained of illness during the evening, was very ill later in the evening, but was better on Sunday, and saw several friends. He sank rapidly on Monday, the visits of friends being forbidden, and without rallying declined until between 6 and 7 o'clock yesterday morning, when he peacefully died. He leaves a widow and five children, four sons and a daughter. He leaves an ample fortune. He will be buried to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, from the First Presbyterian Church, in Henry street. The Common Council and the organizations of which he was a member will take formal action in recognition of his death to-day. The flags on the boats of the ferry companies, at the ferry-houses, on the City Hall, and other public buildings were yesterday displayed at half mast in respect to his memory.

A DOWN-TOWN CLUB-HOUSE.

About the beginning of the year a movement was started in Wall street to form a Down-Town Merchants' and Bankers' Association. The initiation fee was set at $100, and the annual dues at $50. The membership was limited to 500, and it was stated that when 300 persons should have subscribed the club should be considered as established. The lists rapidly filled until they now contain the names of nearly every prominent banker, broker, lawyer, and business man having dealings in the vicinity of the street, and it is announced the requisite number of members having been secured, that negotiations have been entered into for the lease or purchase of the old Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 50 and 52 Pine street, with a view of converting it into an elegant club-house, after the style of the London Merchants' and Bankers' Coffee-house. The best cooks that can be obtained will be secured, and all the luxuries the market can afford will be served to members at cost price. The idea of the club is to provide a place of reception for out-of-town customers, and also a place where meals and refreshment can be had at moderate rates. The new club-house will be richly fitted up, and will contain every convenience that modern taste can suggest.

REWARDING MERITORIOUS CONDUCT.

The ceremony of formally presenting medals and complimentary resolutions to five members of the Police force took place yesterday in the President's room, at Police Head-quarters, in the presence of the full Board of Commissioners. Capt. Murray, of the Fourth Precinct, whose clever capture of the Astoria masked burglars received complimentary recognition from the board, was formally presented by Gen. Smith with an engrossed copy of the resolutions recently adopted. The President, in making the presentation, expressed his gratification that Capt. Murray, whose promotion from the rank of Sergeant had been earned by faithful performance of his duty, had proved by his conduct that the board had not erred in elevating him to the rank of Captain. After Capt. Murray had thanked the board in appropriate terms, Roundsman John McDowell, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, who, about six weeks ago, was shot by a burglar whom he arrested, was presented with a silver medal, a series of complimentary resolutions, and a check for $1,000 voted to him by the Riot Relief Fund Committee. Roundsman John Gannon, of the Mounted Squad, received a silver medal and resolutions in consideration of his bravery in stopping a runaway team in Central Park. Roundsmen John Murphy, Christopher Wall, and Patrick F. Byrnes, who were instrumental in saving the lives of persons imperiled in burning buildings, were presented with

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

A CHARGE OF ABANDONMENT.

THE WIFE OF A PROMINENT BROADWAY MERCHANT COMPLAINS THAT SHE HAS BEEN DESERTED BY HER HUSBAND—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION IN THE YORKVILLE POLICE COURT.

On Monday last a warrant was procured from Justice Bixby by Mrs. Adelaide Kinzey, of No. 125 East Thirty-first street, for the arrest of her husband, William Kinzey, of No. 767 Broadway, a well-known dealer in fancy goods. Yesterday morning at 10 o'clock Mr. Kinzey appeared in the company of an officer in the Forty-seventh Street Police Court, where he was confronted by Mrs. Kinzey and her counsel, Mr. John D. Townsend. The circumstances of the alleged abandonment of his wife by Mr. Kinzey were then detailed to Justice Bixby by Mr. Townsend, as follows: Mr. Kinzey employed the plaintiff for several years previous to 1870 as a clerk in his store. Needing funds to carry on his business successfully, he borrowed from his clerk the sum of $1,600, the accumulated savings of years of labor. He was at this time, it was alleged, paying attentions to her, and later on he married her. Previous matrimonial experiments of the couple had resulted unhappily. Mr. Kinzey's former wife had procured a divorce from him in Connecticut. The second Mrs. Kinzey only promised her husband to contract a second alliance through the absence of her first husband from her for more than 10 years. The absconding husband was, it was said, a worthless fellow, to whom she had been married when only 15 years of age, and it was said he was compelled to leave this City, though the nature of his difficulties was not revealed in the court yesterday. The law of this State permits a woman who has not heard from her husband for five years to marry again, but also declares that the second marriage may be set aside by the Supreme Court without detriment to the character of the woman, or the legitimacy of the issue of the marriage. When Mr. Kinzey proposed to marry his lady clerk she accepted him, both parties according to Mr. Townsend, knowing the facts related by him. Their union proved happy, and for six years there was apparently no trouble in the Kinzey household. The couple visited Long Branch and other pleasure resorts last Summer, and sought the "best society" in those places. About two months ago Mr. Kinzey left the plaintiff, alleging that she had another husband and was therefore not his wife. He did not, however, immediately cease to provide for her support, but sent her $20 a week for a month or more. At the end of that period he wrote to Mrs. Kinzey, saying that he had heard she claimed as hers of right the weekly sum he gave her in kindness, and he would therefore cease to send it. Mrs. Kinzey, therefore, procured counsel, and the result was the arrest of her husband on a charge of abandonment. During Mr. Townsend's remarks Mr. Kinzey said, loudly, referring to one of the statements, "That's a lie." The lawyer turned and said fiercely, "If you make that remark again with reference to me, I'll pull your nose." Mr. Kinzey explained that he did not mean Mr. Townsend's statement was false within counsel's knowledge. When Mr. Townsend had finished his statement Mr. Kinzey asked that the examination into the case be postponed. After some discussion Justice Bixby adjourned the case on condition that Mr. Kinzey should pay his wife at the rate of $20 per week from the time the payments had ceased.

NATIONAL TROTTING ASSOCIATION.

SESSION OF THE BOARD OF APPEALS OF THE ATLANTIC DISTRICT—SEVERAL CASES HEARD AND REFERRED TO THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Board of Appeals of the Atlantic District of the National Trotting Association commenced its sessions at the New-York Hotel yesterday afternoon, Mr. C. W. Hutchinson, Vice President, in the chair. The members present were Edwin Thorne, of Millbrook, N. Y.; Gates H. Barnard, Troy, N. Y.; George Sturges, Philadelphia; C. J. Hamlin, Buffalo; W. M. Parks, Brooklyn, and Charles W. Hayes, Washington. The first case which came up for review was that of Mr. S. J. Hellings, of Williamsburg, Long Island, against the Brooklyn Driving Park, owned by M. Williams & Son, at Parkville, Long Island, asking for the removal of a suspension entered against the plaintiff by that association, on the ground that he withdrew his horse from a race in disobedience to a rule of the association, which provides that "no horse shall be drawn except by permission of the judges of the race, unless at or before 7 P. M. of the day preceding the race the proper party shall have lodged with the President or other officer of the course a written notice of his intention not to start." The plaintiff declared that Mr. Williams had made several entries after the purse had closed, at which time the latter informed him there were only eight entries in the race. Mr. Hellings subsequently found that there were 11 entries in the race, and he had withdrawn on that account. Besides this, he had made his entry conditionally upon his being able to drive his horse at the time of the race, as the plaintiff had been thrown from his sulky and had received injuries which disabled him. Mr. Williams, on the other hand, claimed that no conditional entry had been made, and submitted the original entry in writing, in which it did not appear that any special conditions were entered. The case was adjourned until this morning. A recess of one hour was next taken, after which the case of Hiram W. Howe, of Gravesend, Long Island, who had been suspended by the Point Breeze Park Association of Philadelphia, was considered. Mr. Howe had entered a horse named Delhi, belonging to Charles N. Kimpland, of Brooklyn, at a race in Philadelphia last year, had won the race and a purse of $750, which had been paid to Mr. Howe, when it was discovered that Delhi was formerly known as Flash, and owned in the South, where he had made a record of better time than was expressed in the limit of the race in which Delhi was entered. He was therefore not eligible to trot in the race at Philadelphia, and Mr. Howe was accordingly suspended. Mr. Howe, in his own defense, testified that he took the horse of Mr. Kimpland, trained him, and took him to Philadelphia, and had won the race "open to horses who had never trotted in 2:45;" he had never heard that Delhi had formerly been known as Flash, or that the horse was not a green horse, as he had been represented to be by Mr. Kimpland. The case was referred to the board for action in executive session. The next case was that of Mr. Charles B. Gilman, of Brooklyn, N. Y., against the Point Breeze Park Association of Philadelphia, for the removal of the decree of suspension against himself and his bay gelding Bay, and for reimbursement for his expenses, in taking his horse to Philadelphia, to the amount of $100. He claimed that he had received a notice of the race from Mr. Towne, Secretary of the Point Breeze Park Association of Philadelphia, in which he had solicited him to enter in the races at the Spring meeting of that association. In reply Mr. Gilman wrote Mr. Towne that if he felt disposed to "trust" him, he would enter in a specified race, but he had not the ready money to pay the entrance fees. He received no reply from Mr. Towne, and considered his silence an acceptance of his proposition. He arrived at Philadelphia with his horse Bay, and when his horse was placed on the track he was ruled off because Mr. Gilman had not paid the entrance fees. Mr. Towne, on behalf of the association, said that Mr. Gilman had not come near him at all on the day of the race, and that had he known that Mr. Gilman was there he should have seen him and arranged his entrance money for him. The case was referred to the board in executive session. The case of Hiram Schriner, of Reading, Penn., against the Point Breeze Park Association, W. H. Dobie, and John Turner was next tried. Mr. Schriner entered his mare Little Mary, in a race at Point Breeze Park, Philadelphia, on June 13, 1876. A jockey named William Hughes was employed to drive the mare, and, after winning two heats, Mr. Schriner discovered that Hughes was "pulling" Little Mary, evidently with the view of throwing the race into the hands of other parties. The plaintiff relieved Hughes, and drove the final heat himself, during which Levi Morris, the driver of the horse John S. Reid, deliberately crossed his track several times, thus "cutting" him, and preventing him from winning the race. All kinds denying the charges were submitted by Messrs. Dobie and Turner, and the Secretary of the association testified that the money had been withheld from all parties, and was still in the hands of the association. The case was then referred to the board for action in executive session. After trying some causes of minor importance the board adjourned until this morning.

HUMILIATING HIS OPPONENT.

About 11 o'clock on Monday night a cowardly assault was committed in presence of a number of ladies behind the scenes of the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Mr. Thomas F. Clark by one Douglass Walker, a young man who is said to be engaged in the insurance business. At the time of the assault a large audience was assembled in the Academy to witness an amateur performance given for the benefit of Mr. Leonard D. St. George, a well-known amateur actor. During an intermission in the performance Walker abruptly left a box which he occupied and passed on to the stage, which was crowded with ladies and gentlemen. Walking up to Mr. Clark he pulled from under his vest a slender riding-whip and with an oath struck the former across the face. Half a dozen blows, accompanied on the part of Walker with very foul language, fell on the head and shoulders of Mr. Clark before the astonished spectators of the outrage could interfere. Walker was arrested by Police Officer Mills as the conclusion of the performance, and yesterday morning he presented himself at Justice Walsh's Court, at 9 o'clock, but, as no person appeared to prosecute, he was allowed to go free. Mr. Clark is a member of the Wallack Amateur Society, and Secretary to Gen. Eckert, President of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company. Walker, who is entered on the Police return as a "clerk," gives as his reason for assaulting Clark that he had sworn to humiliate the latter in public. Mr. Clark's assailant is a member of the Amaranth Dramatic Society.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE COMPANY.

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE REFEREE—MR. GEORGE W. THOMAS, THE BOOK-KEEPER, GIVES EVIDENCE REGARDING CERTAIN ENTRIES IN THE JOURNAL.

The hearing before the Referee, William Allen Butler, in the matter of the Continental Life Insurance Company, was resumed yesterday afternoon at No. 20 Nassau street, when Mr. Robert Sewell, of counsel for the former Receiver, John J. Anderson, stated that the receipts which were to be given by Mr. Grace for the assets of the concern were not yet ready, and that more time was desired. The receipts will probably be ready to-day, and a schedule of the assets will then be put in evidence. Mr. George W. Thomas, the book-keeper, was recalled and gave testimony regarding certain entries found in the journal that was missing from Oct. 24 until Jan. 23. One of these entries was as follows: "Dr. to purchased policies account, $355,312 50." This item, Mr. Thomas said he was led to believe, referred to, and was intended to account for the bonds and mortgages that were sent to the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company at the time the contract for reinsurance was made by the Continental Company. This impression was caused by the entries on the credit side of the journal which corresponded in amount with that on the debit side, and were as follows: "Bonds and mortgages surrendered as per account, $291,900; United States bonds, $63 412 50." These two amounts added together make a total the same as the amount above-mentioned charged to purchased policies account. Mr. Thomas said he did not know anything about the actual transfer of these securities, but there was nothing else that he knew of at that time to which the amount could be charged; it had no reference to the purchase of policies in California and the Southern States.

Mr. L. V. Stiles was then called, and gave testimony referring to the same subject, his conclusions being the same as those of Mr. Thomas; he had kept the bond and mortgage account, and found that there was $291,400 missing about the time of the transfer; these securities, he thought, were in the office within 30 days before that time; witness examined the account about five days after Mr. Anderson's appointment, and asked that gentleman for some explanation of the matter, which he was unable to give; he then asked Mr. Anderson's attorney, Daniel J. Noyes, and was informed that some of the securities had gone to the New-Jersey Mutual, and that others were still in his [Noyes] hands. At this point the hearing was adjourned until to-day.

The resettlement of the order appointing William R. Grace Receiver of the Continental Company, was again before Justice Pratt yesterday. No important changes, other than those already reported, were made in it.

THE BROCK MURDER.

NO HOPE FOR OSCHWALD AND RYAN—THE DOOMED MEN TO BE HUNG ON FRIDAY.

Sheriff Harrison, of Essex County, New-Jersey, was notified late on Monday night that the Senate had sustained Gov. Bedle's veto of the bill passed by the Legislature for the benefit of Ryan and Oschwald, the men who murdered Policeman Brock in Newark in August last. There is now no hope of escape for the two men from the penalty imposed by the court, and preparations are making for their execution on Friday morning. The scaffold will be erected on Thursday night in the main corridor of the Newark Jail, between the cells and the eastern wall, about 20 feet north of the cells in which the prisoners are confined. Yesterday morning the condemned men were informed officially of the action of the Senate, when they evinced a painful sense of the danger which threatened them. The two men are confined together in cell No. 24 on the second tier. Ryan hung his head when the news was communicated to him, and did not make any reply for a moment. After a while he said: "I am, then, to be murdered for a crime I never committed. The Police will gloat over it. They have hunted me like a dog." To the question whether he would make any speech on the scaffold, he replied that he had nothing to say except that he is innocent of the murder, and that the people know it. When Oschwald was told that he must die he buried his head in his hands, and tears were seen to trickle down his face. He is about 23 years of age, of good appearance, and wore black side whiskers and mustache. He declined to say much, asserting that he was innocent, and that as he must die there was nothing to be done but to prepare himself for death. He expressed great concern for his parents, and said that he could stand his disgrace, but that its effect upon them would be terrible, and that he could not bear the thought that he had been born for such a fate. He declared that he would keep up and die like a man, and knowing his innocence it would aid him to meet his fate. A Methodist minister will tender spiritual advice and consolation to the doomed men until the execution.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

REPORTS OF THE SANITARY INSPECTORS ON THE DIRTY CONDITION OF THE STREETS—MORTALITY STATISTICS.

At the meeting of the Board of Health yesterday reports from the Sanitary Inspectors in relation to the disgracefully filthy condition of the streets were received and referred to the Board of Police for their action. Dr. Morris reports that all the streets in the Eleventh and Seventeenth Wards, north of Houston street, were in a terrible condition, and the advent of warm weather would certainly bring with it disease. The present method of cleaning (!) the streets was a disgrace to the City. Dr. Bryant states that large piles of filth are to be found in Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth avenues so as almost to impede travel, and in all the side streets between Fourteenth and Fortieth streets, and from Sixth avenue to the Hudson River, especially West Twenty-sixth, Twenty-seventh, Twenty-eighth, and Twenty-ninth streets, between Ninth and Eleventh avenues, Sixteenth street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues, and Thirty-third street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues. Dr. Hughes reported that Greenwich, Sullivan, Thompson, King, Clarkson, Watts, West Houston, Downing, Gansevoort, Jones, Cornelia, and Spring streets, west of Varick street, are in a fearful condition. Dr. Ewing also reported that the streets in his district are in a terribly filthy condition. In West One Hundredth street, where, within the radius of 1,000 feet, 77 families reside, the roadway is in a disgusting state. The street has not been cleaned for a long time, and the ashes and garbage are not removed, but are thrown into the street, where the accumulations almost prevent the passage of vehicles. All the Inspectors condemn the present method of street-cleaning and removal of ashes and garbage, and make suggestions for a thorough cleansing of the City, which must be accomplished before the warm weather sets in, or a pestilence will result.

The following is a synopsis of the weekly report of Dr. John T. Nagle, Deputy Register of Records: There were 423 deaths reported to have occurred in this City during the week ending Saturday, Feb. 10, which is a decrease of 29 as compared with the number reported the preceding week, and 187 less than were reported during the corresponding week of 1875. The actual mortality for the week ending Feb. 3 was 413, which is 146 less than the average number of deaths for the corresponding week of the past five years, and represents an annual death-rate of 20.05 per 1,000 persons living, the population estimated at 1,070,880.

THE QUARANTINE COMMISSION.

REPORT OF THE BOARD FOR THE YEAR—THE EXPENSES REDUCED, AND A BALANCE OF LAST YEAR'S APPROPRIATION ON HAND.

The Commissioners of Quarantine, W. L. B. Steers, David W. Judd, and James McQuade, yesterday presented their report for the year 1876 to the Legislature. The report gives a detailed history of New-York Quarantine from its establishment in 1794 on Governor's Island, until the present time. The State appropriations began in 1857, and have amounted to more than $2,000,000. Last year the Commissioners recommended that the appropriations should cease and that the department should be made self-sustaining by applying the revenues to the payment of the expenses. Following this recommendation only $10,000 were applied for Quarantine expenses last year, whereas the appropriations averaged for the 10 preceding years $203,000 annually, including construction fund. This nominal sum of $10,000 has been sufficient, and a balance still remains on hand. The cost of maintaining the artificial islands, the Officer's residence, and steam-boats has been greatly reduced. The steamer Nelson K. Hopkins, which in previous years has cost the State $10,000 annually for running expenses, last year paid her own expenses, and the Governor Fenton was run without expense to the State. The Quarantine Commission pain for lawyers' fees from 1870 to 1873, $24 000. From 1873 to 1875 the counsel fees were only $1,000, and in 1876 they were nothing. The fees for boarding vessels have not been charged since 1820, and were $6 50 for foreign, and from $1 50 to $3 for coast-wise vessels. The fees for foreign vessels are collected at the Custom-house, and the coasters pay their fees when boarded. The fumigation charges were reduced by the Commissioners at the beginning of last season. Believing that Hoffman Island, which is an unused artificial structure that has cost the State nearly half a million of dollars—could be permanently utilized for the purposes of the Commissioners of Emigration, it was offered to that board when Castle Garden was burned. The lower artificial island has been named Swinburne, in conformity to legislative enactment. The Commissioners believe that no apprehension need be felt as to the ability of the board to control cholera and yellow fever in the future. During 1876 99 vessels arrived on which yellow fever cases had occurred.

BET ON TILDEN AND LOST.

A SCENE IN AN UP-TOWN HOTEL—HOW THE PEOPLE VOTE.

The betting propensity is one that the Democrats have even more credit for possessing than they have deserved, but that they do possess it sometimes in a foolish degree was illustrated last evening in the lobby of a well-known up-town hotel. A company of gentlemen were discussing the prospects of the election of Hayes or Tilden, among the number being a popular gentleman who is a firm believer in the election of Hayes and a very loud and positive Tilden man. The argument came at last to a warm conclusion, when the ardent Republican offered to bet any man in the crowd $5,000 that Hayes would be the next President of the United States. Democratic confidence was not quite up to that point, but the gentleman's proposition was followed by a milder and less expressive one from the Tilden'te, who wanted to wager drinks for the crowd that there were more Tilden men than Hayes men in the room. Just then the elevator stopped at the floor and dropped out the elevator boy, whom the anxious Democrat was immediately desirous should be included in the count. A loud murmur of dissent was heard, the ineligibility of the boy either to vote or drink being urged without regard to party politics. The boy's ineligibility having been accepted without further complaint on the Democrat's part, and the party numbered and found to consist of 17 men, the Tilden champion took his stand at one side of the room and said, "As many of you as are for Tilden for the election of Mr. Tilden raise your right hands." The hand of the Democrat went up in solemn solitude. The gleeful and handsome Hayes man's turn had come, and he put the question for Hayes. Sixteen hands went up and the Democrat's chin went down, but without hesitation he led the party, which consisted of persons from every part of the country, who had only happened to be together, to the bar to receive the wager he had lost.

THE BAR ASSOCIATION.

IMPORTANT RECOMMENDATIONS ADOPTED—APPROVING OF FIXED SALARIES INSTEAD OF FEES.

At the meeting of the Bar Association last evening, the following resolutions were, on motion of Mr. Dwight H. Olmstead, unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the recommendations contained in the report made in 1872 by the Committee on Jurisdictions are approved by this association, and that a committee of three be appointed by the Chair to procure such legislation as shall give effect to said recommendations.

Resolved, That this association approves of such parts of the bills pending in the Legislature, introduced by Senator Woodin, as provide that the County Clerk and Register in this City receive salaries instead of fees for their compensation.

First—The preparation and adoption by the Legislature at once of a new Fee bill for all the offices above named; making it uniform for the State, and the repeal at the same time of all the existing statutes relating to the fees and perquisites of those offices, with suitable provisions for enforcing conformity to such new Fee bill.

Second—All said offices to be salaried, and, so far as practicable, fees abolished; but when fees are retained, they to be as small as the services will warrant, and in the more important offices be paid to a person specially designated to receive them, give receipts therefor, and pay them over into the public Treasury. In this manner it will soon be found what offices are self-supporting, and what reduction or increase of charges is proper.

Third—For the purpose of facilitating the transfer of titles to real estate, and lessening the expenses thereof, the following changes to be made. (1.) The number and duration of liens on real estate to be materially reduced. (2.) All such liens, and also wills and decrees, affecting real property, to be recorded in the same office in each county where deeds are now recorded; and no judgment hereafter recovered, or other lien hereafter created, to be operative as such, until the same, or a transcript or a notice thereof be filed in the recording office.

THE MAYPOLE OF MERRYMOUNT.

LECTURE BY HON. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, JR., BEFORE THE LONG ISLAND HISTORICAL SOCIETY—A HUMOROUS EPISODE IN EARLY NEW-ENGLAND HISTORY.

Hon. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., read a paper entitled "The Maypole of Merrymount" before the Long Island Historical Society, in the Second Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, last evening. Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs presided, and a distinguished company, composed of the leading citizens of Brooklyn, filled the church. The hero of Mr. Adams' interesting sketch was a roistering Englishman named Thomas Morton, who settled near Mount Wollaston, on the shore of Massachusetts Bay, somewhere between the years 1625 and 1630. While the other colonies at Plymouth and elsewhere were composed of God-fearing and gloomy-visaged Puritans, Morton and his followers were a set of perpetual holiday-makers, and endeavored in a small way to introduce and establish the roistering customs of "Merrie England" on the savage shores of the New World. In the intervals of hunting and trading with the Indians, they set up a Godless Maypole, and celebrated its erection with drunken frolics which scandalized their Puritan neighbors greatly. They also took unto themselves companions from among the female "salvages" without the ceremony of marriage. These things continued until they began to injure their pious neighbors in pocket, by offering the Indians unlimited arms and whiskey, in return for pelts, and then the long pent up indignation of the Puritans burst forth. Ineffectual efforts to suppress the roisterers of Mt. Wollaston, otherwise known as "Merrymount," were made by the authorities of Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay, and finally Capt. Miles Standish was dispatched with a force of eight men to arrest Morton and his comrades. After several mishaps the job was accomplished, and Morton ultimately sent back to England. Here the "Lord of Misrule," as the Puritans termed him, spent his time in plots against Gov. Winthrop and others of the colonists, and at one time enlisted in his favor the sympathies of Archbishop Loud and others nigh in the King's confidence. In 1637 he appeared in Holland, where he published a book entitled The New-England Canaan, in which he ridiculed the Puritan authorities in no gentle strain. In 1643 the founder of the Merrymount Maypole returned to Boston, where he was subsequently arrested and condemned to pay a fine of £100 for his share in the contumacious against Gov. Winthrop. Morton subsequently died at Agamenticus, in Maine, in or about the year 1648, and Mount Wollaston passed into the hands of a descendant of Miles Standish's celebrated sweetheart, whose charms have been sung by Longfellow. Mr. Adams' paper was listened to throughout with close attention, and received the hearty laughter and applause of the audience. At its close a reception was given to the author at the residence of Hon. Henry E. Pierrepont, at which a large and fashionable assemblage was present.

THE SHORTEST CHARGE ON RECORD.

A very good example, which might be followed with advantage, was set by the court, counsel, and the jury in the suit of John H. Earle against the New-York Life Insurance Company, which was tried before Judge Joseph F. Daly, in Part III. of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday. The suit was brought by the plaintiff as the Assignee of the Executor of one Daniel Ladd, deceased, to recover $3,025 and interest, as the balance due on a $5,000 policy of insurance issued by the defendants. The company resisted payment because there were conflicting claims to the money, and principally because in one suit for the recovery of the money by Georgia creditors of the deceased, the plaintiff had been attached under the garnishment or trustee process at Savannah. The plaintiff's counsel summed up his case in about four sentences. The defendants' counsel said he did not wish to bore the jury, and said no more. Judge Daly merely remarked: "Gentlemen of the jury: If you believe the plaintiff, you will find a verdict in his favor for the whole amount claimed." The jury, without leaving their seats, found a verdict for the plaintiff. The summing up and charge and finding occupied less than three minutes. Raphael Moses appeared for the plaintiff, and S. R. Ten Eyck and Henry E. Knox appeared for the defendants.

CANNOT HAVE A DOUBLE SALARY.

The case of Billings against the Mayor, &c., was decided by the Court of Appeals yesterday. The action was brought to recover a salary of $2,000 per annum for services as Supervisor since Jan 1, 1875, in addition to the salary received by the plaintiff as Alderman. The defense urged by the Corporation Counsel was that by the amendment of the Constitution in 1874, all the powers of Supervisors in the City of New-York devolved upon the Aldermen and were exercised thereafter by them as Aldermen, and that the salary received by them as Aldermen was all the compensation to which they are entitled. The Court of Appeals has sustained the defense and relieved the City Treasury from claims preferred by the City Fathers, amounting to upward of $100,000. George F. Comstock appeared for the plaintiff, and D. J. Dean, Assistant Corporation Counsel, for the City.

SERGT. MILLER AGAIN DISMISSED.

The second trial of Sergt. Augustus Miller, late of the Twenty-second Precinct, before the Police Board, resulted yesterday in his dismissal from the department. Miller was tried in March, 1875, on the charge of playing cards in a liquor store, and was dismissed. By order of the Court of Appeals he was reinstated, but was tried again on the old charges, which were sustained to the satisfaction of the board.

President Sloan, of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Company, pronounces the statement that a combination with the New-Jersey Central is contemplated by his company "an infamous lie." WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

The case of William H. Hammond, Keeper of the County Alms-house, who was charged with misappropriating county supplies and ill-treating paupers, which has been under investigation for some weeks past by a committee appointed by the Board of Supervisors, came to a conclusion yesterday, the committee acquitting Hammond of all the accusations preferred against him.

Some months since Ellen Frayne, of Yonkers, preferred a charge of seduction against a man named John Mack, and he fled to New-Jersey to avoid the consequences. He was brought to White Plains on Monday night and lodged in the County Jail.

During the meeting of the Board of Supervisors of Westchester County yesterday, a communication was received from County Treasurer Davids, containing an order from the Supreme Court of New-York City, ordering him to show cause why a mandamus should not issue compelling him to produce certain certificates of sales and leases of land for non-payment of taxes on property in the annexed district. Accompanying the letter was an affidavit made by Controller Kelly, to the effect that the City and County of New-York has repeatedly but without success, attempted to get possession of the documents in question. The matter was referred to the counsel for the board.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections were in session until a very late hour this evening, occupied with the examination of Alfred B. Hinman and A. W. Shaw, of Detroit, Mich., who have had business transactions with J. H. N. Patrick, of Omaha, Neb., and who have communicated with him by telegraph in cipher for some years past. The key to the cipher used by them is the Household English Dictionary, and by the aid of this key the following translations of cipher dispatches relative to the Oregon Electoral case were made:

PORTLAND, Nov. 28.

W. T. Pelton, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

J. H. N. PATRICK.

I fully indorse this. JAMES K. KELLEY.

PORTLAND, Nov. 30.

W. T. Pelton, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New-York:

THE MORIEUND FLORIDA CASE.

DEMOCRATS STILL ENGAGED IN THE POST-MORTEM EXAMINATION—PURMAN SOLD AND DELIVERED—REMARKABLE ACTIVITY OF DUDLEY FIELD AROUND THE CORPSE—HE ENCOUNTERS A BAD WITNESS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—In the House today the discussion of the report of the Florida Investigating Committee was continued, occupying most of the session. Upon its conclusion, the resolution reported by the majority of the committee, declaring the Tilden Electors to have been legally chosen, was adopted by a party vote. Purman, of Florida, ratified his bargain with the Democracy by voting for the resolution.

David Dudley Field is kept busy skipping between the Electoral Commission and the committee over which Proctor Knott was appointed to preside. Field continues his examinations of witnesses when not attending the sessions of the Electoral Commission, but for what purpose he persists in taking testimony is not apparent. To-day a number of witnesses were examined, but nothing material was developed, except in the case of Green, who was Assistant Secretary to the Louisiana Returning Board, and who Littlefield testified was present when he made the alterations in the Vernon Parish returns, and heard Wells issue instructions to make the alterations. Green was not a good witness for Field. He testified that he did not hear Wells issue such instructions to Littlefield; did not see Littlefield making alterations, and knew nothing about any fraudulent or irregular transactions on the part of the Returning Board or its officers in connection with the canvass and return of the vote of Louisiana.

ANOTHER DEMOCRATIC DISCOVERY.

E. GLOVER'S COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING VARIOUS DISTRICT SCANDALS—AN ALLEGED BRIBERY OF CONGRESSMEN BY A FIRM OF CONTRACTORS—TWO DEMOCRATS IMPLICATED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—Mr. Glover's Real Estate Pool Committee, which has authority to investigate universally, is again at work conducting some half-a-dozen investigations into District of Columbia, as well as other affairs. To-day they had the most interesting meeting of the present session. Col. William A. Cook, an attorney here, was before the committee for some time, and was examined upon every conceivable subject of scandal in and about the District. There was little of interest and nothing of importance in his testimony. He was followed by Mr. Taylor, of the late firm of Taylor & Filbert, who were large contractors under the late Board of Public Works. This firm did several hundred thousand dollars worth of work, and when they came to close up the business of the firm, Mr. Taylor claims that there was over $60,000 between the partners. It was claimed by Filbert, so Taylor says, that this amount had been expended in feeing certain lobbyists and members of Congress, and in subsidizing certain newspapers and correspondents to puff the Board of Public Works. He objected to the expenditure, and it has become the subject of litigation between them. Therefore, Taylor appears before the Committee, and produces what he calls a cash-book, containing certain memoranda as to the payment of money. The book was deposited with the committee to-day and Filbert summoned to appear to-morrow and produce his check-book to verify the story of the cash-book. It is claimed that this book, now in the hands of the committee, shows payments of $4,500 each to ex-Congressman Charles A. Eldredge, of Wisconsin, and Judge Woodward, of Pennsylvania, and $3,500 to C. Harmer, of Pennsylvania. Woodward and Eldredge are Democrats and Harmer is a Republican. It is also said that the names of Col. J. W. Forney, D. C. Forney, and a newspaper correspondent now deceased, are recorded as having received certain sums. What explanations Mr. Filbert's stubs and check-book may give of these entries will be seen to-morrow, and whether they were legitimate business transactions or not remains to be explained. Mr. Glover thinks he is on the track of something very interesting and important, and therefore the cash-book presented to-day has been carefully guarded, and when Mr. Filbert appears to-morrow the whole mine is to be exploded.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

THE SINKING FUND BILL CONSIDERED IN THE SENATE—MR. BOOTH DENOUNCES THE LOBBY, AND SUCCEEDS IN DEFEATING ITS SCHEMES FOR THE PRESENT AT LEAST.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—The bill providing for the establishment of a sinking fund to reimburse the Government for money advanced to the Pacific railroads, was considered in the Senate to-day. The bill under consideration is that reported by Senator West from the Committee on Railroads, and is known as the bill favored by the companies, and for the passage of which a large and influential lobby daily besieges the Senate wing of the Capitol. The operations of the lobby have become so bold and persistent that Senator Booth to-day called attention to their operations, and denounced them in a very sharp and vigorous speech. A vote was taken to-day on a very material amendment to the bill, resulting in a defeat of the lobby scheme. The third section of Mr. West's bill provides that the payments to be made for sinking-fund purposes shall be in lieu of all payments or other requirements from the companies under the act of 1862. Mr. Dawes offered an amendment providing that the sinking-fund payments shall be in addition to the payments now required, but subsequently withdrew it. Mr. Booth immediately renewed it, and it was sustained by a vote of 22 to 20. This vote, close as it was, alarmed the friends of the companies, and, fearing to proceed further, a motion to go into executive session was adopted upon the motion of Mr. Ingalls. The motion for an executive session was made in order to give the friends of the West bill, in and out of the Senate, an opportunity to muster additional forces. The Senate was very thin when the vote was taken. Forty-two votes were recorded and five pairs were announced, which makes the record equivalent to 52. It is reasonable to suppose that of the more than 20 absentees the proportion of those who would have voted for the bill is the greater, because the lobby had gotten together as many of the friends of the Railroad bill as possible. The result shows that there is need of great vigilance, however, to prevent the Senate from passing the bill. The amendment destroys the West bill, so far as it is of use to the roads, but it was made in Committee of the Whole, and there is, therefore, another chance to vote directly upon it before the main question on the bill can be put. The passage of the bill without this amendment would make the ending of this Congress infamous, though up to this time the legislation during two sessions has been unusually clean and free from jobs.

A CONSPIRACY EXPOSED.

CLAIM AGENTS DETECTED IN COLLECTING UNCLAIMED INTEREST ON REGISTERED BONDS—A CLERK IN THE FIRST AUDITOR'S OFFICE IN LEAGUE WITH THE SWINDLERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—A short time ago the existence of a conspiracy among certain New-York lawyers and Treasury officials, for the purpose of collecting unclaimed interest on registered bonds, was exposed in THE TIMES. The attention of Secretary Morrill having been directed to the matter he at once took steps to ferret out the guilty parties. The case was placed in charge of William B. Moore, Supervising Special Agent, who detailed W. H. Timmons, of that division, to conduct the investigation. Mr. Timmons proceeded to New-York and after two weeks' labor obtained a clue which enabled him to fasten guilt upon a prominent claim agent in that city. This claim agent was discovered to be in frequent correspondence with Thomas G. Douglass, a clerk in the First Auditor's office, and further investigation developed the fact that Douglass has been in the habit of furnishing information from the records of the department upon which the claim agent operated, the collection of unclaimed interest thus fraudulently made being divided between him and Douglass. Douglass was arrested this evening at his home in this city by Mr. Timmons, and the arrest of his New-York accomplice has been ordered. It is believed from certain evidence in the possession of the Treasury officials that other parties in New-York and Washington have been engaged in the swindle, and other arrests may shortly follow.

THE NAME OF THE NEW-YORK CLAIM AGENT ASCERTAINED.

The New-York claim agent referred to in the above dispatch from Washington is said to be a lawyer named Jenkins. The officer detailed by Mr. Moore to work up the case gained the confluence of Jenkins and soon got the matter into a shape, and Mr. Moore was compelled to ask the co-operation of the United States Treasurer to identify the parties in the Treasury Department who were furnishing information to Jenkins and others to enable them to carry on their swindle. He reported what had been ascertained by the officer referred to, to Secretary Morrill. Douglass, the Washington clerk, has been dismissed from the service and placed under arrest, and Jenkins has been disbarred from practice before the department. Jenkins, who it is estimated has made about $25,000 out of the swindle, has not been arrested, but is known to be in the City. Others who are supposed to be implicated in the frauds will be shortly exposed.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—A bill has been drafted to meet substantially the recommendations of the President in his recent special Message with regard to early specie payments, and submitted to him, as it probably will be to the Committee of Ways and Means. Its provisions differ in several respects from the suggestions of the President, but there is reason to believe that he will not seriously object to the changes. The bill provides for the issue of the 30 years 4 per cent. stock already authorized by the act of July, 1870, and by the Redemption act of January, 1875. The amount of greenbacks to be funded into this stock is $100,000,000, limited to $10,000,000 in any one month. A further sum, say of $30,000,000 in greenbacks, is authorized to be withdrawn in exchange for subsidiary silver, and to this end the coin is to be increased to the aggregate of $80,000,000, including the $50,000,000 at present authorized. The theory of the provision is that silver change will take the place of the small greenback ones and twos below the denomination of $5. These are limited by the act of 1868 to $35,000,000. But the amount now outstanding is believed to be below $30,000,000. No commission is allowed for the funding or exchange of the greenbacks for bonds or silver coin. The expenses of engraving, printing, &c., of the bonds are limited to one-fourth of one per cent. Some assurances have been given that the bill will meet with favor from both sides of the House of Representatives after the Presidential trouble shall have been settled.

Owing to the arduous duties of the five Justices of the Supreme Court on the Electoral Commission the court, instead of commencing business on the 19th inst., pursuant to adjournment, will probably take a further recess until the 26th inst.

THE LOUISIANA INVESTIGATION.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—The Committee on the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of the House this morning recalled Charles H. Brush, one of the telegraph operators from Florida, who, during his previous examination, had declined to answer certain questions. He stated that he had been present ever since, holding himself in readiness for the committee; he said that he was appointed a member of the Provisional Capitol Police force by Sergeant at Arms Thompson, at the request of Mr. Finley, member of Congress from Florida; he said that he did not communicate his knowledge of telegrams, in reference to which he had testified before this committee, to any one except operators who, like himself, were bound not to divulge these telegrams; he thinks he told De Berry and Mills about the contents of these dispatches; Sergeant at Arms Thompson sent for witness yesterday, and told him that when he [Thompson] appointed witness he was under the impression that witness had been discharged as a witness, and told him to report this morning; witness was not aware that the fact of his being a witness precluded his accepting an appointment on the Capitol Police force, and was not aware that Brewster had testified himself that he wrote it on Nov. 4. [The application of Brewster for reappointment is dated Dec. 9, and not Nov. 19, as erroneously stated yesterday.]

Q.—Is it the practice of the department to accept a resignation as of a time past? A.—If they are tendered in that manner.

Q.—Is it the opinion of the department that an officer can be relieved of his duty by such an act? A.—I can't say that he could not receive his pay.

Q.—Was not the application post dated in this instance to enable him to be eligible as an Elector? A.—Not that I know of; I did not even know that he was a candidate.

Q.—How was it that Brewster was reappointed to his office shortly after voting as an Elector? A.—I cannot say.

Q.—Was it not in pursuance with a prearranged plan that this course was pursued? A.—Not so far as I know.

Q.—Who would know here in Washington when Mr. Brewster's letter of resignation was received? A.—I don't know whether the President, or the Commissioner of the Land Office, or I myself received it.

Q.—Would the President's Private Secretary know? A.—I can't tell.

William H. Green, the colored Assistant Secretary of the Louisiana Senate, and former Minute Clerk of the Returning Board, stated that he knew that the board and the clerks dined together on Sunday, Dec. 3. They were at that dinner when witness returned to the office. Gov. Wells, when he returned from dinner, asked witness to bring him the returns from various parishes. Those of Vernon Parish may have been among them; saw Littlefield at work on returns from some parish; could not say whether it was Vernon Parish or not.

Q.—Did you see Gov. Wells at a desk in the clerk's room that evening? A.—To my recollection I did not.

Q.—Did you see Mr. Littlefield at the desk that evening? A.—I can't say whether I did or not; he may have been there.

Q.—Did you see Littlefield apparently trying to conceal some papers from you? A.—I did not, to the best of my recollection. The witness stated that the board ordered the returns from the Parish of Vernon to be compiled on Dec. 5; a minute-book of the proceedings was kept by the witness; no minute was made of the findings of the board in any particular parish; no mention of any particular poll in Vernon Parish was made; after the promulgation of the returns witness, during a conversation with the other clerks, asked what was the matter with Vernon Parish, but nobody answered; two days later he asked the same question, but he could not say whether anybody replied or not; Green said that he looked at the compiled returns in the Secretary of State's office, but brought none back to the office of the Returning Board, and could not say whether anybody else had done so or not; could not say that he had seen any in the office of the board after they had been in the Secretary's office; has seen the original return from Vernon Parish, but has not seen it since it has been altered; does not know that the original was brought back from the Secretary's office and a copy substituted for it; has not written any of the affidavits used before the board; has not seen any written in his presence; on Dec. 3 nearly 1000 affidavits came to the board; about one-half were signed by persons who made their mark; about one-half of the affidavits were from Republicans, and were mostly sworn to before Mr. Wolffley; witness had some affidavits relating to Vernon Parish; cannot say whether there were three or four; does not know what names were signed to them; kept an index-book of all signatures.

Q.—Were there not three affidavits—one signed Samuel Collins, his mark; the other Tom Brown, his mark; the third Samuel Carter, his mark? A.—I remember the name of Collins, but not the other two.

Q.—Were not these received on Dec. 5? A.—Oh, no, Sir; witness turned over to Judge Cavanac all the affidavits he [witness] had in his possession; believes there were protests and affidavits received by the board after the canvass of the Supervisors of Election were in; did not know that affidavits were daily manufactured at the Custom-house; heard such rumors on the streets; never mentioned it to his fellow-clerks.

Q.—Did you not make a remark that if anything was going to be divulged regarding the actions of the board you were not going to be left out? A.—I may have made that remark.

Q.—Did you not see some of the clerks making the cross marks on the affidavits? A.—I did not. In reply to questions by Mr. Lawrence witness stated that most of the Democratic affidavits were sworn to before Mr. Henston; had not heard of any affidavits being manufactured by the Democrats; does not know of any alteration of the returns by any of the clerks or by members of the board or by their direction; has no knowledge of any place being burned; knows of no clerk making affidavits, and had not heard of anything of the kind while the board was in session.

By Mr. Field—Did you think the preponderance of evidence was rather on the Democratic side? A.—You told me a minute ago not to think. [Laughter.] Witness was handed the original returns from Vernon Parish, and stated that the votes now stated on the same for the Hayes Electors were 178, but that when it was first received by the board there were only two votes for them; how this came is one of those mysteries which I cannot explain. The witness stated that he did not hear Judge Davis give any clerk instructions to alter any papers or sign any name to any affidavit, although he might have done so without witness knowing anything about it.

ALLEGED INELIGIBLE ELECTORS.

The Committee next proceeded to the examination of alleged ineligible Electors. George D. Chaffee, one of the Electors in Illinois, testified that he received verbal notice of having been appointed Commissioner of the Circuit Court of the Southern District of Illinois; never took the oath of office or entered into any bond, or had any papers from or connection with the Government, but has signed some affidavits; never resigned, or tendered any resignation, because he never received any but a verbal notice of his appointment. A copy of the record of the court showing Chaffee's appointment was put in evidence.

Mr. Lawrence said what he objected to was that a witness who was under a contempt to the committee should be appointed as a guard. In reply to a question by Mr. McDill, the witness stated that he did not communicate the contents of the dispatch which he had heard going over the wires to any one in Florida; did not tell De Berry about it. In answer to Mr. Field, witness said he was discharged from the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company for testifying to the truth, and that he did not think it any harm to accept the position here. He also said he was paid his witness fees and mileage up to Jan. 30.

Sergeant at Arms Thompson made a statement to the effect that he appointed Brush under the impression that the latter had been discharged by the committee.

Hon. Z. Chandler, Secretary of the Interior, was called, and produced papers relating to the resignation and application for reappointment of Orlando H. Brewster, one of the Louisiana Electors. He said he supposed that Brewster's letter of resignation, dated Nov. 4, was received on Nov. 15 or 16; did not know whether he received it from the President or not; did not know it was ante-dated.

John H. Moore, of Tennessee, Elector of the State, testified that he was in the Naval Academy from 1859 to 1860 as Acting Midshipman; failed to pass the examination, and left the Academy; but has no recollection of ever having tendered any formal resignation; entered the Confederate service in 1861, and served during the war. The committee then, at 2:45 o'clock, adjourned until Friday morning at 10 o'clock.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

LOUISIANA STILL UNDER DEBATE.

DEMOCRATIC TRICKS TO GAIN TIME FOR TALK—A QUESTION OF RECEIVING EVIDENCE THRUST IN—ARGUMENTS ON THE POINT BY MESSRS. TRUMBULL, STOUGHTON, AND SHELLABARGER—A TELLING POINT MADE BY READING JUDGE CHURCH'S LETTER TO THE TIMES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—The Electoral Commission met this morning at 10 o'clock, and Mr. Carpenter concluded his speech, talking, during the last part of his time, to the Commission as if he were addressing a jury. He was particularly sharp in reading a portion of Mr. Hoar's report on the Returning Board two years ago, and in alluding to Mr. Edmunds' speeches on the Pinchback case, and he seemed to be sorry that he could not find some old document to hurl at each member of the Commission severally. He had something to say about the prospect of the Government going to "smash" in the Centennial year. Carpenter spoke till he had occupied in all two hours of the four and a half allotted to his side. At this point a new Democratic trick was displayed. It was expected that the Louisiana case would be fully discussed in all its phases in the time first granted, but Mr. Trumbull in the middle of the argument, after Mr. Carpenter's speech, made an offer to submit evidence to sustain the Democratic objections and asked for time to argue its admissibility. The reading of the statement of what the Democrats offered to prove took a full hour. Then followed a talk between the Commissioners and the counsel about the new arrangement of time for discussion made necessary. Trumbull asked for three hours on each side to discuss this interlocutory question. Each of the Commissioners expressed his views about the order of argument, the point being whether the admissibility of evidence should be first argued and decided, or whether arguments should embrace the entire subject. Justice Strong moved to give each side two hours to argue the question of evidence. Senator Edmunds moved a substitute to give each side three hours to argue the case as it stood with the offer of evidence made, and his purpose was to have the proceedings in such form that when the Commission retired, if it decided to exclude evidence, it could finish the whole case without further argument Mr. Thurman spoke rather complainingly that counsel would not agree to submit all the evidence and argue the effect it would have if considered. This, of course, the Republican counsel never dreamed of consenting to. Finally it was arranged that two hours should be given to each side to argue the question of testimony, with the further privilege that more time could be taken by either side on this branch of the case by deducting from the four and a half hours previously allowed on the general discussion. Except for this permission the first question would have gone to the Commission with two hours more of argument on the Democratic than on the Republican side, because Carpenter's speech related as much to the consideration of evidence as though prepared on that subject. This was the trick in postponing the offer of evidence till Carpenter had spoken. The arrangement as finally made was equitable, and was only subject to the criticism of causing unnecessary delay. There can be no harm from this, however, for if the evidence is excluded, as is expected, there is time enough, and it there should be an attempt to examine the evidence offered by Mr. Trumbull, a decision could not be reached by the 4th of March, if that day were still six months distant instead of less than two weeks; and the liberality of the Commission in granting time for argument may be taken rather as an intimation that the evidence will not be considered, except, as in the Florida case, such as relates to the ineligibility of Electors.

At 12:30 the Commission took a recess of half an hour, and at 1 o'clock began the hearing of the new question raised by the offer of evidence. Mr. Trumbull was the first speaker on the side of the Democracy. He made an exceedingly ingenious argument, which was, however, more notable for its sophistry than for any new light which it threw upon the Presidential complications. He said that the Electoral Commission was the only tribunal that could decide the vexed questions which had grown out of the recent elections. The Commission was not a returning board, nor could it be termed a court. It was, he contended, a body which had not only been created by Congress, but which fully represented the two houses, and had all the powers, as to the counting of the votes, which were possessed by them. Having such powers, it was competent to go to the bottom in any investigation which it was necessary to make regarding the recent election and its results. The Commission was to decide who had received the vote of Louisiana, and that question could not be determined without examination and investigation. If his party were allowed to do so, Mr. Trumbull continued, they would undertake to prove that their opponents entered into a conspiracy to capture the vote of the State by fraud and forgery. Not content with this general and sweeping allegation, which was made with a grand flourish that would have done honor to "Hamburg-Massacre" Butler, or unreconstructed Govey. Mr. Trumbull attacked Ex-Gov. Kellogg with a great deal of bitterness; then, rushing back to the question of how far the power of the Commission extended, he quoted from Cushing and other legal authorities to prove that it would be just and lawful for it to go into a full and exhaustive investigation of all the charges made by his party, and that to do this it would be necessary to examine and hear the testimony which he and his associates were ready to submit. Mr. Trumbull's next point was a rather lame one. He said that there was not a republican form of government in Louisiana when the recent election was held, and that the State Government of which Kellogg was the head could not have existed for an hour if it was not upheld by the power of the United States Army. Mr. Trumbull might have gone further than this, and stated that there was no republican Government in any part of the South which, unaided by the Federal power, could resist the attacks of the White League and other lawless and murderous bands of men organized in the interest of the Democratic Party. Mr. Trumbull was wise enough, however, to make no reference to these facts. He argued at considerable length that fraud, if proved, would be fatal to the returns made by the Louisiana canvassers, and then referred with great emphasis and more declamatory force than was ever displayed by him before to what he was pleased to call "the infamous fraud in the parish of Vernon." He alluded, of course, to the trumped-up tale which was told about Gov. Wells by David Dudley Field's pet witnesses, the Clerk Littlefield. Mr. Trumbull then spoke at length regarding the composition of the Returning Board, claiming, of course, that it was illegal because the vacancy upon it was not filled by the appointment of a Democrat. To support this charge, however, Mr. Trumbull was unable to bring anything which could be called proof. This part of his argument was very weak. He closed by stating, with a great effort at dramatic effect, that if the vote of Louisiana was counted for the Republican candidates, it might be so counted in accordance with the forms of law, but it could not be done in conformity to the spirit of the law or the rights of the people.

During the delivery of his address Mr. Trumbull was frequently interrupted by members of the Commission, who broke in upon his argument to ask him questions regarding it. These he answered with great politeness. He was not so courteous, however, to some of his associate counsel. Ex-Senator Carpenter tried three or four times to draw his attention to certain points but he would not listen to him, and once, amid considerable laughter, he told him plainly that he knew what he was about and did not want to be interrupted. At the close of Mr. Trumbull's speech, Mr. Carpenter obtained the floor under the pretext of reading certain legal references, and succeeded in making another buncombe stump speech about the rights of the down-trodden people, the majesty of the law, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. Stoughton came after him, appearing for the Republicans. His speech was the event of the day, and was, unquestionably, one of the best efforts yet made before the Commission. Referring to the charge that Mr. Kellogg, while acting as Governor, could not certify to his own election and serve as Presidential Elector, he called attention to the fact that Gov. Ingersoll, of Connecticut, was in precisely the same situation, and acted precisely as Gov. Kellogg had done, yet the Republicans had made no idle objections to the counting of his vote. In his opinion such objections were unworthy the attention of the tribunal and should not be advanced. Regarding Mr. Trumbull's declaration that the Kellogg Government could not have stood without the support of the Federal power, Mr. Stoughton made a strong point by showing that the very fact that such support had been given to him, the fact that he had been recognized by the President and the National Administration, was sufficient proof that he had been, in fact and in law, the Governor of Louisiana. Mr. Stoughton then entered into a long and exhaustive legal argument which clearly proved that the States had the right to decide in what way the results of elections should be determined, and that Congress had no jurisdiction and could not legally go behind the action of the Board of State Canvassers, who were duly chosen and constituted. He read extracts from a report made in 1872 by the Senate committee of which Senator Trumbull was a member, and which agreed exactly with this opinion. Further on he created a sensation by producing the letter written to THE TIMES by Chief Justice Church, of New-York, in which that gentleman says: "I have also expressed the opinion that the authentication of the election of Presidential Electors, according to the laws of each State, is final and conclusive, and that there exists no power to go behind it." For a moment after this was read there was an uneasy movement among the Democratic counsel. Judge Trumbull turned about in his chair nervously, and then Senator Thurman, of the Commission, asked if he might see the letter. Mr. Stoughton handed it to him, and it was examined carefully by nearly all the members of the Commission. Referring to Mr. Carpenter's statement that he did not appear as the counsel for Tilden, and that he would regard the success of the Democracy as a calamity to the country, and also to Mr. Carpenter's remark that the rejection of two of the Louisiana Electors would answer the purpose of this case, Mr. Stoughton created some amusement by showing that if this latter statement was true Mr. Carpenter's object certainly was to bring about the very calamity referred to by him.

At the close of Mr. Stoughton's speech it was past sundown, and Mr. Shellabarger, the next speaker, was obliged to make his address in the dim and uncertain light afforded by three or four dozen candles placed on the tables of the Commission and counsel. He made a strong legal argument against the admission of testimony, and quoted from scores of authorities to show that the Electoral Tribunal had no power to go behind the action of State officers. When he closed, the Commission, after being in session for eight hours and a half, took a recess until 10:15 to-morrow morning. Mr. Evarts, on behalf of the Republicans, will be the first speaker. He will probably be followed by Judge Campbell, who will appear for Mr. Tilden.

The extension of time for argument, caused by the offer of evidence, prevented the Commission from getting to the consideration of the case to-night. At 1 o'clock there were still 11 hours for argument. About half of it was gotten through with to-night, and there are about five and a half hours left for to-morrow. Mr. Evarts will in the morning conclude the Republican argument on the admissibility of evidence, and one of the Democratic counsel will close on their side. The understanding is that the Commission will decide the question of evidence as in the Florida case, and then take testimony as to the eligibility of Brewster and Levisse, and hear arguments on the certificates if other evidence is excluded. But the case is somewhat mixed, and the arguments on evidence may be followed by the conclusion of the general argument, without any intermission. There can be no doubt that the rule made in the Florida case respecting evidence will stand, though many Democrats have plucked up courage and think testimony will be admitted. The arguments of Trumbull and Carpenter are so much above the Democratic arguments in the Florida case in point of dash and style, as to have produced this expectation. But Republican confidence is unshaken. The Commission, or at least some members of it, will strive to get the case into private consultation for decision on Friday, so that a joint convention may be called on Saturday, but the success of such an effort is now a little doubtful.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

The Electoral Commission assembled promptly at 10 o'clock this morning and resumed the proceedings so abruptly broken off at Mr. Carpenter's earnest solicitation last night. When the counsel rose to continue, he thanked the Commission for the humanity they had displayed in permitting him an intermission until morning, and stated that, owing to the disagreeable and suffocating odor from the candles, he really could not have stood on his feet 20 minutes more.

MR. CARPENTER'S ARGUMENT RESUMED

Mr. Carpenter then referred for a moment to a question put to him by Senator Edmunds in that part of his argument tending to show that Electors were Federal, and not State officers. The practical construction put upon the Constitution had always been that those officers appointed by the President must be commissioned by him. Those appointed by the heads of departments are invariably commissioned by such heads of departments. For instance, all Postmasters, after the first grade, which are not required to be confirmed by the Senate, are all commissioned by the Postmaster General. The appointment of Electors is provided for by the State; they are not confirmed by the Senate or appointed by the President, and upon the uniform action under this Constitution, they, of course, would not be commissioned by the President. Nobody would claim that a Senator is an officer of the State from which he is elected. He is an officer of the United States. No one would deny that the officers of the Internal Revenue Department are United States officers, for they are to-day under indictment and in prison as such, and yet they are not commissioned by the President but by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Carpenter—There are no such distinctions in the Constitution.

Commissioner Garfield—I think you will find the language is: "Such inferior officers as Congress may direct may be appointed," &c.

Mr. Carpenter—The question is not whether this man is an inferior or superior officer. The question is, whether he is an officer of the United States, and the clause here which requires the President to commission is, that he shall commission all officers of the United States. An inferior officer is an officer. The clause would, of course, include the inferior as well as the superior. Now, if your Honors please, I will proceed with the argument at the point where I stopped last night. We shall offer, and are able to show here conclusively by record, testimony that this Returning Board of Louisiana excluded some 8,000 or 10,000 votes given for the Tilden Electors, so-called. We claim that that law under which they pretend to act was, in the first place, wholly unconstitutional. The Constitution of the State of Louisiana is peculiar. It provides—Article 73—"The judicial power shall be vested in a Supreme Court, in District Courts, in Parish Courts and Justices of the Peace," and then, after defining the duties of the District Courts thus mentioned, it provides—Article 94—"No judicial powers, except as Committing Magistrates in criminal cases, shall be conferred upon any officers other than those mentioned in this title, except such as may be necessary in towns and cities, and the judicial powers of such officers shall not extend further than the cognizance of the cases arising under the Police regulation of the towns and cities of the State. In any case where such officers shall assume jurisdiction over other matters than those which may arise under Police regulations, or under their jurisdiction as Police Magistrates, they shall be liable to an action for damages in favor of the party injured or his heirs, and a verdict in favor of the party injured shall, ipso facto, operate a vacation of the office of said officer." So I have no doubt Your Honors will see that this is not only affirmative language which is founded on the Constitution of the United States, and in that of most States vesting the judicial power in certain tribunals, but in this Constitution there is the negative language forbidding the Legislature to base any judicial power upon any body except the courts mentioned in the first part of the Constitution. Now, the sections quoted in my brief here, and I have quoted them in full, without note or comment, on pages 25 and 26, being sections 3 and 26 of the Election law of 1872, undoubtedly premises to confer judicial power upon the Returning Board. The highest penalty that can be visited upon an American citizen is disfranchisement. That can only be done after the man has been indicted and tried, and punished in the court of judicial jurisdiction, according to the course of common law. Now, let us see whether this is disfranchisement or not, and see how it is we enjoy it. The Fifteenth amendment of the Constitution provides that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Now, what would be said of the statute passed by a Southern State which should provide that the votes of all colored citizens should be received and deposited in the box, but should not be canvassed, and have no effect in determining the election. Would not everybody call that a palpable violation of the spirit and purpose embodied in the Fifteenth amendment? would not every lawyer say that disfranchisement had been visited in the result? And that to vote, as the word is used here in the Constitution, means not merely the right to deposit the ballot in the box, but to count it and to have effect in determining the result of the election. And anything which prevents that, in any of the stages to which the vote is made effective between its being put in the ballot-box and counted in the final result, would be disfranchisement. Now, then, a power granted to a Returning Board to exclude the vote of a whole parish is a power to visit disfranchisement upon the people of that parish, and that is judicial power. They are not, by the terms of this law, authorized to do it because they want it, but they are to do it in a particular instance—that is, when a foundation is laid for them to proceed upon—to wit, a protest by the officer holding the poll that there was riot and tumult sufficient to interfere with the result of the election; then the board, not otherwise, are authorized by law to proceed to investigate the matter, and, if they are satisfied that that statement is true, to exclude the vote of an entire parish. Is there any escape from the objection that that is an exercise of judicial power? Does it not on its face pretend and purport to be an exercise of the judicial power? Any man who has raised a tumult or practiced bribery or other corruption, should, on conviction thereof, be disfranchised; but before that result can be visited upon him he must be indicted; he must be notified and have a hearing and a trial, and there must be judicial conviction. All that is visited on a thousand people at once, without a hearing. We say for that reason that law is void. But let us concede that that law is perfectly valid; there is not a man in his senses, I think, that will claim that such a law vesting such sweeping consequences by the action of a board composed of four politicians, sitting alone and in secret, should be stretched beyond its letter. The doctrine is well settled that even a judicial court proceeding to execute a statutory power outside of its ordinary jurisdiction, is bound to have a case clearly within its jurisdiction, and to proceed strictly according to the method pointed out by the statute. Counsel here quoted from the well-known case of Thatcher vs. Powell, 6 Wheaton, 119 Marshall, C. J.]

Now, then, let me call your attention to how carefully this act has restricted this jurisdiction, and we will show you, if permitted to do so, that not in a single parish did this Returning Board have a certificate in the form and complying in substance with the twenty-sixth section. Mr. Carpenter then recited the provisions of the act in question on this point, and continued: Now, mark how carefully they have provided here that all this is to be done by the law in 24 hours, before any particular locality can have knowledge of what has been the general result of the election in other places, and therefore be subjected to a temptation of altering or corrupting that return. I am very glad to be furnished with the report made by the House Committee signed by Hon. George F. Hoar, William A. Wheeler, and William P. Frye, in which they say "upon this statute we are all clearly of opinion that the Returning Board had no right to do anything except canvass and compile the returns which were lawfully made to them by the legal officers, excepting in cases where they were accompanied by the certificate of the Supervisor provided for in the third section. In such case the last sentence shows that they would ordinarily exercise the grave and delicate duty of investigating charges of riot, tumult, &c." I never could have understood that this board, of its own motion, sitting in New-Orleans, at a distance from the place of voting, and without notice, should decide a case claiming to be elected. Let us turn to the twenty-sixth section and see what it says. It says that it "shall be so annexed to his returns of election by parish, as to form no inseparable substance, that the same can be kept together, and the other copy the Supervisor of Registration shall deliver to the Clerk of the court of his parish for the use of the District Attorney." In other words, we will show affirmatively that this board had no jurisdiction to exclude a vote, but that, in violation of every statute they were proceeding under, they excluded 10,000 given for the Tilden Electors. Won't Mr. Wheeler wake up astonished if he finds himself counted in Vice President by an utter disregard and violation of the very principle which he laid down in this report? Will not the American people think that is somewhat remarkable? But, says Judge Howe, there are streams in this State that run blood. Now I hate the sight of blood, and I hate the thought of it. I never vindicated it, or justified it. That there have been violations of the law, outrages unnumbered, is unquestionable. But is that to be cured by committing upon the whole State a wrong and outrage more dangerous even to our institutions than those bloody outrages themselves? They fall upon individuals, but if our institutions are to be stabbed, it falls upon the whole nation. If justice is to be slaughtered at our own temple, if the laws are to be immolated by our sworn priests, if fraud is to be sanctioned and solemnized as an instrument for electing a President of the United States, then farewell to the future hop office of Surveyor General of the Land Office for the District of Louisiana; that Marks was District Attorney for the Fourth Judicial District of the State at the time he cast his vote, and that J. H. Birch was a member of the Board of Control of the State Penitentiary, and held other local offices. We also offer to prove that the statements and affidavits purporting to be made and forwarded to the Returning Board, in pursuance of the election law of 1872, alleging that riots, intimidation, and violence existed at certain polls, were falsely fabricated and forged by disreputable persons under the direction and with the knowledge of the Returning Board.

Commissioner Abbott inquired how much time counsel desired to argue these questions. Commissioner Bradley said he understood the decision to be that it was to come out of the time allowed to counsel on each side, though the time consumed in reading the printed brief should not be counted, but he thought it was breaking the rule if they allowed more than four and one-half hours on each side.

Mr. Trumbull thought their side should have three hours—an hour each.

Commissioner Strong did not understand the order of the court as to time as Commissioner Bradley had understood it, and thought the time occupied in offering evidence, or objections that might be made to its admissibility, or arguments made in support of the admissibility, was not to be taken out of the four and one-half hours which was allowed for the general argument, and he moved that two hours be allowed each side for that purpose.

Commissioner Edmunds said that the length of time required for the discussion depended upon whether the counsel should discuss the offer of testimony as a mere technical question, or whether the fact itself is one that falls within the scope and consideration of the Commission in its aspect of the case. In regard to the admissibility of the testimony and its legal effect, it covers the whole ground, and if counsel should manage to argue the whole subject presented as well as its materiality and the result to be deduced if the facts were proved—then, if the Commission should be of the opinion that it was competent to go into that subject, that would be the end of the matter. And if it should determine that it was competent to go into it or any part of it, then they would have determined the relevancy and effect of the facts if they should be established. The difficulty about taking proof provisionally is that if you admit it on the part of the objectors you must admit it also on the other side, and you at once go on to an indefinite period taking testimony to prove that certain circumstances already exist under which, if the law of Louisiana is constitutional, and be applied to this case, it was the duty of the board to proceed to reject the polls, &c. The result of the taking of evidence on both sides would be that they might find themselves at the end of a week or 10 days in the state of discovering that they had wasted all this time in going into a range of inquiry that they felt under the law they had no right to go into, and he thought that the rules adopted in the Florida case would be better than to hear the question argued now as to the effect of the evidence, &c. The result would be the same as the Florida case was.

Commissioner Bradley argued that the case should be argued the same as the Florida case was.

Commissioner Edmunds moved to modify the motion by allowing counsel to be heard on the whole subject as the case now stood, and four hours be given to each side.

Mr. Evarts thought that was hardly fair, as they had been proceeding upon the understanding that each side should have four and one-half hours, and one side had been consuming part of its time already.

Commissioner Thurman said if it was meant that the whole case should be submitted after four hours' argument on each side, he thought that not right, as one side had already occupied two hours, which would in effect give them six hours and the other but four. If after deciding whether we have anything in evidence or not at all, we come to take the whole case submitted and the argument finally closed, and then re fire and give our final decision, I do not know what kind of a judicial proceeding that would be.

Commissioner Abbott said it was an argument, not only upon the fact of the competency of the testimony and a demurrer to the evidence, but also an argument upon the whole case, so that when the argument was once made they were to decide the whole case unless they admitted the testimony.

Mr. Evarts said they did not wish to place themselves in the position of treating the evidence as all in, and then submitted to the effect. But they had to guard against any such implication. He said it would seem to enlarge a little the area of argument when, in addition to what was supposed to be the duty imposed on counsel when four and one-half hours was allowed, there is now a somewhat separate branch mentioned.

Commissioner Payne said there were twelve propositions, of course, to be argued, and if the limited time was allowed them that was suggested it would only give counsel fifteen minutes upon each proposition.

Commissioner Morton stated that in view of the limited time, he would be compelled to vote against any extension of time, and was in favor of proceeding under the rule as it now existed. He thought it was unfair to give six hours to one side and four to the other. The best way was to take up the question of admissibility of evidence and discuss it, and if it should be decided to admit any or all of it that the effect of what is admitted could be discussed.

Commissioner Hoar said that this was not an ordinary question of presenting evidence in a court. The question here is, is constitutional power vested in the two houses, or either of them, by the provision that they shall be present at the opening of these certificates, to hear the evidence, and impeach those certificates? If that power be vested in the two houses, then comes up the ordinary question of detail as to the evidence which is to be introduced. If that power be not vested in the two houses, and through them in the Commission, then to ask to exercise it is to ask them to do what is computed a crime in the case of a canvassing board now before the Commission—that is, to usurp power, to redress what we fancy is wrong. Now, if the evidence be inadmissible, it is so in consequence of one view of that question. If admissible, it is admissible in consequence of another view. Therefore, I think the amendment of Senator Edmunds brings up practically what we all know must be brought up practically.

Commissioner Garfield said the proposition of Judge Strong proceeded on the supposition that the order of last night, which was practically executed, had been carried out in the American Congress. Four and a half hours was the time allotted last night, and as far as anything was before the Commission then, it was on the final question. Two hours had been occupied on one side, and now the argument had been arrested by an offer of proof. It seemed to me much plainer and easier to arrest the progress of the Commission by a short discussion for two hours on a side, which being settled the Commission might proceed to hear the other side, which had yet two hours remaining for argument.

It was moved to strike out "two" in Judge Strong's resolution and insert "three." The question was put to the Commission, and decided in the negative by the following vote:

NAYS—Messrs. Bradley, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton, and Strong.

The question then came up on Mr. Edmunds' amendment to strike out the order substituted by Judge Strong, giving the counsel two hours. It was lost; only four members of the Commission—Messrs. Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hoar, and Miller—voted in the affirmative. The motion of Justice Strong that the counsel be allowed two hours to argue the question of the admissibility of the offer of evidence upon each side, was then carried unanimously.

Mr. Evarts here asked if, after two hours had been consumed by each side on this matter of the introduction of evidence, then a day of yesterday allowing four and a half hours to his side would be in force.

Commissioner Clifford said that the question now, under the present decision of the Commission, was to allow each side two hours to discuss the question of the admissibility of the proofs offered. When that was concluded, then the question would come up on the execution of the former order.

Mr. Evarts alluded to the great disparity in the arguments of the two sides in case they were cut off from the two hours originally allotted to them.

Mr. Hurlbut suggested that, if it was found necessary to continue the question of admissibility a more long h than two hours, the counsel be allowed to continue the discussion, and subtract it from the two hours each had been allowed.

Commissioner Bradley said that the proposition now made seemed to him to be a very fair one. He moved that they be permitted to do so. Adopted.

Mr. Evarts objected, saying that in the Florida case the opposite order was adopted, the Democratic side having the opening and closing of the case.

ARGUMENT OF MR. TRUMBULL.

Mr. Trumbull readily assented, and began his argument as follows:

Mr. President, under the ruling of the Joint Commission we are brought face to face with the question whether a President of the United States is to be made by forgery and fraud and conspiracy on the part of officials whose duty it is to certify the Electoral vote of the State, and it is submitted to this Commission boldly to decide that question. The power rests nowhere else. There is no tribunal in this land, judicial or otherwise, that can inquire into this matter except this Commission, and when I speak of this Commission I consider myself as addressing the two houses of Congress assembled together for the purpose of counting the Electoral vote from the various States. In my judgment there has been a very great misconception in regard to the powers of this tribunal. It is neither a canvassing board to determine who is elected a constable in some town, nor is it a judicial tribunal; but it is the Congress of the United States, vested with power to go to the bottom and investigate any question that it has a right to consider. It has been settled, and, therefore, is not now to be questioned, that the two houses of Congress are to count the Electoral vote, and you are now those two houses. The question has arisen that is submitted to you, how many and what votes shall be counted from the State of Louisiana, and there is submitted to you, not only that question, but the law of your organization declared all questions upon or in respect to double returns that have been submitted to your consideration. Now, does it turn out that this Commission is formed for the mere purpose of doing a sum in arithmetic, to add up certain figures, when it was said to the country that you were to decide all questions upon or in respect to such double returns? Does it need nothing more than that you should add one of the returns? When the oath was taken to examine and consider all questions submitted, did that mean that you were to take an oath simply to add together the figures? Does "examine and consider" apply merely to a mathematical proposition of that kind? You are required by the law to proceed to consider the objections, and to decide whether any and what votes from the State of Louisiana are the votes provided for by the Constitution, and how many and what persons were duly appointed in that State. Now, can you determine that—can you determine how many and what persons were duly appointed Electors in Louisiana—without inquiring whether the certificate which is laid here is a forgery? The House, said the speaker, has sent its committees and the Senate has sent its committees to Louisiana, and they have taken testimony, and we are prepared with it here to-day, and it is evidence taken under the well-established rule I have referred to. Now, one of these returns is as good as the other. It was said here yesterday by my distinguished friend from Wisconsin, in his quiet way, that you knew who William Pitt Kellogg was, but you did not know McEnery; that John McEnery had given his certificates to persons who came here knocking at the doors of Congress, but the gate was never opened. If I have not forgotten, hardly 12 months have transpired since a person came here knocking at the door of the Senate, with a paper signed William Pitt Kellogg, stating that he had been duly elected to the Senate. Did the Senate open its doors to him? Why, he has stood there knocking ever since Kellogg pretended to be Governor, until finally the Senate shut the door in his face and sent him away. Kellogg, then, is in no better condition than McEnery.

Mr. Trumbull then read from Story and other writers on the Constitution and commented thereon, saying that Story had predicted that if a monarchical government was established in one State of the Union it would bring on the ruin of the whole Republic. He continued: We are threatened to-day with that ruin that Mr. Justice Story foresaw years ago. The Constitution says that each State shall appoint in such manner as its Legislature shall direct, a number of Electors equal to the number of its Senators and Representatives in Congress. But it must be a State that does it. And what is meant by a State? Despotism or a State having a republican form of government where the people, not usurping Judges, rule? You have a certificate here from a person claiming to be Governor, a certified list as it is called in the statute, of the names of the persons elected Electors. What does the statute mean to do? Did the constitution require it? The Constitution said the Electors should meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves, and they should make a list of all the persons voted for, and of the number of votes for each, which list shall be signed, certified, and transmitted sealed to the seat of the General Government, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate then, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, will open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. Now, if the Electors have got to do. This is a right not inherent in the State, but derivative from the Constitution of the United States, which is as much a part of the Constitution of every State as it is of the United States. Every word and every letter in this Constitution is as binding on the State as on the United States. It was there for the purpose of forming a General Government, and also for the purpose of protecting the States in certain national rights. The Constitution said to the State of Louisiana: "You may appoint Electors in such manner as your Legislature shall direct. They shall meet and cast their ballots in a certain way and send them to the President of the Senate, and the vote shall then be counted." Tell me by what authority Congress passes a law that they shall not be counted? By what authority has Congress said to the Governor of Louisiana or the Governor of any State, You may certify lists of the names of the persons voted for as Electors, or appointed Electors. It may be a matter of convenience, but it is entirely at the option of the Governor of the State to obey it or not. And old John Hancock, a century ago, before he would make any such certificate, sent a communication to the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to know whether it would meet their approval if he did it. And what was said by a committee of the Senate, in a unanimous report made by them on that subject in 1873? The twelfth section of the act of Congress of 1792 declares what shall be the official evidence of the election of Electors, and provides that the Executive authority of each State shall cause three lists of the names of Electors of such State to be made and certified, and to be delivered to the Electors on or before the first Wednesday in December, and the Electors shall annex one of such lists to each of their votes. The certificate of the Secretary of State is not required, and the certificate of the Governor as provided for in that section seems to be the only evidence as contemplated by the law of the State to cast the vote of the State. If Congress chooses to go behind the Governor's certificate and inquire who have been chosen Electors, it is not violating any principle of the Constitution of the State, but simply going behind the evidence as prescribed by the act of Congress. And thus going behind the certificate of the Governor, we find the official returns and the returns of the Electors from the parishes of Louisiana have never been counted by anybody having the authority to count them. What was the result of that report? The Senate and the House of Representatives voted not to count the Electoral vote of that State in Louisiana. Congress looked into it, and its committee reported that the votes had never been canvassed by anyoody having authority to canvass them, and the result was that the vote of the State of Louisiana was rejected.

Justice Bradley—Who made the canvass at that time?

Mr. Trumbull—It was required to be made by the Returning Board, which consisted of the Governor, the Secretary of State, the Auditor, and two other persons, and there was a controversy as to which was the true Canvassing Board.

Justice Bradley—It was held that the proper board had not made the canvass?

Mr. Trumbull—It was not decided in the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Senator Morton—Have you the whole report there?

Mr. Trumbull—I have; one of the points stated is that the persons who in fact made the examination and count had no legal authority to do so.

Senator Edmunds—I understand you to say that the judgment of the Senate four years ago was on the question of fact as to what the real vote of the people of Louisiana was?

Mr. Trumbull—It is difficult to tell on what consideration Senators vote. The certificate of the Governor of Louisiana in that case was in proper form, and declared who both houses concurred in rejecting the vote of Louisiana. So that, if the amounts to anything, it is a decision that the duly-authorized certificate of the Governor is not conclusive on the two houses of Congress.

Senator Edmunds—The resolution adopted there was that all the objections presented having been considered, the vote proper to be counted is that of Louisiana should be counted. That was adopted by a vote of 33 to 16. Among the objections was one by Mr. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, on the ground that there was no proper return of the votes cast by Electors in the State of Louisiana, and because there was no State Government there republican in form, and because no canvass or count of the votes had been made prior to a meeting of the Electors. Another objection of a similar import was made by Senator Trumbull, of Illinois.

The Presiding Justice (interposing)—You are entitled to the floor, Mr. Trumbull; unless you yield, proceed.

Senator Edmunds (to the Presiding Justice, with some asperity of tone)—Do you mean to say that a member of the Commission cannot make an inquiry?

The Presiding Justice (authoritatively)—I say that Mr. Trumbull is entitled to the floor.

Mr. Justice Bradley (to Mr. Trumbull)—I understand that the decision of the Senate in that case went to the form, and not to the point whether the certificate of the Governor was not conclusive.

Mr. Trumbull read Gov. Warmoth's certificate in that case, and said that this one thing was certainly settled by Congress then, and that was the Governor's certificate (the same as that known as "No. 1" in the case) might be overruled by the concurrent action of the two houses. The report of the committee was that the vote had not been properly canvassed. Now, we propose to show that the vote of Louisiana was not canvassed; that the pretended canvass is a fraud; that the papers are forged; that the returns are altered and falsified; and I would like to know whether a count under such circumstances is any better than a count made by persons who had not any right to count. We propose to show that the President of the Louisiana Returning Board, with the connivance of his confederates, altered the return from Vernon Parish, took 178 votes from one side and put them on the other by a forgery of the paper. We offer to prove it, and we have the evidence to do it; and according to McCrary on Elections a fraud committed by an officer is fatal to his return.

Justice Miller—Allow me to make a point which came up in the Florida case, and to which I attach a good deal of importance. If the only thing that a Republican Returning Board can do is to determine whether certain polls are to be counted or rejected, your argument is a perfectly good one. But is it not also true that the jurisdiction of the board is commensurate with the duties and functions which it has to perform? And is it not true that the one fact which it has to perform is to ascertain who are Electors, and to declare that fact? And can it be said, if that board mistakes the law on some point while disobeying that fundion that the mistake is so jurisdictional as to vitiate its return?

Mr. Trumbull—No, sir; I do not contend for that.

Justice Miller—Then my suggestion is that the jurisdiction of that board is to ascertain and declare who were elected, and that all below that is the exercise of the means and mode of the procedure.

Mr. Trumbull—To that I cannot quite assent. I assent entirely to the proposition that in any matter over which this board had jurisdiction and discretion to act, its judgment is not to be disturbed; that the point which I make is whether it is its duty to canvass and compile the vote. It is also its sworn duty not to take jurisdiction of the question or rejecting votes unless a foundation is laid for it. We also offer to prove that the board was not so constituted as to have jurisdiction of the persons at all, because the law declares that five persons, to be elected by the Senate from all political parties, shall constitute the Returning Board of that State, and I insist that it was not competent for four persons to act. Three (a quorum) might act if the Board was full, but where a duty is to be performed by five persons of different political parties, it is not lawful to perform it by four persons, all of the same party.

Senator Edmunds—Your point is that no steps could be taken by the Returning Board until the board was full.

Mr. Trumbull—No steps could be taken until the board was full, they having authority to fill it. Possibly a different rule might apply if they had not the power to fill vacancies; but the power being there, and the constituent elements of this Returning Board being required to consist of persons of different political parties, I insist that the board could not go on without filling up the vacancy.

The Presiding Justice notified Mr. Trumbull that his time had expired, but in consideration of the various interruptions to which he had been subjected, some further time was accorded him, which he used in presenting the objections to the Electoral votes from Louisiana and certain persons who held Federal office at the time of their election.

Justice Bradley—Do you intend to prove that they were Federal office-holders at the time they were elected?

Mr. Trumbull—Yes.

Justice Bradley—And that they were office-holders at the time they cast their votes?

Mr. Trumbull—No; I understand that the proof will show that Brewster tendered his resignation on the 4th of November, and that it was accepted on the 16th, and that, very singularly, too, it was accepted to take effect on the 4th, some 19 days before it was received at the Interior Department.

Senator Thurman—Does not the law of Louisiana provide that if an Elector who has been chosen does not appear by a certain hour the remaining Electors may proceed to fill the vacancy?

Mr. Trumbull—There is such a provision in the act of 1868.

Senator Edmunds—But you say that law is not in force.

Senator Thurman—If that law was in force, and if Brewster did not appear at the time, then was there a vacancy under that law?

Mr. Trumbull—No; I do not consider that there was. The Statutes of the United States make two provisions: one is for filling any vacancy that may occur in the College when the Electors meet to give the Electoral vote, and the other when an election has been held and no choice has been made on the day prescribed by law. In that case the Elector may be chosen on a subsequent day. Here there was no choice. It was just as if two persons had received a majority of votes, if there had been no election on the 7th of November.

Senator Thurman—Is not the real question whether there was any power in the Electors to fill the vacancies? Suppose these persons had been qualified, but had not appeared?

Mr. Trumbull—Then if this statute of 1868 was in force, the other Electors could have filled the vacancies.

Senator Thurman—But suppose that law was not in force?

Mr. Trumbull—Then there is no law to fill the vacancies.

Representative Hunton—Except by election.

Mr. Trumbull—That brings up these complicated statutes. The statute of 1872 provides for filling all vacancies by popular election. If that statute was in force then these vacancies would have to be filled by popular election. If the law of 1868 was in force, then the absence of these two Electors would give the others authority to fill the vacancies, provided anybody had been elected. If the votes of Levisee and Brewster are to be counted, and if a man is to be made President of the United States by counting their votes as the votes of Louisiana, then it is done by mere forms of law, contrary to these principles of the Constitution of the United States and in violation of the rights of the people.

Senator Thurman—Is there any statute of Louisiana that requires the certificate of the Governor?

Mr. Trumbull—There is a statute which requires the Governor to commission all officers except certain persons therein named, and which do not include Presidential Electors.

Senator Thurman—That is the law of 1873; but is there any statute requiring him to issue certificates to Presidential Electors?

Mr. Trumbull—No, sir; not specifically.

At the close of Mr. Trumbull's argument, he filed, on behalf of Messrs. Hoadley, Green, and himself, a brief on the subject of the Electoral votes of Levisee and Brewster.

MR. STOUGHTON'S ARGUMENT.

Mr. Stoughton followed with an argument on the Republican side of the question. He expressed his surprise at the objection that the certificate of Gov. Kellogg was inoperative. It would be remembered that when the vote of Connecticut was counted, her Governor, Mr. Ingersoll, was a Presidential Elector at large, and that his certificate had been received without objection. Such objections were hardly suitable to the dignity of the occasion. It had also been objected to-day (and the objection had been urged with a good deal of zeal,) that Gov. Kellogg was not the Governor of Louisiana, and that Louisiana was governed by a military despotism. He supposed that that meant that a military force had been, on application of Gov. Kellogg to the President, ordered to Louisiana for the purpose of suppressing insurrection. The learned counsel [Mr. Carpenter, was right, (he supposed,) in saying that without such aid the Government under which Mr. Kellogg was the head would have been overturned. But counsel should have reflected that the very fact that Gov. Kellogg had made such an application, and that it had been granted, was decisive evidence that he was the Governor of Louisiana. What was the other here on the other side? It was that the Commission should, by a search and scrutiny of many, if not all, the polls in Louisiana, ascertain what had been the vote of Louisiana at the last election. It was proposed that the Commission should overrule and disregard and go behind the action of the Returning Board of that State and hold it for naught. He said he would satisfy the Commission beyond all question that the Returning Board, as constituted, had the power delegated to it by the statutes of Louisiana to determine the number of votes cast for Electors, and power to certify it finally, so far as the authority of that State was concerned, and he would also satisfy the Commission that the objection that a vacancy in the Electoral College could not be filled by the College itself, had no foundation whatever. It seemed to him that the decision of the Commission in the Florida case determined the entire question here raised as to the right of the Commission to go behind the action of the Returning Board, and he could not perceive that any question—much less the main question—was now open to argument. He quoted against Mr. Trumbull's argument to-day from a report made by Senator Trumbull to the effect that neither the Senate, nor the House, nor both houses jointly have power under the Constitution to canvass the returns of an election, and that the mode and manner of choosing Electors was left exclusively to the States. He also quoted on the same point a letter recently published from ex-Judge Church, of New-York, whom he characterized as a great lawyer, an upright Judge and even a pure politician, and who went on to argue that the State corrects the frauds of its own officers and does not apply to Congress for the purpose, and that Congress would best perform its duty by discharging it within its authority, leaving these occasional frauds that are sometimes assumed, and sometimes offered to be proved, to be taken care of by the tribunals having jurisdiction over them. Congress might have the power, but it did not have the right to disregard the highest legal authority of a State. The offer made on the other side would lead to proceedings endless in duration and of almost any nature, increasing tenfold the public excitement, which was already seen gathering about the tribunal. Here were offers of evidence, inflamed to the last degree by their mode of statement, involving inquiries of the most extraordinary and painful character, leading to testimony in reply—testimony in justification of the Returning Board that would be endless and difficult of procurement. And all for what? To enable this tribunal to violate the supremacy of the State. He had heard more than one threat couched under shields of language and so framed that they might not quite reach in plain terms their mark, but he understood them, and they were unworthy of the circumstances under which the tribunal was formed, and quite unworthy of those who sought its jurisdiction. He proceeded to discuss the laws of Louisiana as to the power to fill vacancies in the Electoral College, and in reply to a question by Mr. Hunton, whether the act of 1872 did not repeal the act of 1868 in that regard, he said that it did not touch it at all, and that it was an absurdity to hold that an express purpose of the Constitution which had been carried out by Federal legislation, supplemented by State legislation, could be defeated by giving violent construction to a clause which had abundance of other matter to feed upon without being applied to the case of Presidential Electors.

Commissioner Hoar suggested to Mr. Stoughton that it was hardly worth while for him to spend time in the endeavor to satisfy the Commission on that point.

Mr. Stoughton acted on the suggestion, and passed to other points. Coming, in the course of his argument, to the objection made to the Returning Board of Louisiana for not having filled the vacancy in the board, he said that the law on the subject was merely directory, and that a failure to obey the law did not interfere in any manner with the capacity or jurisdiction of the Board. If two of the five members had been Democrats, and had afterward changed their politics, would the board, he asked, cease to exist on that account? He stated the problem which had presented itself to be solved in Louisiana by the Democratic Party being that in 40 parishes about which there was no dispute there was a Republican majority of 6,057 voters, and that in the remaining 17 parishes there were 20,323 colored voters registered and 16,233 white voters. How was that problem to be solved? The records of these parishes showed that the problem had been sought to be solved by bloody hands. In conclusion, he said—talk to me about outrages, frauds, and the disfranchisement of voters? There are two sides to the question, and if you sit here to go back and canvass the votes you sit here to administer the laws of Louisiana, and you must administer them by learning who have been disfranchised, and what was the lawful vote of that State in harmony with her laws, and not in harmony with the will of a party.

SPEECH OF MR. SHELLABARGER.

Mr. Shellabarger, of counsel for the Republican side, next addressed the Commission. He said the first question was what are the statutes enacted by Louisiana directing the appointment of Electors, and what statutes were in force last year covering that matter? The Commission, after careful examination, would be unanimous in the opinion that the act of 1872 did govern in 1876 during the Presidential election, and that the Revisery act of 1870, which provided for a canvass of the returns by the board and Governor, was repealed, and was not in force in 1876. For that provision which made the Governor the canvasser for the purposes of the election was inconsistent with the fifty-fourth section of the session act of 1870 which expressly provided a different tribunal for all the elections, including the Electoral College. It was also repealed by the repealing clause of the session act of 1870. This act of 1872 purports to supply the machinery for every public election in the State by its several terms and provisions—its scope. But, more conclusive than all is this fact: In section 2 it is expressly declared that this Returning Board shall be the returning Board for all elections next in the State, and your have to simply disregard the express wording of the act, without any authority for so disregarding it, or else you have got so to treat this law.

The question, then, is this: How can you preserve and keep in force that provision of the act of 1870, revising that of 1868, which provides for filling the Electoral College by popular election, and which you have just been stating? I answer, first of all, that it is an exceedingly benign canon of interpretation that a law is never repealed by a new act unless either expressly done, or else the repugnance be such that it would be impossible for the two acts to stand together, and in making this language I am but repeating the words of the Supreme Court of the United States as announced on many occasions. Another rule of interpretation is this: That in cases of doubt, whenever an interpretation would lead to consequences that are either absurd or hurtful to the public welfare, that interpretation will never be tolerated, unless its exclusion is impossible. The next step is this: Is it possible to escape the conclusion that under the legislation of Louisiana, Louisiana was disfranchised? And I invite the gentlemen on the other side who may suppose this act is repealed, by which only the Electoral College can be filled, to show me some statute that forces upon you, either by direct provision or by any fair interpretation, the conclusion that Louisiana has been disfranchised in this process of legislation. There is nothing to repeal that section which provides for the filling of vacancies under the law of 1868 and 1870, except the repealing clause of the session act of 1872, which says that "all other acts on the subject of election laws are hereby repealed." Is it possible for the act of 1870 to stand, consistent with that repealing clause? If it is, you are bound by your oath, and by all rules of interpretation, to let it stand; first, because you must not make it repealed by implication if you can help it; and second, because if you do make it work a repeal you work a disfranchisement of the State. Another rule of interpretation is this—that where a statute has received what your Supreme Court calls a practical construction, and has been executed according to that practical construction, in every case of doubt the practical construction that has been given to the law is conclusive. The next question is, What was there left for doubt, debate, or dispute in regard to the question of the power of Gov. Kellogg to certify this election? I want to add to Mr. Stoughton's argument, by way of refreshing your memory, and will quote the words of the Supreme Court of the United States on that point, because they are so exactly apposite and conclusive that it seems to me to close forever, and to all intents and purposes, the discussion in regard to the question as to who was the rightful Governor of Louisiana, and who was entitled to make the certificate.

Mr. Commissioner Payne inquired of the counsel whether there were any provisions of the act of 1863 that the counsel claimed were not repealed by the repealing clause of 1872 except those named?

Mr. Shellabarger stated in reply that he had not gone over the law of 1870 in detail, but only in parts, and could not, therefore, answer the question categorically. "But," he said, "I understand that an examination will result in finding that all the provisions of the act of 1868 are superseded, without exception, by the revision of 1870."

Mr. Commissioner Hoar said that the law of 1870 was a revision of the whole statute law, and contained provisions for the appointment of the Presidential Electors and how they shall certify their acts, &c.

Mr. Evarts said he would like to suggest to Mr. Commissioner Payne that there was a General Election law of 1868, and an Electoral law of 1868, which are two independent acts, found in the session laws of the same year.

Mr. Shellabarger continued as follows: Now I take the language of the Supreme Court of the United States and apply it to the propositions. It is in these words: "It rests with Congress to decide what Government is the established one in a State and when the Senators and Representatives from a State are admitted into the council of the Union the authority of the Government under which they are appointed as well as its republican character is recognized by the proper constitutional authority, and its decision is binding on every department of the Government and could not be questioned in any judicial tribunal." That language is absolute and conclusive of this whole question. Now, as to the ineligibility alleged to be wrought as to certain of these Electors by the fact that some of them held State offices, I will make a familiar quotation from a speech made by Charles Pinckney on a bill that was pending in Congress in the year 1820, proposing to create a Commission like this, and I want to show by it that it was not the design of the Constitution to permit a State by any method to add to or substract from the qualifications of the Presidential Electors. He says that it was the spirit to give to Congress no right to interfere in any manner with the appointment of a President; that Congress could not object to any vote or say whether it was constitutionally given, but that was a matter left to the State Legislature and with that alone rests the power to look into the matter. He says the disqualifications against any citizen being an Elector are very few; they are the Officer of the United States shall be an Elector, and that no member of Congress shall be an Elector.

Mr. Commissioner Thurman inquired whether it would be unconstitutional for a State to require the Elector to be a citizen of the State in which he resides.

Mr. Shellabarger said that in his judgment it would be.

Mr. Commissioner Thurman asked whether a State could choose an alien for Elector or Senator?

Mr. Shellabarger replied that if there was any ineligibility on the part of an Elector it must be such as only made the two prohibitions already referred to. It was a long time doubted whether the States could appoint their Electors by an act of the Legislature; but that was settled long ago that there was no limitation of the power of a State in regard to the method of appointment, but that there was a prohibition in regard to what the qualification of the Elector should be. The next question is whether the Returning Board, as organized, was a legal board as to its members. It is said that because it had but four, when there ought to have been five, it was rendered incapable of action. Shellabarger read from various authorities, showing that this was not a defect in their action. In one of these cases it was shown that a board composed of 10 persons, with power to fill a vacancy, did, by a vote of five of its members, remove a Superintendent of Schools at a time when there was an unfilled vacancy in the board, and the question of legality could not be raised if there was a majority of nine. This was a case where the facts were much like those we are dealing with. In the case quoted the number of persons was fixed by statute. There was a vacancy at the time of the action, and there was power to fill the vacancy in the body. It was also a case where they failed to fill the vacancy, and, where, had they filled the vacancy, the vote by which the act was done, viz., five, would not have accomplished the removal. In this case the court was brought squarely to the question whether a board thus constituted could act. It is the exact case with which we are dealing.

In response to a question from Commissioner Abbott as to whether the board was full, and therefore the vacancy was a mere absence in the cases he had examined, the counsel replied that these cases were not so directly on all fours with the case at bar as the case he had read, because in most of them the absence was not by reason of death so as to create an actual vacancy; but all the reasoning of the court, said he, is entirely in harmony with our position, to wit: that the public interest will not be imperilled or stopped by absence, whether that absence is death, or what not.

Commissioner Abbott—I put the question because I am quite sure there are respectable cases where court has held that a majority may act if the board is full, but the action of a majority will not bind.

Mr. Shellabarger—The provision is, in its very nature and by the necessities of the case, directory, and it does not go to the essential power of that. You must know that, from the very common sense of the case, because how are you to test whether a man is a Democrat or a Republican? How are you to find whether his politics changed yesterday or to-day, or whether they will do to-morrow? It is most obvious, I submit, that this is a directory provision to be abided by and performed in good faith, and if there were no reason for its being omitted in this case then it is an act to be condemned, but it does not go to the jurisdiction of the party. Let me say, if you open this door I shall prove, if the gentlemen—and they seem ready to be of the very highest character—have not falsified to me, I will prove, if you compel me to go into this door, that we tendered again and again the filling of that vacancy, and it was refused by every man to whom the application was made, because they did not want to be mixed up with the troublesome affairs of Louisiana, and the long labor or some such reason as that. I only say that, in passing, to repudiate and repel these incessant inundations that we have in the way of denunciation, invective, and declaration of fraud.

I now come to the next point that I have marked on this brief, and that is the proposition that my friend, Senator Carpenter, seemed to attach some consequence to, though I do not know that anybody else on his side has specially discussed it, and it is the proposition that these functions of the Returning Board are judicial in their nature, that they cannot, under the Constitution of Louisiana, be conferred, and hence this law goes by the board for that reason. Let me, in the first place, give you a reference in the case of The State vs. Hufty, (Eleventh Annual Report,) which was decided in 1856. I quote that in order to get you away back of these unhealthy influences that are alleged to have pervaded this case since the rebellion. In all these cases which I give you the question of the validity of this law giving this power to the Returning Board is involved, although, perhaps, in no one of them, certainly not in all of them, was the question directly and expressly made. But it was involved, and in each one of these cases it was decided that it is a valid law, and that the quasi-judicial powers that are conferred upon the Returning Board are entirely competent to be conferred under the Constitution of Louisiana. Counsel also referred to Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (p. 623) in verification of what he had claimed, holding that, according to this authority, in every one of these cases there were special statutory tribunals and, in most of them, they were not the courts. I come now to the real question in this case, and really the only question there is, and that one is decided by what you have just decided in the case of Florida, and that is, whether or not it is competent for you to go behind the action of the Returning Board of Louisiana for the purpose of finding out what happened in its exercise of the jurisdiction believed by statute. I will not repeat what has been decided in Florida. I want to say that any intimation that when we deny the power of going behind the finding of that board, we are thereby covering up frauds or seeking to escape something, is, I submit, unutterably unjust. It has not even the semblance of fairness in it. Why? I was surprised with my friend Stoughton in the loud denunciation in which our friend on the other side indulged yesterday. I say the language was not worthy of my friend. It is not surely worthy of this tribunal. Why do I say that? First, of all, because it is begriming the whole question to say that you have a right to try the questions of fact that discloses this fraud in this tribunal. It is an insult to your intelligence to say that because as mere counters and mere ministerial officers, because you cannot go into frauds that, therefore, it is an attempt to cover up fraud. Why look at it a moment in another light. This first argument of the gentlemen contains in itself a true felo de se. How loud-mouthed was their declaration when they were talking about frauds in the Returning Board? What was that fraud? It was a fraud committed by them being mere ministerial officers, a fraud committed in usurping jurisdiction and going behind the returns from the precincts and counties and undertaking to throw out votes in violation of law. There was a case where you could not be inquired into according to your law. Stand up to it now and take its consequence. It is right, and it is right just because of what you put into your report in 1872, to wit, that the two houses combined have not the powers of a quo warranto court. You cannot go behind the returns therefore. You cannot talk to me about our position being one designed either by logic, law, or merit to shut out frauds. It ill-becomes our friend to talk to us about this being an attempt to put a man into the Presidency of the United States by fraud. Then, in another case we find these gentlemen coming and saying, "Oh! Mr. Kellogg is the Governor of Louisiana, and therefore he is no Elector; and then the next moment you have them coming forward and saying, "Oh! he is no officer at all; he is not the Governor of Louisiana, but McEnery is." So much for positions taken by Senators now eminently are driven, in this frantic endeavor to trample down or to escape from the familiar requirements of law.

Mr. Abbott—I would like to ask a question. What do you make of the provision that any person interested in the opposition, by reason of being a candidate, shall be entitled to be heard on making application within the time allowed for revising and correcting the returns of said election? Can the essential right of persons interested in an office to be heard before the Returning Board be preserved if you regards this—if you regard this as merely directory and essential?

Mr. Shellabarger—I answer that, first by saying that this suggestion, addressed to the consideration of evidence, that it is a useful provision beyond all doubt. It is a proper provision to be obeyed, but, it being a mere question or suggestion, going to the convenience, it is not of essence. Because this is a political process; because it is a step in government as distinguished from the usual process in rights of citizens in courts; because it is that, therefore, in every such case you will find the law directory. Look at the reason of the thing. Is it possible that you are going to hold with that same violence that rendered it impossible to vote, and at the same time rendered it impossible for officers safely to make their affidavits in their returns that they cannot do it at another time? Beware before you come to such a conclusion. If you do it, you will have to do it in the face of the law.

I now conclude this argument by an allusion to what has been the weight of evidence on the other side. It is in regard to this alleged outrages in the State of Louisiana. Why, gentlemen, can you shut your eyes to what is now, if not the saddest, certainly one of the saddest chapters in American history? By actual count through the aid of Gen. Sheridan, it is now set down as a part of your history that in this blighted and blasted State of Louisiana, 4,000 and odd citizens have been murdered; murdered by plan, murdered by system, by organization; murdered for the purpose of shutting down the right of the black man to vote, and that thing has been going on and on through these dark and terrible years. It was my misfortune, gentlemen, to go once myself, in 1866, to this State, sent by the Congress of the United States, and I saw, literally, the dead bodies of men, and when I was taking it literally was with my feet in pools of human blood, ahed in putting out the free Government of the State of Louisiana, and they did put it out—oh, right well and effectually. Gentlemen of America, you who have been in that 10 years a grand territory for your country in its general aspect, John Bright, of England, once said to me: "Sir, I have been a part of the British Government now for 30 years. In that time we have conducted great affairs. We have extended the right of suffrage to Englishmen who have abolished the rotten borough system; we have emancipated the Jews; we have elevated our colonies; we have extended the right of the children to be educated," and so he went on in a grand catalogue and concluded by saying, "Sir, notwithstanding what I have said about my country, I say to you that you have a darker record in the branch of legislation I advocate" [Republican] that Congress could not object to any vote or say whether it was constitutionally given, but that was a matter left to the State Legislature and with that alone rests the power to look into the matter. He says the disqualifications against any citizen being an Elector are very few; they are the Officer of the United States shall be an Elector, and that no member of Congress shall be an Elector.

Mr. Commissioner Thurman inquired whether it would be unconstitutional for a State to require the Elector to be a citizen of the State in which he resides.

Mr. Shellabarger said that in his judgment it would be.

Mr. Commissioner Thurman asked whether a State could choose an alien for Elector or Senator?

Mr. Shellabarger replied that if there was any ineligibility on the part of an Elector it must be such as only made the two prohibitions already referred to. It was a long time doubted whether the States could appoint their Electors by an act of the Legislature; but that was settled long ago that there was no limitation of the power of a State in regard

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Feb. 14.

SENATE.

THE NATIONAL MUSEUM.

Upon reassembling at noon, Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported favorably on the Senate bill for the erection of a fire-proof building for the National Museum. Placed on the Calendar. It appropriates $250,000 for the erection of such building, 300 feet square, on the west side of the Smithsonian Institute.

JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON'S DISABILITIES REMOVED.

Mr. CONKLING, of New-York, reported from the Judiciary Committee favorably upon the bill to remove the political disabilities of Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia. Passed.

ALLEGED FRAUDS IN THE MEXICAN CLAIM AWARDS.

Mr. CONKLING called up the House bill to provide for the distribution of awards made under the convention between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, and asked that it be passed, but objection was made by Mr. SPENCER, of Alabama, who said he had a telegram from one of his constituents that there was fraud in the matter. The person who sent him the telegram was now on his way to Washington, and would be here in a few days.

INCREASING PENSIONS.

Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably on the amendments of the House to the bill increasing the pensions of those who have lost both an arm and a foot from $24 to $36 per month. He said the Senate passed a bill to increase such pensions to $37 per month, but the House reduced it to $36, and as there were only 16 persons on the pension rolls affected by it the committee thought it best to have the Senate concur. The amendments were concurred in, and the bill was passed.

THE TEXAS PACIFIC COMPROMISE.

Mr. DORSEY, of Arkansas, introduced a bill amendatory of and supplemental to the act of March 3, 1871, to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad, and the act of July 27, 1866, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific Ocean. Referred to the Committee on Railroads. The bill is a copy of the so-called compromise Texas-Pacific bill recently reported to the House of Representatives by Mr. Lamar from the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD SINKING-FUND BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts, and to establish a sinking fund for the liquidation of the indebtedness due the Government by the Pacific Railroad Companies.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, withdrew the amendment submitted by him several days ago to the bill of the Railroad Committee, providing that the payments of $750,000 per annum to be made by the railroad companies to the credit of the sinking fund shall be in addition to all payments on requirements of the companies under the original acts instead of in lieu of all payments or requirements under those acts.

Mr. BOOTH, of California, renewed the amendment. He also submitted an amendment to the second section of the bill of the Railroad Committee so as to provide that the Central Pacific and Union Pacific Companies shall each pay into the Treasury of the United States $750,000 per annum, in equal semi-annual installments on the 1st day of April and October in each year, commencing on Oct. 1, 1877, in lawful money, until said sums, with interest thereon as hereinafter provided, shall be sufficient, when added to the other sums to the credit of the sinking fund, to pay off and extinguish the Government bonds advanced, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from their respective dates up to the date when they are so paid and extinguished. Interest on all sums placed to the credit of said sinking fund shall be credited and added thereto semi-annually at the rate of six per cent. per annum, provided, however, that if the foregoing provision shall prove insufficient to extinguish the Government bonds and interest thereon at maturity, the semi-annual payments shall be increased to such a sum as will be sufficient for that purpose. He also moved to strike out the fifth section of the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads, which provides that each of said companies shall be entitled at any time to anticipate any or all of the semi-annual payments by the payment to the Government of the then present value of such sum, annual payments discounted at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum; but the sum so paid shall not be less than $1,000,000 at any one time. He also submitted an additional section of the bill providing that Congress shall have power at any time to amend, alter or repeal the act.

Mr. BOOTH reviewed at some length the history of Pacific Railroad legislation, and referred to the arguments of Messrs. Bourwell, Conkling, and others in opposition to the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. He contended that the roads took what the Government gave them and enjoyed it, but now they come here and attempt to repudiate the conditions upon which the bounties were lavished upon them. He argued that the power reserved by the original acts to alter or amend them gave Congress power to enforce by proper legislation the terms of the original contract. He commended the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads, and argued that it would cause a loss to the Government. It would take more than $50,000,000 of the money of the people and transfer it to the coffers of the two corporations.

Mr. WEST, in reply to the argument of Mr. Sherman, in opposition to the bill of the Railroad Committee, made several days ago, read from the Record to show that several years since, when the subject was being debated in the Senate, the Senator from Ohio expressed the opinion that Congress had the right to make the railroad companies pay the interest on bonds as it became due. Subsequently the matter went to the Supreme Court, and that tribunal decided directly the opposite. Therefore, he was not disposed to accept the predictions of the Senator from Ohio now. He argued that unless Congress should properly deal with the Pacific Railroad indebtedness to-day, $125,000,000 belonging to the United States would be lost in 1898, and it was to prevent this loss that he urged the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads.

The question was on the amendment of Mr. BOOTH providing that the $750,000 to be paid by the companies to the credit of the sinking fund, shall be in addition to other payments instead of in lieu of other payments or requirements. The amendment was agreed to—yeas, 22; nays, 20.

Pending discussion, the Senate, on motion of Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, at 3:40 P. M., went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened the Railroad bill was laid aside with the understanding that it should be the unfinished business to-morrow.

THE EXPENSES OF THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, called up the Senate bill appropriating $7,000 to pay the expenses of the Electoral Commission, and it was passed.

THE PRINTING DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SARGENT, of California, from the Conference Committee on the bill appropriating $350,000 to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding during the current fiscal year, made a report, which was agreed to, and the bill passed. The bill as passed provides that from and after the present session of Congress the Congressional Printer shall not pay a price exceeding 50 cents per 1,000 ems for composition, and 40 cents an hour for time work in binding, &c.

The Senate then, at 4 o'clock, took a recess until 8 o'clock to-morrow morning.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 10 o'clock, and according to an agreement made yesterday, took a further recess until 11:55 o'clock. At the expiration of the recess prayer was offered by the Chaplain, and the journal of Tuesday, the 13th inst., was read and approved.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, asked leave to offer a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the House within 10 days the actual amount of gold coin and bullion and silver coin and bullion now in the Treasury, together with a detailed statement of all outstanding obligations payable on demand in coin, with the balance actually owned by the Treasury available for resumption of specie payments, and also whether any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations have been issued during the past or present year in the purchase of any such coin or bullion.

Mr. KASSON, of Iowa, objected.

THE FLORIDA ELECTION.

The House, at 1 P. M., resumed the consideration of the resolutions reported by the Special Committee, charged with investigating recent election in Florida, and was addressed by Mr. THOMPSON, of Massachusetts, the Chairman of the Committee. He defended the majority from the charges made against it by the minority report, and stated that the minority had been treated with the greatest fairness, and any charge to the contrary was utterly untrue. The minority had gone down to Florida in order to justify the illegal action of the Canvassing Board. He criticised that portion of their report which states that the action of that board was "singularly faithful." Faithful to what? Faithful to the country? No. Faithful to the State of Florida? No; it had undertaken to cheat the people of Florida out of their lawfully elected Governor. The majority had never refused to summon a witness when desired by the minority. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Hunnell] had charged on the floor of the House yesterday that Democratic fraud existed in Florida. Why had he not proved it when he was there? He had been given every opportunity to do so, and yet he could not. In short, he [Mr. Thompson] declared that the minority report was substantially untrue from beginning to end, although the facts were well known to them when they made the report. The Tilden Electors had been as truly elected in Florida as the Hayes Electors had been in Massachusetts.

The majority resolution declaring the Tilden Electors duly elected in Florida was then adopted. Yeas 143, nays 82—a party vote, with the exception of Mr. Purman, of Florida, who voted in the affirmative.

THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House, at 2:40 P. M., went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Mills, of Texas, in the chair) on the Naval Appropriation bill. The bill appropriates $13,677,394 40.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, of Tennessee, said that in the proper place he intended to offer as an amendment a bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs to authorize the appointment of a mixed commission to decide upon the future naval policy of the United States. He called attention to the fact that since 1861 there had been expended on the Navy the sum of over $600,000,000, and yet it was not as efficient to-day as it was in 1861. The President had stated in his annual Message to Congress that the Navy was stronger now than it had ever been, but he [Mr. Whitthorne] did not wish the country to be misled by that statement. The strength of a navy did not consist in the number of its vessels or of its officers and men, but in its power to destroy, and the United States Navy had become as powerless as not to have a standard among the navies of the world. In the power of destroying its adversaries the United States Navy was in the rear of even the Brazilian and Turkish Navies. His opinion, personally, was that the days of vast navies and armored vessels had passed, and that the future naval policy of the United States should be alone confined to the idea of speed in the vessels. If a commission were appointed, the result would be that the United States Navy would again become the pride and boast of the American people.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, said that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthorne] had last year discussed in a method the question of improving the Navy of the United States, which was by the impeachment of the Secretary of the Navy. That attempt had failed. Now he came forward with a proposition for a commission which was to be a panacea for all the ills which afflicted the Navy Department. That commission was to be made up of three persons who had passed their lives in the naval service, and of six persons who, in all probability, would know nothing whatever about the subject which they were to inquire into. He denied that the American Navy was in a worse condition than it had ever been before, and he believed that, if war had ensued between Spain and the United States during the Virginius excitement, the United States Navy would have come out conqueror.

The bill was then considered by sections, and various amendments were proposed; but without coming to a vote the committee rose.

THE PRINTING DEFICIENCY.

The conference report on the bill providing for a deficiency in the appropriations for the support of the Public Printing Office was agreed to.

The House then, at 4:55, took a recess until 7:30 this evening; the evening session to be for the consideration of the Naval Appropriation bill.

The House met at 7:30, and immediately went into Committee of the Whole—Mr. Mills, of Texas, in the chair—on the Naval Appropriation bill. The pending question was on an amendment offered by Mr. Hale, of Maine, increasing the appropriation for the pay of officers and men in the Navy from $6,250,000 to $7,000 000. After considerable debate the amendment was rejected.

A long discussion took place over the proposition of Mr. Seelye, of Massachusetts, to appropriate $5,000 for the reduction of the observations on the transit of Venus, Mr. Holman, of Indiana, taking the ground that naval officers should be detailed to do that scientific work, Mr. Seelye replying to him that such computations were a specialty to which very few officers had devoted themselves, and Mr. Conger, of Michigan, remarking, in his usual sarcastic tone, that Mr. Holman himself was the man to do the work, if he could show as much readiness in reducing scientific observations as he had shown in reducing the expenditures of the Government. Finally, Mr. Seelye's motion was carried, though Mr. Holman still characterized it as a ridiculous absurdity. Without finishing the bill, the Committee rose, and the House, at 10 o'clock, took recess until 10 A. M. to-morrow.

LITERARY NOTES.

—Roberts Brothers propose to publish the new Goethe correspondence at an early day.

—The sale of the little companion to Helen's Babies, entitled Annals of a Baby, has already reached 10,000 copies in two weeks.

—Still the babies are ahead. D. Lothrop & Co. say that their new magazine, Babyland, is meeting with a success unprecedented in magazine literature.

—The Life of Edwin Forrest, the great actor, in preparation by Rev. W. R. Alger, may soon be expected. His manuscript is at length in the printer's hands.

—G. W. Carleton & Co. will publish in a few days a new novel, entitled Madame, by Frank Lee Benedict, who is passing the Winter with his family in Pau, Hautes-Pyrenees, France.

—The developments in life insurance are now specially attracting the attention of writers in that department of literature, and the March Scribner will contain the most complete and practical explanation of the subject recently given to the public.

—Mrs. E. A. Lawrence, of Marblehead, Mass., has had the good fortune to write the memoir of a female missionary, Mrs. H. A. L. Hamlin, which has already reached a ninth edition, and has permanent interest for the religious community generally. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

—D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, propose to publish early in March a volume entitled The Great American Evangelists and their Work. It embraces the work of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey in Europe and America, and will have a full account of the revival work now in progress. Biographies of the evangelists are to be given, with steel engravings of Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. Bliss, Dr. Tourjée, and cuts of Mr. Moody's birth-place, the Boston Tabernacle, &c.

—The present day being an era of haste and condensed food, we find a growing habit of condensing books into a kind of literary pemmican for use on travels. The disquisitions of Christopher North and his friends have been cut down from their former size into a handy volume. John Skelton, advocate, a littérateur of some note in England, has performed the operation, and the book appears from the presses of Lovell, Adam, Wesson & Co. under the title of The Comedy of the Noctes Ambrosianæ.

—Harper & Brothers have published another novel by B. L. Farjeon, the widely-read author of Blade o' Grass, Grif, and a host of other romances. It is in their cheap paper series, and is called The Duchess of Rosemary Lane. It need not be supposed that because there is a title in the name of the book the characters move in any lofty sphere of life. Mr. Farjeon sticks to the classes first thoroughly popularized by Dickens, and in his Duchess of Rosemary Lane relates with his accustomed animation the miseries of the poor. Squalid cellars and reeking by-ways are the scenes in which his actors live and move.

—Flammarion is a Frenchman who does not curb his imagination enough to suit the staidness of English taste. But his History of the Heavens contains so much that is good that it has been used as a basis for a more serious work by John F. Blake. The method has been changed from dialogue between friends to straightforward didactic language, and various facts and novelties recently discovered have been added which cannot be found in Flammarion's book. The English translation and adaptation is published in a pretty volume, octavo, by Macmillan & Co., of London, and contains a number of illustrations by French workmen.

—Mr. William C. Prime will publish immediately, through A. D. F. Randolph & Co., a somewhat curious little book, which will interest all readers of recondite history. It is a sketch of the entire history, so far as it can be gathered out of many books, of the wood known as the True Cross, which played so important a part in the world's history for hundreds of years. Mr. Prime does not believe in the verity of the wood, but rightly judges that its central importance in history justifies such a sketch. The subject drifts into all departments of history, literature and art, and is remarkably general in its interest.

—Tourgénief has taught Europe and America more about Russian life than any of his countrymen who preceded him in literature. But before Tourgénief became famous Jacob Grimm called the attention of a narrower audience to the existence of a great body of popular legends among the Russians, just as he had brought out the underlying strata of mythology among the folk-stories of other nations. A Canadian firm, having a branch in New-York, Messrs. Lovell, Adam, Wesson & Co., have republished here a volume of Russian Folk-tales by W. R. S. Ralston, of the British Museum. He has already written on Russian subjects like and very similar to this. The Songs of the Russian People and Krilof and his Fables are by him. Lovers of fairy tales will find the present volume a great treat.

—The Emphasized New Testament, now translated from the text of Tregelles, and critically emphasized according to the logical idiom of the original by means of underscored lines, by Joseph B. Rotherham, who furnishes an introduction and occasional notes, will soon be published by John Wiley & Sons, No. 15 Astor place. Its leading features are that it distinguishes all emphatic words, shows every recurrence of the Greek article, whether translated or not, renders the theological and ecclesiastical terms according to their simple meaning, and is an entirely independent translation made directly from the Greek, and is in no sense a revision of the old translation. The book is made in England, and Wiley & Sons have only imported an edition. The work has already attracted the attention of Biblical scholars.

LAW REPORTS.

BOODY'S SUIT AGAINST TILDEN.

CONCLUSION OF PLAINTIFF'S DIRECT EXAMINATION — TILDEN'S DEFENSE—HE PLEADS THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

The trial of the suit of Henry H. Boody against Samuel J. Tilden and others for an accounting in the pool transactions of 1864, resulting in the consolidation of the Chicago and North-western Railway and the Chicago and Galena Union Railroad Companies, was resumed yesterday morning in the Special Term of the Superior Court before Judge Sedgwick, Mr. Dexter A. Hawkins appearing for Mr. Boody, and Mr. William W. Niles for the defendants Tilden and Ogden—Bartholomew, the third defendant, having agreed to abide the issue of an accounting. Mr. Boody's direct examination was concluded by Mr. Hawkins, witness testifying that when he and Mr. Young examined the books in August, 1864, they ascertained the ratio per 1,000 shares of the supposed profits to be divided among the parties to the pool. Mr. Niles cross-examined Mr. Boody, who testified that he swore to the complaint in this suit on the 1st of May, 1876; witness had sworn in the complaint that Tilden was a Director and member of the Executive Committee of the Chicago and North-western Railway Company on the 28th of March, 1864, and had sworn in an affidavit made on Oct. 23, 1876, that Tilden was a Trustee at the time mentioned; witness, in the pool arrangement, was to buy enough shares, added to those bought by other members of the pool, to carry out the object of the pool. He was the private owner of 3,100 shares of Chicago and Galena Union stock prior to the formation of the pool; the other members of the pool did not know of witness' ownership of these shares until some days after the pool was formed; some fear had been expressed that the Chicago and Galena stock would go so high that it would not be profitable to secure enough of it to control the consolidation of the two companies, and then witness informed the other members of the pool that he had about 3,000 shares of the stock and that the vote on those shares and on the proxies he could command would be sufficient, added to other votes they could get, to insure the consolidation; witness had devoted 2,300 shares of his private stock at rates, running from $119 to $124 50 per share, to the success of the pool; he had not charged $139 per share for the stock, but gave it to the pool at the prices he had paid for it himself; witness failed in 1866; he owed at that time, according to the statement of his assets and liabilities, the Company, $134,000 to that company, which had been loaned to him by Mr. Ogden, which loan witness repaid, principal and interest, on the 9th of May, 1871; witness, about 1866, engaged with Mr. Ogden in silver, gold, and iron mining speculations; he made an assignment in March, 1866; he went on and paid all his creditors as fast as he got money enough to do so, and there was no person who had a claim against him in 1866 that had one now, to his knowledge.

To Mr. Hawkins—When witness looked over the accounts of the pool with Mr. Young, in August, 1864, there was no entry made in them of the losses witness sustained during the panic of 1864 in his efforts to carry the vast amount of stock he had bought in the interest of the pool; these losses amounted to over $71,000. In the midst of the panic call loans were demanded, and witness stated the case to Ogden and Tilden, and Ogden said that every effort must be made by witness to carry the pool through, as failure would be ruinous, involving the loss of about $600,000; witness used his endeavors to carry the pool through, and did so at every sacrifice, for he could get no aid from Tilden or Ogden, except $5,000 from Ogden.

Cross-examination resumed—Within one or two weeks after the panic, Chicago and Galena Union stock reached as high a figure as it had sold at before the panic; witness had not authorized Mr. Ogden to use moneys of the Chicago and North-western Railroad in this pool transaction. [Witness here gave, in great detail, in response to questions by Mr. Niles, statements in reference to his purchase of Chicago and Galena Union stock, and the incidental expenses connected therewith, during the time he was obtaining such stock to further the consolidation of the Chicago and North-western and Chicago and Galena Union Companies.] Witness resumed—Never had heard Tilden or Ogden give any instructions about entries in the books of the Chicago and North-western Company or the books of the pool; did not discover that he had overpaid Tilden, Ogden, and Bartholomew until about two years and a half ago; he had found that he was more straitened financially than he thought he ought to be, and this led to an examination of his books and the discovery of the overpayments; he had made a demand on the Chicago and North-western Railway Company for the refunding of this money before making a demand on the defendants, but had finally made the demand on them because he was led to believe that they, and not the company, were responsible to him.

An adjournment was here taken until 11 o'clock this morning.

The answer of Mr. Tilden interposes three defenses—a general denial, the statute of limitations, and a claim of the release of Tilden and Ogden on the ground that Bartholomew, one of the defendants, has been released, and that his release releases them, if there was any claim against them.

SUIT AGAINST THE CITY DISMISSED.

THE CASE OF DURYEA ENDED—THE DAMAGES CAUSED BY THE PLAINTIFF'S NEGLIGENCE.

The trial of the suit of Duryea against the Mayor, &c., was resumed before Judge Donohue, in Part I. of the Supreme Court yesterday. In this suit the plaintiff claimed $50,000 damages for injuries to his land resulting from a discharge thereon of the water from the Thirty-fourth street sewer. It was shown by the City yesterday that the plaintiff bought his lots, which were under water, with full knowledge of the fact that the sewer was discharging so near as to overflow them. It was next proved with regard to the "side-cut," which was the main cause of the damage, that so far from being built in violation of private right, a license had first been procured for its construction from George F. Tallman, who owned the land which the plaintiff subsequently bought, and on which the side-cut was built, and also houses on the line of the sewer, which were benefited by its erection. Mr. Craven, who was at that time the head of the Croton Board, refused to build it without Mr. Tallman's written permit, and one of the residents on Thirty-fourth street, who was Mr. Tallman's agent at the time, procured it. During the many changes of quarters which the Commissioner of Public Works has made during the past few years, this paper was lost, but its existence when the side-cut was built was shown by uncontradicted evidence.

The defendants then put one of their engineers on the stand, who testified that he had made a survey of the bulkhead which the plaintiff built, and that the same projected from 6 to 20 feet beyond the line established by law and known as the Harbor Commissioners' line. This, it was contended by the City, made it an illegal structure and foreclosed the plaintiff from recovering any damage which it helped to cause.

Mr. Avery, the City's engineer, testified that on the southerly line of Thirty-fifth street the Harbor Commissioners' line ran 332 feet easterly from the easterly side of First avenue, whereas Duryea's bulkhead ran 341 feet easterly.

Gen. Viele, who made the survey for the plaintiff when he began to fill in, was then called in rebuttal, and produced a tracing of a survey of Duryea's premises showing the Harbor Commissioners' line. On cross-examination by Mr. Lacombe, he testified that on the southerly line of Thirty-fifth street this line lay as shown on his survey, 333 feet 2 inches easterly from the easterly line of First avenue. The two Surveyors being thus at odds, the defendants produced the Harbor Commissioners' maps, and the course and distance tables, upon which the bulkhead line at the point indicated was described at 323 feet easterly from the easterly line of First avenue, thus showing the accuracy of Mr. Avery's survey in that particular.

Upon the conclusion of the testimony, Judge Donohue dismissed the complaint upon the ground—first, that the plaintiff, having bought the property with the knowledge of the existence of the "side-cut," could not ask damages for the natural results of its existence; and, second, that his own negligence contributed to the injury in that he did not protect himself by building a bulkhead on his southerly line. Mr. Fiero and J. Van Derpoel appeared for the plaintiff, and A. J. Requier and E. H. Lacombe for the City.

ALLEGED FALSE PRETENSES.

On Aug. 19, 1867, John M. Worth, of this City, died while a passenger on board the steamship Ocean Queen, from Aspinwall, and left a sum of over $698 39 in money, which was taken possession of by Public Administrator Roberts, deceased, as alleged, having left no relatives. After administering to the estate, and paying all expenses connected with the death of Mr. Worth, the Public Administrator, by order of the then Surrogate, deposited the balance, $511 44, in the City Treasury. Subsequently proceedings were instituted before the Surrogate for the recovery of this sum by a man representing himself as William H. Worth, a brother of the deceased and sole heir. The Surrogate appointed Cornelius Miner a Referee to take testimony in the case, and in the proceedings before that gentleman the claimant again swore that he was William H. Worth, a brother of the deceased. On these representations the Referee reported that "Worth" was the sole heir of John M. Worth, whereupon the Surrogate ordered that he be paid $511 44, with interest, the residue of the deceased man's estate. The money was paid over to the claimant, and it was subsequently ascertained that he was no relative whatever of the dead man, but a person named William Dwyer, who had personated the brother of the deceased in order to obtain the money in the hands of the City Treasurer. These facts being laid before District Attorney Phelps, that gentleman had Dwyer's case sent before the Grand Jury, who yesterday found an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses against the accused. Dwyer, who was arrested on Tuesday, will be arraigned to-morrow.

COURT NOTES.

Michael Ryan was arrested yesterday by Officer Crowley, of the United States District Attorney's office, on a warrant charging him with complicity with Eph Holland in the Cincinnati election frauds. He will be accorded a hearing to-day.

An order was entered by the Court of Common Pleas, General Term, yesterday, expunging from the docket of judgments, in the County Clerk's Office, the judgments for $14,000 entered against Charles Devlin, Tweed's surety in the criminal prosecutions.

The Sixth Avenue Railroad Company, having been successful in its suit to restrain the Gilbert Elevated Railroad Company from building its road along Sixth avenue, has made a motion in Superior Court for an extra allowance of $2,000. The matter will be argued to-morrow.

Judge Sedgwick, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday ordered a guardian to be appointed for Annie Beer, a minor, who desires to sue the Ninth Avenue Railroad Company for damages, on account of personal injuries received by her in being run over by one of the cars.

The jury in Part II. of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, gave a verdict of $300 to the plaintiff in the suit of Joanna Lyons against Edward C. Richards. The plaintiff sued to recover $10,000 damages for personal injuries received by her in falling through an iron grating in front of the defendant's premises on Third avenue.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday reserved his decision on a motion for leave to file a supplemental complaint in the case of Charles Curtis against Adelbertus Mielcarcsey, and others. The action is for the foreclosure of a $28,500 mortgage on the property occupied by the Polish Roman Catholic Church, in this City.

The Grand Jury yesterday found an indictment for murder in the first degree against James Flood, who killed his wife Mary with a "reamer" on the stoop of No. 53 Crosby street, on Sunday morning, the 4th inst. Morrison, the boon companion of Flood, who witnessed the tragedy, was held as a witness, and committed to the House of Detention.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday granted a writ of prohibition, restraining Judges Shea, Sinnott, and Alker, sitting in the Marine Court, General Term, from acting in the appeal in the case of Adolphus against Cantrell, in which, as alleged, Judge Alker sat as one of the General Term Judges to pass upon an order made by him at Trial Term.

The trial of the suit of Andrew J. Thomas against Henry Knight was begun before Judge Speir and a jury in Part I. of the Superior Court yesterday. The plaintiff seeks $2,500 for the alleged wrongful conversion of two diamond rings pledged by him with the defendant as security for a loan. The defendant claims the property is only worth $600, and that he has offered to return it. The case is still on.

William Smith was married to Mary Paul and Anton Steiner to Emma Woods by Judge McAdam, in Marine Court, Chambers, yesterday. All the parties were in their work-day clothes, and the countenances of the grooms betrayed a remarkable absence of soap and water. One of the fair brides was also adorned with a black eye, whose color was not entirely owing to nature. All four came in court together, and departed in great glee after the ceremony had been performed.

Judge Joseph F. Daly, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, rendered a decision in the suit of John Oiendorf against Edward W. Wilson. In this case the plaintiff asked for an injunction to restrain the defendant from carrying on the business of coloring, re-coloring and re-firing teas, and also sought for a Receiver to take possession of the goods of a firm of which the plaintiff and defendant were partners. The motion for an injunction and a Receiver was granted.

On Tuesday afternoon the firm of Arthur W. Kipling & Son, jewelers, No. 24 Maiden lane, informed the Police of the First Precinct that a case of jet goods, valued at $700, which a truckman from the Appraiser's office had deposited in front of their store, had been stolen by two men, who had placed the case in a cart and driven away. Detective Malone arrested George Wilson in South street, finding the box in his cart, but upon being arraigned at Essex Market Police Court yesterday he was discharged for lack of evidence.

The case of Rodh against Mora was brought to trial before Judge Lawrence and a jury in Part II. of the Supreme Court yesterday. The plaintiff seeks to recover $4,122 50, sold, which he says the defendant collected on a draft on a house in Havana, Cuba. The draft was given for collection to Mora Feb. 26, 1863, and came back at first protested, but it was afterward collected. The plaintiff says the defendant failed to account for the money. Mora says, however, that he did account and afterward went into partnership with Rodh. The case is still on.

A sealed verdict was ordered by Judge Van Brunt, in Part III. of the Supreme Court, yesterday, in the case of Lintpold Mack against the Dry Dock, East Broadway and Battery Railroad Company. The plaintiff, it seems, was riding on the front platform of one of the defendants' cars on April 10, 1872. In Cortlandt street, near the ferry, a collision occurred by which the pole of a truck was driven through the dash-board of the car, and against the plaintiff's knee. The knee-pan was displaced, and the plaintiff sues for $10,000 damages. The company says the accident was the plaintiff's own fault.

In the case of Hoffman against Burke the plaintiff recovered judgment in a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage for $35,000 on property near Ninety-seventh street and Third avenue. The mortgage was made in 1875, the property being then valued at $70,000. The defendant has appealed from the judgment of foreclosure, and made a motion before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday for a stay of proceedings under the judgment, pending the appeal, without his giving security. Burke claims the property is sufficient security for the judgment, but the plaintiff claims that the property has depreciated so much as no longer to be an adequate security. Decision was reserved.

William Conroy was working with a derrick, on June 9, 1876, among the ruins of a burned building on Broadway, between Grand and Howard streets, and while so occupied was run over and trampled on by a horse attached to a carriage, which were owned by a livery stable keeper named Ira W. Boyce. Conroy brought a suit for $2,000 damages in the Court of Common Pleas, and the case was brought to trial yesterday before Judge Larremore. Conroy claims the horse was left standing in the street by the driver, and that the animal was not fastened nor attended. Boyce claims there was no negligence, and that the driver merely got off the carriage to look after one of the horse's shoes. A sealed verdict was ordered. Charles S. Spencer appeared for the plaintiff and A. H. Hitchcock for the defendant.

In the suit of Cohen against Smith, decided by Judge Barrett in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, the defendant is a City Marshal, and was endeavoring to execute a warrant of dispossession against Cohen. The latter was not named in the warrant, but he was merely a sub-tenant, and the tenant was named in the warrant. Cohen obtained a temporary injunction restraining the Marshal from executing his warrant against him, because he had not been made a party to the proceedings. Cohen's sub-letting, however, began on the day the warrant of dispossession was issued, and Judge Barrett says there is a suspicion that the sub-letting was not in good faith. The injunction is vacated, Judge Barrett saying that if the Marshal exceeds his authority Cohen can sue for damages.

THE SUTTON PERJURY TRIAL.

The trial of James Sutton, President of the Aldine Publishing Company, charged with perjury in swearing to a false list of losses by a fire at the premises No. 23 Liberty street and No. 58 Maiden lane, on June 24, 1875, was resumed before Recorder Hackett yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Assistant District Attorney Herring, who conducts the case for the prosecution, produced a number of experts in the manufacture of chromos and electrotypes, by whom he showed that the estimates of losses sworn to by Mr. Sutton in his proof of loss, amounting to over $200,000, was greatly exaggerated. The witnesses were cross-examined at length by Mr. John R. Fellows, counsel for the accused. The case, from its nature, is necessarily tedious, and will occupy several days in trial.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Barrett.

Thomas vs. Brundage.—Motion for a Receiver denied.

Schrider vs. Corby.—Justification approved.

In the matter of the Petition of the First Presbyterian Church.—Motion denied, with $10 costs.

Thurber vs. Pyatt.—Motion granted for Feb. 23.

Bradley vs. McLaughlin.—Order of reference vacated and cause sent to the Circuit for trial.

In the matter of Clements, Jr., et al.—Report now confirmed and order granted.

Kelly vs. Sullivan.—This must be viewed differently from a foreclosure suit, or from a partition suit where the property has been purchased by a stranger. It is not denied that the property was bid in on behalf of the plaintiff in partition. Then there was certainly a misunderstanding, to say the least at the sale. Further, infants represented by a public official have a contingent interest. Lastly, a large increase upon the bid is offered. Under such circumstances, a resale should be ordered upon payment of the expenses thereof, and $10 costs of this motion, and upon Mr. Bracken depositing in this court (as security) 10 per cent. upon the increased bid offered, viz. $600; the Referee on such resale, in case Mr. Bracken shall be the successful bidder, to accept an assignment of the Clerk's certificate as cash to the extent of the face thereof.

Platt vs. Pfeffer et al.—This application must be denied. The certificate of the Chamberlain is not furnished, nor that of the County Clerk, as required by the rule. The report is not plumed to the testimony, and the latter is almost illegible. There seems to be another mortgage and no evidence of notice or proof as to priority. The whole proceeding exhibits undue haste.

Priest vs. Priest et al.—Referred to T. F. Smith, Esq., to take proof of the facts stated in the affidavits on both sides, the witnesses to be examined and cross-examined before him, and further witnesses to be called if either side be so advised; the Referee to report such testimony with his opinion thereon; the motion to be brought up upon such reported testimony and opinion upon two days' notice.

Cohen vs. Smith.—The injunction cannot be upheld. (1.) There should have been a verified complaint, making it appear that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded. (Code sec. 219.) (2.) The undertaking was entirely insufficient. (3.) The defendant should not be enjoined, even if these objections were cured. He will execute his warrant according to its tenor. If he exceeds his authority, the plaintiff has an ample and adequate remedy at law. The opposing affidavits throw suspicion upon the good faith of the parties. It looks like a plan to evade the magistrate's process. Motion denied, and injunction dissolved, with $10 costs.

By Judge Brady.

Ludington vs. Slauson.—Will hear this motion on Thursday at 10:30 A. M. at Court of Oyer and Terminer.

The Bank of Ohio Valley vs. Eccles.—Counsel will appear on Thursday at 10:30 A. M.

No more important duty can devolve upon the Governor of this State, at the present time, than the nomination of the Superintendent of the Insurance Department. The services required of that officer were never of a more arduous or complex character, nor have they at any time involved the care of public interests of so much gravity. The office needs, more imperatively than it has ever done, an incumbent as free from the entanglements of partisan politics as he is elevated above the reach of undue influence on the part of the companies. He should bring to the discharge of his duties mature experience, judicial impartiality, and unbending resolution. It cannot be said that Postmaster SMYTHE, of Albany, is deficient in all these qualifications, but he is certainly wanting in most of them. He is a trading politician of a rather low order, a man totally destitute of the special kind of experience needed in the head of the Insurance Department, and one whose appointment to that office would be in every way calculated to excite public distrust instead of allaying it. A man who has been chiefly distinguished for incompetency in the management of a third-rate Post Office is about the most unfit person who could have been thought of for Superintendent of Life Insurance.

Of course the nomination by a Democratic Governor for a highly important office of a hack politician of the opposite party excites a great deal of speculation at Albany. It is rumored, with what justice we have no means of judging, to be the first fruits of an assumed Tilden-Conkling "trade" for place and power. Politically, Mr. SMYTHE is simply the creature of Senator CONKLING, and has always been one of his most active and least scrupulous agents. There is nothing in the character of either party to the supposed transaction to exclude the supposition that the theory in question is the true one. But the nomination is sufficiently disgraceful without connecting it with any corrupt political bargains. No one knows better than Gov. ROBINSON what are the requirements of the office which he proposes to fill so unworthily, and if he is acting in the matter as the cat's-paw of the arch-intriguer TILDEN, he is simply placing in a more shameful light his betrayal of the interests of thousands of life insurance policy-holders. Since the scandalous partisan dicker by which Gov. TILDEN brought about the present maladministration of our Police Board, there has been no more unworthy prostitution of the Executive office than this to which Gov. ROBINSON has just lent himself.

There is some danger that the Pacific Railroads may succeed in evading the just demands of the public Treasury. The Sinking Fund bill of Senator WEST, which is favored by the companies, was under discussion yesterday in the Senate, and it was only by the very close vote of 22 to 20 that Senator BOOTH's amendment was adopted, providing that the sinking fund payments to secure redemption at maturity of the Government loan should be in addition to the payments now made. The powerful and not overscrupulous lobby, acting in the interests of the companies, will strain every effort to reverse this decision, and it is not absolutely certain that in a full Senate they will not succeed. While the question in dispute may be one which admits of an honest difference of opinion, there can be no doubt about the side to which the preponderating weight of character and principle will incline. It is a little unfortunate for his reputation that the Republican Senator from this State should be found sustaining the case of the railroads with all the ardor of a paid attorney.

It would be interesting to know the scale of rewards arranged for Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD's witnesses. BRUSH, the Florida telegraph operator, who evolved from his inner consciousness incendiary messages between Republicans, was appointed on the Capitol Police. Nevertheless, his services to the Democratic cause were neither laborious or valuable. At this rate, LITTLEFIELD ought to have a first-class clerkship, MADDOX a place somewhere in clover, and the illustrious PICKETT should not be allowed to go away with anything less than a good foreign mission.

The bill for creating a commission to prepare or select a uniform series of text-books for use in the public schools of the State is up again at Albany. While it may be true that local boards make too frequent changes in school-books, and that their motives for so doing are not always of the highest kind, it is sufficiently obvious that the bill simply aims at curing a minor grievance by furnishing an opportunity for much more serious evils. The people are not prepared to trust any State Board with powers so sweeping and so liable to be abused as those which the bill would confer. The unrestricted competition of publishers furnishes the best possible guarantee for maintaining the quality and the cheapness of our school-books, and if the discretion of Boards of Education is liable to abuse, the people have the power of regulating its exercise entirely in their own hands.

The Assembly Committee on Cities has unanimously reported in favor of the very salutary amendments to the New-York charter introduced by Mr. FISH. These are intended to check the growth of the debt, to simplify administration, and to reduce expenses. They are far from containing all the reforms needed in the City Government, but they furnish a very respectable installment. A constitutional method of reducing City salaries appears to be greatly sought after at Albany, though to the lay mind it would seem that the language of the constitutional amendment referring to "fees, percentages, and allowances" does not refer to salaried officers at all, but to officers paid like the Sheriff, Register, and Coroners. It needs some little ingenuity to assume that "allowances" in this connection mean salaries. It is proposed to surmount this real or imaginary difficulty by passing a general law which shall meet the case of New-York, and such a measure was introduced yesterday providing for a uniform ten per cent. reduction of the salaries of all municipal officers throughout the State. The chief objection to this bill is that, so far as this City is concerned, it is not radical enough. It could readily be adapted to our special needs, however, by the insertion of certain maximum amounts which the salaries of any officials or sets of officials should not be allowed to exceed. The bill, as introduced, does this in the case of the Commissioner of Jurors, and there is no reason why it should not do so in a score of other cases should the difficulty over the meaning of the word "allowances" prove to be insuperable.

The silly scheme to organize a street carnival in New-York has been snuffed out by the municipal authorities. The laws of the State prohibit the appearance in "any road, public highway, field, lot, or inclosure," of any person masked or disguised in a manner to prevent identification. This statute has been rigidly enforced heretofore, and there is no good reason why it should not be in this case. As the promoters of this particular piece of folly proposed to have their carnival after Lent, instead of at the orthodox season, they have been spared a sudden collapse of their ill-timed show.

THE LOUISIANA CASE YESTERDAY.

The Democrats yesterday presented nothing new in the Louisiana case except a brand new definition of the character of the Commission. When the Florida case was up, it will be remembered, the Democrats insisted that the Commission was a court, with power to make such an inquiry as is involved in a case of quo warranto. But yesterday Mr. TRUMBULL declared that the Commission was a legislative body, sitting to make inquiry touching the matters referred to them, and having the powers enjoyed by a Congressional committee. This view of the matter was taken to enable Mr. TRUMBULL to get around the decision in the Florida case. If the Commission will not go behind the returns as a court, possibly, he argues, it may do so as a Congressional committee. Beyond this change of standpoint there was nothing novel in the matter presented by the Democrats.

Most of Mr. CARPENTER'S argument was dull; and much of it was very shallow as well. His attempts at wit degenerated into a rather rude familiarity toward the Commission, and into flippancy with reference to his subject. He appeared, for the most part, to be under great restraint, and by no means did himself justice. Two years since, when he discussed the Louisiana matter in the Senate, he did so with a practical end in view, which he ardently desired to bring about. Then he was trying to get a new election in the State, under Federal supervision, in order that it might be peaceful and fair. To do this, he was compelled to show, and did show, in strong colors, all the irregularities and frauds on both sides in that unhappy State. But he failed to convince the Senate, or any considerable number of Senators, that there was any power in the Federal Government to take on itself the conduct of so strictly a State affair as an election. At the present time, he is arguing for the election of Mr. TILDEN, which he does not desire, and in favor of an assumption of power by Congress which is greater than the one he formally proposed. It is not singular that his argument is feeble and wide of the point. Both Mr. CARPENTER and Mr. TRUMBULL gave a great deal of their time to what, with all respect, must be called pure buncombe—eloquence not intended for the Commission, but meant to influence, as far as possible, the current of public opinion. When, for instance, Mr. CARPENTER talked about "this centennial of our national bragging and boasting," and about our having invited all the world to see a governmental "machine which was in danger of going to smash," he could hardly have expected the Commission to give much weight to the remark. And when he exclaimed: "If justice is to be slaughtered at our own temple; if the laws are to be immolated by our sworn priests; if fraud is to be sanctioned and solemnized as an instrument for electing a President of the United States, then farewell to the future hopes of the country," he must have known that such balderdash had no significance at all, except so far as it covered an unseemly appeal to the Commissioners' hopes and fears. There was less of this stuff in Mr. TRUMBULL'S speech, but there was too much of it.

The Republican counsel, on the contrary, eschewed fine talking, and spoke with great clearness and precision to the questions before the Commission, which, owing to the offer of proof made by Mr. TRUMBULL, were mainly the power of the Commission with reference to taking evidence, and the effect of the laws of Louisiana upon the conduct of the Returning Board. The first of these points is clearly and completely covered by the decision of the Commission in the Florida case. It was there held that the Commission would not go behind the certificates sent up to the Federal capital by the authorities of the State. But the Democrats now say that the Returning Board of Louisiana was not competent to establish a basis for action by the State authorities, because of legal defects in its Constitution and in its conduct. We have already examined these alleged defects with some particularity, and the Republican counsel yesterday took substantially the same position as that we have heretofore indicated. The provision of the law that a vacancy in the Returning Board should be filled by the remaining members was directory and did not attach a condition to the exercise of the board's authority. They ought to have filled the vacancy, but that they did not does not make their action void. The point touching the repeal of the act by which the right of the remaining Electors to fill a vacancy in their number was given is a very intricate one, which we shall not attempt to elucidate here. We beg to refer our readers to the argument of Mr. SHELLABARGER, which was clear, candid, and conclusive.

It is not quite plain, from the ruling of the Commission yesterday, what course will be taken with reference to a decision. It may be that the Commission will decide to-day on the admission of the evidence, and if that is excluded, hear more argument on the main question. And it may be that the whole argument will be submitted to-day, and a decision be reached on the final question to-morrow. But if the evidence is admitted there is no saying when the end will come. The Democrats offer to prove that the Returning Board did not act on proper evidence. If this is gone into, the Republicans will seek to show that they did, and thus the whole election will be brought up. We have already several thousand pages of testimony on this question, and if the Commission is to take more, the 4th of March will have come and gone before a decision can be made. There is nothing in the case to lead one to suppose that the Commission will reverse the decision in the Florida case.

CURRENCY CONTRACTING ITSELF.

The act of Jan. 4, 1875, known as the Resumption act, removed all restrictions upon the maximum of national bank issues, and provided that, until the legal tenders outstanding became reduced to $300,000,000, $80 of them should be withdrawn and canceled for every $100 of additional bank-note circulation emitted; the act of June 20, 1874, gave the banks permission to retire their circulation. The unlimited permission to surrender circulation has now been in force two years and seven months, and the unlimited permission to emit new notes has been in force two years. The following is a complete statement of actual operations under these two acts down to the present month:

Issued June 20, 1874, to Jan. 14, 1875	$4,734,500
Redeemed and retired same time	2,767,232
Net increase between those dates	$1,967,268
Outstanding Jan. 14, 1875	$351,861,450
Issued Jan. 14, 1875, to March 1, 1876	13,820,760
Redeemed and retired same time	$20,852,323
Surrendered same time	4,110,004
Net decrease above period	$11,141,567
Amount outstanding March 1, 1876	$340,719,883
Issued March 1, 1876, to Feb. 1, 1877	$7,448,225
Redeemed and retired same time	$25,983,978
Surrendered same time	3,251,452
Net decrease above period	$21,787,205
Amount outstanding Feb. 1, 1877	$318,932,678
Legal-tenders in Treasury, June 20, 1874, to retire notes of failed and liquidating banks	3,813,675
Total	$47,353,345
Deposits, March 1, 1876	23,733,700
	44,142,724
Legal-tenders on deposit Feb. 1, 1877	$18,158,746
Legal-tenders retired to March 1, 1876	11,056,609
Legal-tenders retired to Feb. 1, 1877	17,015,188
Bank note decline to Feb. 1, 1877	30,961,504

The net result is therefore a contraction of $30,961,504 in the bank circulation, and $17,015,188 in the legal tenders, or $47,976,692 in all. Separating this movement into the several terms covered by the summary, it appears thus:

Decrease of bank notes March 1, 1876, to Nov. 1, 1876	19,569,165
Total net bank note decline	$30,961,504

During the seven months intervening between the passage of the two acts, the issues of bank notes exceeded the retirements slightly, but in the two years then following, and now just concluded, the movement was all the other way. During the thirteen and a half months from Jan. 14, 1875, to March 1, 1876, the issues were $13,820,760, and the withdrawals were $24,962,327, making a decrease at the rate of about $803,000 a month; during the eight months from March to November last, the withdrawals were in excess of the issues at the rate of $2,446,145 a month; and during the three months just now ended, the excess of withdrawals was at the rate of $739,346 a month. The withdrawal of legal tenders has much less significance, inasmuch as it follows the issue of new currency, and has no relation to the net increase or decrease of that currency; but for the whole term of two years it has been at the rate of about $708,000 a month. The following comparison of the sixteen months from June 20, 1874, to Nov. 1, 1875, with the year ending Nov. 1, 1876, shows the remarkable contrast of bank-note issues declining to less than one-half, and retirements nearly doubling:

	Issued.	Retired.
Nov. 1, 1875, to Nov. 1, 1876	7,093,630	31,529,864

In the retirements for the first term are included $4,607,723 notes of liquidating banks and $2,690,918 surrendered notes; for the second period, $3,114,726 and $4,022,833 for the same items respectively. Up to August, 1875, the issues and retirements after June 20 (exclusive of the class of surrenders just mentioned) pretty nearly balanced each other monthly; from August to October, inclusive, the retirements were about 3 to 1 of the issues; during November and December they again ran nearly equal; but with 1876 a heavy excess of retirements began, they being to the issues as high as 20 to 1. Up to November, 1875, Massachusetts took one fourth of the issues, Pennsylvania took 13 per cent., Kentucky 11 per cent., Indiana 8, New-York 7; at the same time, New-York led in the withdrawals, followed next by Illinois and Missouri. During the past year, Massachusetts still led in issues, with much smaller figures, followed by New-York and Pennsylvania; New-York led the retirements, followed by Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, and Missouri, in the order named. During the first period, 16 States received more than they returned, and 19 returned more than they received; during the second, 3 States had an excess of issues, and 32 States an excess of withdrawals.

Legislation intended by at least some of its advocates to produce expansion, has thus resulted in an actual contraction of nearly $20,000,000 a year, and this has not been effected by legislative mandate, but by the voluntary action of two thousand corporations seeking their own interest, and merely using the permission given by law. Is there a man living, and neither an inmate of, nor a candidate for, a lunatic asylum, who will assert that this contraction has injured anybody, or deny that it has come about in the natural working of financial laws? The currency, let alone, has contracted itself, thus proving its own redundancy. This is its contraction in law; but the contraction in fact has been vastly greater, currency heaping up in vaults and staying there, because no demand called it forth. We offer no comment on these figures, for they are sufficiently simple and instructive without it.

PURROY AND PURMAN.

New-York and Florida have simultaneously produced two statesmen whose names should be coupled together. This is, par excellence, the reform period. Yet PURROY and PURMAN may be said to have taken the longest step in advance of any of those who desire to lay down new political principles. PURROY is a New-York Alderman who advances his theory of popular government with that easy assurance which characterizes the true reformer. He is as outspoken as GUMBLETON, who, when the World praised him for being chiefly instrumental in reducing the wages paid to City laborers, indignantly denied that he had so much as winked at such an economical measure. While GUMBLETON believes in subsidizing workmen who do not work, but who can vote, the candid PURROY favors a system of remuneration of civic dignitaries which shall enable them to meet their "election expenses" and have something left. There are no disguises about PURROY. He thinks that his services are so valuable to the taxpayers of New-York that they should be willing to pay his election bills. PURMAN, on the other hand, is disposed to throw the costs of his election on the party. Finding the Republicans unwilling to see him through his financial difficulties, he has gone over to the cause of Democracy and reform.

Let nobody think hardly of PURMAN. He only practices what PURROY preaches. He is a claimant for a seat in the next Congress. During his campaign in the Congressional District in Florida which he represents in the present Congress he expended, he says, a great deal of his wife's money. Rather than see the Second Congressional District of Florida misrepresented in Congress, he would sacrifice upon the altar of his country all his wife's relations, some of whom he succeeded in immolating upon the shrine of the Treasury Department, where he procured them clerkships. His pecuniary embarrassments preyed upon the noble mind of PURMAN. It was in vain that he had kept his name before the people during the exciting period which followed the Presidential election. It was not money in his pocket for him to continually telegraph to the Northern newspapers that HAYES had certainly carried Florida. He complained that he never received a cent for informing the world, as he did daily, that he, PURMAN, would hold the fort, or perform feats of that description. The simple-minded Republicans supposed that all this enthusiasm and warmth of manner was disinterested. PURMAN knew better. He was working for his election expenses. The contest over, PURMAN was ready to pass around the hat. Not a dollar did he receive. Strange to say, the Republican Party did not recognize the necessity of paying for PURMAN'S re-election.

The most natural thing for him in this crisis was to turn his eyes toward TILDEN and Reform. Unhappily for the first-named member of this celebrated firm he has the reputation of being enormously rich. Any man who has had votes, influence, or other valuable political consideration to sell, has driven a hard bargain with TILDEN. His famous barrel of money has been emptied many times. PURMAN, good, simple man, went to his Uncle SAMMY like a repentant prodigal who had spent his all in riotous election expenses. Up to that moment he had been engaged in holding the fort, and declaring that all was well. Now, he saw a great light. He was just as sure that TILDEN had carried Florida as he had before been convinced that the State had gone Republican. He dallied on the way. Like the illustrious PICKETT, of Louisiana, he had had notions that a Returning Board might be bought. He had hinted as much to the Tilden agents. But this, he explains, was done in order to draw off the aforesaid corruptionists, as they might tempt some man less impeccable than he, and so capture the Electoral vote of Florida. Then this honest man had flirted with the Texas Pacific Railroad job. He had gone around among the members with his empty pockets hanging out, complaining that the railroad lobby was ready to spend money. He exhorted his fellow-members to stand firm, and not let their votes go for this infamous measure without getting a good price for them. PURMAN is determined to be a high-priced statesman.

But, after all, PURMAN found nothing so promising as TILDEN and reform. TILDEN, he said, had too much money to be beaten. So he went over to that eminent reformer bag and baggage—passage paid. Yesterday he closed the account by voting with the Democrats on the proposition that Florida had gone for TILDEN. He had previously made a speech to the same effect, and had been congratulated thereupon by those stainless patriots, Mr. S. S. COX and Mr. ABRAM S. HEWITT. Let us hope that PURMAN was not too hard in his bargain with the Democratic leaders. He says he is out of pocket about $5,000 for election expenses. PURMAN would be dear at half the money. If he should be put on the roll of the next Congress as a contestant, he would draw about one year's pay and mileage. And this, we submit, would be paying a handsome price for PURMAN. It is not every man who would be willing to eat his own words for that amount of money. And a Congressman who manfully declared for three months that his State had gone Republican, and who was then willing to take it all back in a speech written for him by another man, ought to be encouraged. American politics do not develop many such contortionists.

HIBERNATING INFANTS.

It is very easy to mock at the despised American Indian, but after all there is no doubt that he is a man; at least, up to a certain point. He is not only capable of fighting in a way that justly exasperates the newly-scalped soldier, but he also possesses a keen love of domestic peace, and in the pursuit thereof displays remarkable ingenuity. This is sufficiently proved by the manner in which the Owasso Indian disposes of his babies during the long winter months which he is compelled to spend chiefly in his wigwam.

However ardent a child fancier a man may be, there are times when the noise of children becomes intolerable to him. In this respect the Owasso is like his white brethren. He may be passionately fond of his babies, but when he puts on his dressing-gown, and sits down in his study to spend a pleasant Winter evening in reading the latest work on the "Theory and Practice of Scalping" he does not like to be disturbed by a sudden avalanche of infants on the front stairs, or by an infantile rehearsal of the tribal war dance in the back parlor. Were he a white man he would probably urge his wife to take the children and make a long visit to her mother. Such an expedient would, however, be despised by a true Owasso brave, especially as in most cases he brains his wife's mother with a war-club before the end of the honeymoon. The Owasso is, of course, an ignorant pagan, but there is a good deal of the intelligent angel in him at times. He has grappled with the problem how to dispose of his infants during the Winter, and has solved it in a way that secures the greatest attainable comfort both to his babies and himself.

Early in November the Owasso father prepares as many water-proof birch-bark bags as he has infants. In each of these he places a baby, and then, having sealed up the bags with native pitch, carries them to a lake lying some distance north-west of Lake Superior. This lake is in a wild and desolate region, into which few white men have penetrated, and in which no Owasso ever thinks of fishing. In its deep waters he sinks the bags and their infantile contents, and then wends his way homeward with the happy air of a man who has proved himself a kind father and secured the certainty of a quiet Winter.

When May arrives and the ice has melted, the Owasso father takes his grappling hook and seeks again the lake at the bottom of which rest his hermetically-sealed children. It usually takes him but little time to fish up his family, as he knows exactly where the bags lie. Sometimes an unprincipled father is guilty of poaching among other men's babies, and occasionally the wrong baby is caught by mistake. Poaching, whether intentional or accidental, is, however, so severely punished that offenses and mistakes of the kind are exceedingly rare. When the bags are opened the babies are found to be sleeping so soundly that they have to be shaken with considerable energy before they awake. As soon, however, as they regain consciousness, they clamor for food in a way that clearly demonstrates their healthy and vigorous condition.

There are skeptics who will deny that a hermetically-sealed infant can remain under water for six months without giving up its entire ghost. With such people it is entirely useless to argue. The fact that the Owasso babies do pass their Winters under water, and that ninety-eight per cent. of them are fished up in a healthy state every Spring, rests upon the unimpeachable testimony of a California editor, who derived his knowledge of the matter from a white man who had lived two years with the Owasso tribe. If any one doubts his story, he is ready to point out on the map the precise location of the lake where the infants spend their Winters. It is difficult to imagine that dispassionate men would seek any further evidence. As for the scientific persons who deny that a baby can live for months at the bottom of a lake, let them first experiment with a few Owasso babies before arrogantly deciding what that variety of infant is capable of doing.

It must not be supposed that the example of the Owasso fathers is held up for imitation to the fathers of inchoate American voters. If any man wishes to see if white babies can hibernate under water, he had better make his experiments with caution. He should begin with his less valuable children, or with a few small boys borrowed from his neighbors, and in no case should he keep them six whole months under water. In the case of a small boy who has developed unusual lung-power by constant practice on the tin horn, it might be safe to leave him for three weeks, or even a month, at the bottom of a pond, but as a rule every sunken infant should be fished up once a week for examination.

Of course, accidents might occur during the progress of these experiments, but the man who fears to run the slightest risk will never make any valuable discovery, and has no right to criticise bolder and more determined men. Moreover, what is the small boy that his imaginary value is to be set above that of science? Surgeons have not the least hesitation in vivisecting the most estimable animals in the alleged interest of science, and they could hardly consistently object to the sinking of a few experimental boys, in order to ascertain if our entire juvenile population can be thus successfully kept out of mischief from November to May.

THE FUTURE OF NEW-YORK.

LETTER I.

In complying with your request to present my views as to the outlook of affairs, I beg to say that I am not animated by any rash desire to rush in where wiser men would fear to tread. The situation is one full of difficulties, before which bold men quail. It is a time for plain talk, calm thought, and decisive action.

It is a sweet use of adversity when it is accepted as a schoolmaster teaching lessons of wisdom. For nearly four years New-York has lain in the very ashes of adversity. Every trade, every calling, every man, has felt its chilling touch. And now on all sides is heard the inquiry, is the daylight at hand—is there hope in the future? This trial of adversity has not been limited to the area of our own City, State, or land. With more or less intensity it has extended as far as civilization extends. I do not propose to discuss in any general way its causes or its cure, but to deduce some practical lessons for the admonition of the people of this City, and to make some practical suggestions which may inspire the despondent with hope, that they may endure the present with fortitude and be animated to new achievements and new successes.

It is to be accepted as a truth that New-York is no longer endowed by natural advantages with the commercial supremacy which crowned her by divine right as the empress of trade upon this continent. Her proximity to the ocean, always and easily accessible by sailing-vessels; her facility for reaching the interior by the Hudson River, and the exclusive possession by the State of a depression in the Alleghany range, which afforded easy egress to the West, were natural advantages such as no other city upon the Atlantic coast enjoyed. The Erie Canal emphasized and supplemented these natural advantages, and gave the commerce of the City an impulse which sent the population from 123,000, in 1820, to 202,000 in 1830.

For long years after this the merchants and traders of New-York had no other care than to gather the harvest which each returning season brought to their coffers; to take toll of the products of foreign nations and the great West, which found ingress and egress by her gates. While huge wagons, drawn by six or eight horses, were painfully climbing the heights of the Alleghanies with three or four tons of freight to or from Philadelphia or Baltimore, a canal-boat, drawn by a single horse, conveyed to New-York 10 or 20 times the weight and bulk borne by the wagon. This City had no competitor, and feared none, and complacency was the prevailing mood of her merchants.

This complacency was first shocked by the solid and far-seeing men of Boston, who determined at any cost to secure a portion of the Western trade, and the railroad from Boston to Albany was the outcome of that determination. The Cunard line of steamers, with Boston as the American terminus, was also a thorn in the flesh of this complacency, which compelled the recognition of the then appalling fact that there could be such a thing as competition; and under the influence of this spur the Hudson River Railroad was constructed, and New-York was again supreme—at least for a time. But the old mood of complacency was never again so fully indulged, although to this day it prevails in a degree which has brought some evils and threatens with others.

During these halcyon days, while merchants were exclusively engaged in gathering gains, the Government of the City was given over almost wholly to politicians. The former were so well content with their gains that they rarely complained, even when the latter appropriated an immoderate share of those gains.

Other cities, less alert than Boston, at last concluded to follow her example and attempt to secure a share of the Western trade. Steam was the agent to equalize the advantages of contending and competing cities. The proximity of New-York to the ocean was, as an advantage, neutralized when steam-ships vexed the Delaware and the Chesapeake. The more difficult grade of the Alleghanies at the approaches to Philadelphia and Baltimore was to a large extent a question of fuel, and that was cheaper upon the lines of the roads encountering the heavier grades than upon the lines in this State, and so it has come to pass that the supreme advantages which New-York long enjoyed by a divine right or gift of nature, and in later years by artificial water-ways connecting the Hudson with the lakes, have ceased. Supremacy has yielded to equality, steam being the leveler.

That which costs most is prized most. The advantages which New-York enjoyed cost nothing. They were nature's endowment. The Erie Canal cannot be said to have cost the State anything, so ample were its revenues for more than a generation. Philadelphia and Baltimore, on the contrary, have bought their equality at a great price, and that equality they mean to maintain, and, if possible, acquire a degree of supremacy. In those cities there is no sentiment of complacency, it is all competition, rivalry, expectancy. This feeling pervades all classes, from the merchant to the laborer. They strip themselves of every impediment as for a race—a race in which they have gained great advantage, and in which they hope and mean to win.

While it is true that these cities have greatly gained, it is also true that New-York has not greatly lost. A vessel does not cease to move when the propelling force has ceased to act. An insolvent house of long standing enjoys credit after the line of solvency has been passed. A great city will maintain its trade by the mere force of momentum, long after adverse influences, hostile to its prosperity and destined to work its ruin, become active. But the momentum resulting from the spent energy of forces is a feeble dependence, and must be supported by new agencies, or the end must come. This does not yet truthfully portray the condition of New-York. It is not so bad as that. Still, a city of great resources, and of vast possibilities, her energies are at present hampered, and her future darkened by circumstances yet controllable. Samson is not wholly shorn, or quite blind.

In other letters I hope to point out some of those circumstances, and perhaps suggest some methods of controlling them.

ALBANY.

A WARM SESSION OF THE ASSEMBLY.

THE OBSTRUCTIONISTS OF THE HOUSE—A NEW SALARY BILL—OTHER BILLS INTRODUCED—BUSINESS IN THE SENATE—A NOMINATION FOR SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE WHICH LOOKS LIKE A POLITICAL BARGAIN.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1877.

The adjournment of the Assembly to-day cut off the most excited disturbance which has happened this session. There had been several warm little disputes during the morning, which had warmed up the members; but nothing very exciting happened until Mr. Langbein's bill to appoint a commission to revise and codify the laws relating to the District Courts came up for third reading. The little group to the left of the Speaker, composed of Messrs Grady, Purdy, and Spinola, to whom Mr. Peter Mitchell supplies the brains, bristled up ready to fight the bill the instant its title was read by the Clerk. Mr. Langbein asked unanimous consent to correct a clerical error in it. Mr. Spinola objected. Mr. Strahan got over that by a motion to recommit with instructions to amend and report at once. This being adopted, the bill in the same instant was reported back amended. The Clerk resumed the reading, but was interrupted by Mr. Purdy—who had just learned from Mr. Strahan's action how to move an amendment to a bill when on its third reading—with a proposition to amend by cutting down the Commissioner's compensation 50 per cent. This was voted down. Very soon he had another amendment to offer, which he stated from his place. The Speaker required him to send it up in writing, and to allow him the opportunity to do so, with a courtesy very ill required, laid the bill aside. When the Clerk took it up again it was 1:35. Mr. Purdy began to talk and had spoken five or ten minutes, when Mr. Grady asked him if he would yield the floor. Purdy did so, and Grady commenced to talk. It was seen in a instant that he was talking against time. Purdy wanted the floor back again to talk against time himself, (all these young statesmen have the talking mania in an acute degree,) but could not get it. At 1.55, amid much confusion in the House, Purdy asked Grady to yield a moment. He did so and sat down. Before the young Westchester "statesman" could gather himself together to speak, Mr. Strahan sprang to his feet, was recognized by the Speaker, and moved the previous question. The House had become thoroughly aroused. Mr. Strahan was flushed and trembling with nervous excitement when he offered, or rather shouted, his motion. Mitchell, Grady, Spinola, and Purdy were all on their feet at once. The Speaker ruled that Mr. Strahan had the floor. Grady declared that he had appealed from the decision. Strahan moved that the time of the session be extended. Mitchell made the point that it could not be done when the motion for the previous question was still before the House. Strahan withdrew that motion and renewed the one for the extension. Grady still was loudly declaring that he appealed from the decision of the Chair, and at the height of the confusion and noise the hour of 2 struck, and the Speaker declared the House adjourned. He descended from his chair hot and excited, and there was instantly a rush to him of a crowd of excited Republican members, with old Mr. Alvord at the head, who furiously declared that the Speaker should have rapped down this corner crowd, whether it was in or out of order; that this perpetual filibustering had gone far enough; that the House must protect itself at any cost, and other things of the same sort. Mr. Sloan listened quietly to it all, and said nothing. He is the presiding officer of the whole House, and not of any one section of it; and nothing can or will provoke him to do anything which is not in accordance with the rules governing the House. The effect of to-day's performance, however, will be to bind the Republican members together more firmly than ever, and to lessen the chances of any opposition being successful to their measures. So far as Mr. Langbein's bill is concerned, its passage is only delayed 24 hours.

The State Prison bill was reported from the Ways and Means Committee this morning, and was made the special order for to-morrow immediately after the reading of the journal. This is a most satisfactory indication of the speedy passage of the bill.

Mr. Nachtmann's resolution to print 3,000 copies of the Governor's Message in the German language was the subject of a lively debate this morning, and was finally voted down. Most of the Democrats supported Nachtmann, and Mr. Ecclesine delivered himself of a speech, in a strong German accent, on the subject.

Mr. Fish this morning introduced the following bill in relation to reduction of salaries:

SECTION 1. The officers and clerks referred to and embraced in this act are all those and their successors, elected or appointed, under any law providing for the local government of any city in this State, or amending any such law, or appointed or elected pursuant to any local law for any said city, except that this act shall not embrace the salary of any officer during that term of office, pending which his salary or allowance cannot, under the Constitution of this State, be reduced by a general law.

SEC. 2. Whenever, in or by any law aforesaid, the salary or compensation of any said officer or clerk is denied or fixed for or by the year, or any portion of a year, the said salary and compensation is hereby fixed and declared to be an annual sum, less by 10 per cent. in the amount thereof, respectively, than the sum or rate per year, or part of a year, that was paid or payable, to said officers or clerks, respectively, accordingly to law, in or for the year 1876, or any part thereof; which reduced rate shall, after this act goes into effect, be the salary and compensation to be come due and payable, instead of said prior salary and compensation; and no more than said reduced rates of compensation shall be paid until the same shall be otherwise fixed by competent authority.

SEC. 4. All acts and parts of acts, so far as inconsistent with this act, are hereby repealed. And any omission or refusal of any clerk or officers aforesaid to accept, receive, or receipt for, such reduced salary or rate of compensation, as being in full satisfaction for the services and claims of such officer or clerk, hereafter as such, shall be regarded and acted upon as a good cause for the removal or dismissal of such officer or clerk, by any officer, board or body having, for any cause, the right of removal or dismissal of the officer or clerk so omitting or refusing.

This bill has been drawn up to avoid the constitutional objections to a local bill having the same object. It is made to apply to all cities in the State. There will be a further hearing on the matter to-morrow before the Committee on Cities, when Mr. Rush Hawkins will speak, and then the bill will come into the House.

Bills are pending in the Assembly to reduce the interest on arrears of assessments in the City; also, to allow these assessments to be paid in annual instalments for five years; yesterday came a bill to reduce the interest on arrearages of taxes, and another to require the consent of one-half the property-owners for any improvement. To-day Mr. Ecclesine put in two bills, which he can scarcely hope to pass, but which are probably offered for local popularity. One bill provides that when any local improvement is in or along tion improved: and of making the City instead of the property-owners pay for the improvements.

Mr. Healy introduced a bill to amend the health laws. It provides that the business of night scavengers shall be carried on only between the hours of 9 at night and 5 in the morning in the Winter months, and between 10 and 4 in the Summer months. Night soil is to be removed in closed tanks or barrels direct from the vaults to the docks, and shall not be emptied in open carts in the streets. It shall be the duty of the Health Officer to grant permits to do scavenger work to all scavengers in the City of New-York who shall be duly licensed by the Mayor of the City, and shall carry on the business of night scavengers in accordance with the provisions of this act.

THE SENATE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. Woodin's bill relative to the office of Commissioner of Jurors, to-day, and, after making one or two amendments, ordered it to a third reading without a dissenting vote. Mr. Woodin said that he had examined the law with some care and was unable to find any act that limited the term of office of that official. Mr. Gerard was of the opinion that a proper construction of the charter of 1873 would fix the term of office for six years. To avoid all dispute on that point, and also the possible constitutional objection that the salary could not be reduced during the term of the present incumbent, Mr. Woodin offered as an amendment, which was adopted, that the term of office of the present Commissioner of Jurors expire three days after the passage of this act, and that the Mayor be authorized to fill the vacancy—the new appointee to hold the office until Jan. 1, 1880, and future appointees to hold for a term of four years. The other amendments to the bill were fixing the salary at $4,000, and allowing the Commissioner three clerks and one messenger, whose aggregate salaries shall not exceed $6,000 per annum.

Senator Morrissey offered a joint resolution, which was unanimously adopted, directing the Committees on Cities of the two houses to meet together and agree upon and report a single bill embodying, so far as is practicable, all the measures for reducing the expenses of the City Government of New-York embraced in the various bills that have been introduced in both houses. Mr. Morrissey thinks that unless this is done nothing will be accomplished in the way of reform for New-York this session; but that the multiplicity of bills will result, as most of them were doubtless intended, in defeating all legislation on the subject. If all the projects for reform can be embodied in a single bill, he thinks that every member will be compelled to face the music, and put himself squarely on the record for or against retrenchment.

The Senate had a long executive session to-day, which was occupied mostly in the discussion of rules and points of order. A rumor had obtained currency during the morning that Gov. Robinson was going to send in the name of John F. Smythe, the Albany Postmaster, for Superintendent of Insurance. This rumor, taken in connection with the fact that Mr. Smythe has just returned from Washington; that he is a zealous friend and champion of Roscoe Conkling, and that he had not before been talked of or thought of for this office, gave rise to various surmises and speculations. Some said it was a part of the Conkling bargain to aid Tilden in his scramble for the Presidency, in consideration of his friends being provided for. At all events the rumor turned out to be well founded, and was the cause of the long executive session. The standing rule of the Senate requires that all nominations of the Governor, before being acted upon, be sent to the standing committee having in charge the matters pertaining to the office to be filled. In this case, of course, it would be the Insurance Committee, which is composed of Senators Tobey, Prince, and Wagstaff. When Smythe's nomination was read, Senator Harris, of Albany, moved that he be confirmed. Senator Woodin moved to amend by referring the nomination to the Insurance Committee, as required by the rules. Discussion ensued as to the true meaning of the rule, which says that the nomination shall be sent to the standing committee having the subject matter in charge, "unless otherwise ordered." Mr. Woodin contended that these words meant "unless referred to some other committee," which was undoubtedly what was intended by the framers of the rule. Harris, on the contrary, maintained, with several of the Democratic Senators, that it meant "unless the Senate shall choose to confirm the nomination without a reference." Dorsheimer decided that the Democratic interpretation was correct, and an appeal was taken. Subsequently it was withdrawn, and a vote was taken on Woodin's amendment to refer the nomination to the Standing Committee of Insurance. It was carried—all the Republican Senators voting for it except Harris and Tobey, who voted with the Democrats. As this committee is constituted the nomination will, of course, be favorably reported, and one Republican vote, in addition to those of Harris and Tobey, will make a tie on the question of confirmation, leaving the decision with the Lieutenant Governor, who would, of course, vote to confirm. Everybody is surprised at the nomination, and curious to know the secret that led to it. Mr. Smythe has no special qualifications for the office, and is only known to the public as an active, and not very scrupulous, politician of the Conkling stripe. The nomination was evidently made in pursuance of a political bargain, without any reference to the qualifications of the nominee, and in this light it is not very creditable to Gov. Robinson. If it is to be taken as an indication of the motives and considerations that are to control his appointments in future, the public will have little reason to hope for anything better than they got from the bogus "Reformer" who preceded him. John F. Smythe came to Albany several years ago from Oneida County, where he was employed as book-keeper in the Clark Cotton Mills, eight miles from Utica. Since he has been in Albany his business, outside of politics, has been that of a brewer. He got the appointment of Postmaster here through Senator Conkling, and has undertaken to rule the party here in Conkling's interest ever since. All who know him say that, whatever merits he may have, he is not such a man as ought to be appointed Superintendent of Insurance at this time, and they are astonished that Gov. Robinson should have nominated him for the office.

Another name sent in to-day was Judge Sturgis, of Otsego, for Canal Appraiser. This is the same man who was sent in for the same office by Tilden last Winter. He was not confirmed then, and is not likely to be now, unless his renomination shall prove to be a part of the Conkling-Robinson-Tilden "bargain," which everybody is speculating about here.

All the principal committees were busy this afternoon. That on Commerce and Navigation had the various bills relating to wharfage and pilotage fees under consideration. The Judiciary Committee heard further argument from the Rochester and Buffalo men on the Pool-selling bill. The Ways and Means Committee finished the annual appropriation bill, and will report it to-morrow. It will, according to custom, be made a special order and will probably be disposed of early next week. The Supply bill will follow later. The Committee on Cities heard argument from Mr. Laugbein on his bill to amend the Excise laws, and afterward agreed, by a unanimous vote of the committee, to report favorably the New-York bill, which for convenience has been called the "Woodin Charter bill." Its provisions have been given at length in THE TIMES. The bill has the support of both Republicans and Democrats and should go through without trouble or delay. The members of this committee, of both parties, feel somewhat aggrieved at the charge that they are lazy or indolent in their work. For the past two weeks they have held sessions every morning before the House met; have gone from the committee-room into the House; have left the House at 2 o'clock, and have met at 3 and sat until past 6 each day. Besides this, many of the evenings have been spent in informal consultations. The Ways and Means, Cities, and Judiciary are necessarily the hardest-worked Committees in the House. More than two-thirds of all the bills introduced go to them.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 14.—Considerable excitement has been caused recently at Rising Sun, Ind., by the robbery of graves, and the citizens have made efforts to prevent such occurrences. Mayor Gillespie also sent two men to watch the grave, not knowing of the action of the girl's relatives. Each party mistook the other for "body-snatchers," and opened fire upon each other. THE NEW-JERSEY CENTRAL.

HON. FRANCIS S. LATHROP, RECEIVER

THE ALLEGATIONS MADE BY THE BILL FILED IN CHANCERY IN NEW-JERSEY YESTERDAY—ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL ON THE APPLICATION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER—THE POWERS CONFERRED UPON MR. LATHROP.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1877.

A large number of prominent lawyers and railroad men assembled in the Court of Chancery in this city this morning to take part in and listen to the arguments on the anticipated motion for the appointment of a Receiver for the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company. Chancellor Runyon had designated 9:30 o'clock as the hour at which he would commence the hearing, but he was delayed by other business, and it was considerably after 10 o'clock before he rapped his gavel and called the court to order. Almost immediately afterward Hon. Abram Browning arose in his seat with a voluminous document in his hand, and said that he had come to make application for the appointment of a Receiver. The bill, he said, was filed by the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, and set forth the insolvency of the Central Railroad Company. The bill showed enough to authorize immediate action in the premises. If the Chancellor decided to appoint a Receiver or Receivers, he suggested the names of ex-Chancellor Benjamin Williamson and Mr. President Knight, now the chief executive officer of the road. The main allegations of the bill submitted by Mr. Browning are as follows: That the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company is a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania; that the coal company is a creditor of the Central Railroad Company of New-Jersey, and that the bill is filed on behalf of itself and other creditors; that the Central Railroad Company leased the Lehigh Coal Company at a rental of one-third of the gross receipts from the traffic and business of the leased company, the Central also to pay the interest upon a debt of $2,310,000 semi-annually, to wit, on the 15th days of June and December; that the Central Railroad Company is indebted to the complainants in the sum of $234,000 for rent, $128,000 for tolls and revenues, $250,000 for promissory notes which become due on March 7, 1877, making in all the sum of $612,000, besides $2,310,000 purchase money of the rolling stock, all of which the Central Railroad Company have failed to pay. The bill further sets forth that the property of the Central Railroad is mortgaged to the amount of $25,000,000, the payment of interest thereon having been made with great difficulty; and that, besides the mortgage and the indebtedness to the plaintiff, the Central Railroad Company is indebted to the State of New-Jersey in the sum of $131,000 for taxes, and $300,000 to its employes for arrears of wages, creating in all a floating indebtedness of $30,000,000. The bill charges that the company is hopelessly insolvent, and prays for an injunction and the appointment of a Receiver.

Attorney General Vanatta, representing the interests of the Riparian Commissioners, to whom the Central Company owes $100,000, and of the State, asked that time be given that counsel might have an opportunity to prepare themselves properly, and in order that the court might not commit itself to an imprudent course of action. He protested with particular warmth against that feature of the proposed order for the appointment of a Receiver which authorized the Receiver to run the leased roads in Pennsylvania. The main road is, he said, 105 miles in length, and the aggregate distances of the branches nearly approximate that figure.

Ex-Chancellor Williamson interrupted Mr. Vanatta at this point to state that the road referred to, it is known to all conversant with the affairs of the company, is a source of large revenue to the Central. It will prove its salvation. "Why here," he said, "the Central have that magnificent line for one-third of its gross receipts. The books show that it is one of the most profitable of the road's connections. The connection with the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre road is what has drawn the Central down."

Mr. Vanatta, resuming, said that he was glad of the suggestion of Mr. Williamson. He, however, had doubt of the right of the Central Railroad Company, under its charter, to make the lease. He had not had time to examine the charter.

Chancellor Runyon here remarked that the bill made a prima facie case, showing the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company to be a creditor of the Central Road.

Mr. Vanatta said that the fundamental condition on which the company could apply for a Receivership was that the creditor is a lawful creditor. If it were a mere volunteer, though the Central Company were ever so insolvent, it could have no standing in court.

The Chancellor broke in again at this point with the statement that no order would be made as to the running of the leased road without due deliberation. One of the questions suggested to his mind was how far the court was bound to inquire whether the applying creditor is really a creditor. The court could not try the question now, in this preliminary sort of a way, as to whether the person claiming to be a creditor is really a creditor or not.

Mr. Vanatta rose to press his motion for time. It was now on the ground that the selection of a proper person for a Receiver was an important duty of the court. It was the more important in this State because of the extent to which the people of the State are pecuniarily interested in the road. There is hardly a family or means that does not count among its possessions some of the stock of the road, and in many instances it is almost their only poor dependence. If the court thought it necessary to proceed at once, the Attorney General desired to suggest a person suitable for the position. He trusted that the court would proceed upon certain fixed principles. In the first place he hoped that the court would not make a double or triple-headed Receivership, but would put the road under the control of one Receiver. That the court might have the Receiver always within its jurisdiction, the Attorney General suggested that no one be selected who is not a resident of the State of New-Jersey. In this view he suggested the name of Hon. Francis S. Lathrop, of Morris County, as that of a suitable person for the Receivership.

Hon. Clarkson N. Potter, of New-York, said that he appeared as the representative of $9,000,000 of the consolidated bonds, held in England. He had consulted with his clients by cable, and they had this morning instructed him to name a gentleman to the Chancellor. The English bond-holders would be unwilling to see any one connected with the administration of the company appointed; nor would it be wise, in his view, to appoint more than one Receiver.

Chancellor Runyon said that only one Receiver would be appointed, and he would be a resident of the State.

Mr. Potter suggested the name of Robert B. Potter, of Philadelphia, who was Receiver of the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad Company, and who wound up the affairs of the company with eminent success. Mr. Potter is not now a resident of the State, but counsel tendered assurances that if he were appointed to the position he would remove into it at once. If the court did not desire to appoint him, counsel suggested the name of Gen. John S. Schultze, present State Senator from Ocean County. Next after these two gentlemen his clients would probably prefer Hon. Francis S. Lathrop.

Mr. McCarter, counsel for the company, urged that prompt action be taken. The very discussion of the question as to the necessity of a Receiver and the best man for Receiver, only tended to hurt the interests of all concerned. In view of the fact that no charges of fraud or bad faith had been made, he thought that little, if any, weight on his to be given to the suggestion that the Receiver be not connected with the management of the company. In the case of the Erie Railroad Company, Mr. Jewett, the President, had been appointed Receiver of the road, and that appointment had been sanctioned by the ancillary action of the Chancellor himself.

Hon. Courtlandt Parker, who was associated with Mr. Potter in representing the English interest, replied that Mr. Jewett had been appointed at the instance of the same class of creditors whom he and Mr. Potter appeared for. He urged the appointment of Gen. Potter.

Messrs. Gibbon and Bullit, of Philadelphia, also added their testimony to the necessity of prompt and immediate action. The company was threatened with attachments in Pennsylvania, where it has debtors to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars. The effect of such attachments would be, they said, to pay the coal business of the road. Mr. Bullit said that he represented $2,500,000 of the stock, nearly one-half of the owners of which, with faith in the value of the stock, had become holders of it within the last three months. They asked that Mr. Knight be appointed, but expressed their satisfaction with Mr. Williamson.

After some delay the Chancellor said that he had concluded to appoint, first, a gentleman residing in this State, and always, therefore, in the jurisdiction of the court; and, secondly, he had decided, for considerations which were weighty with him, to go outside of the present management of the road for a Receiver. This conclusion was reached because of no personal objection against the present management, but a Receiver would avail himself naturally of whatever advice and assistance the present management can give him. The gentleman whom he had selected had no connection with the road. Then he named Hon. Francis S. Lathrop. Mr. Lathrop is a wealthy resident of Morris County, whose home is near Madison. He is very highly esteemed, and officiates in the Court of Errors and Appeals, the court of last resort in the State, as lay Judge. He was also one of the originators of the Morris Plains Lunatic Asylum, and is now one of the Commissioners, and is a member of the Riparian Commission. He is said, too, to be largely interested in the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western Railroad Company. Mr. Lathrop was in Trenton this afternoon in answer to a telegram summoning him here, but was not prepared at the time to file the $500,000 bonds which the order requires him to give. He will probably secure his sureties to-day, and will enter upon the discharge of his duties at once. Besides the usual process given to Receivers the order invests Mr. Lathrop, under the further special authority of the court to sell, convey, and assign all the real and personal estate, and pay into the Court of Chancery of New-Jersey all the moneys and securities for moneys arising from such sales and which he shall collect or receive by virtue of the authority vested in him, to be disposed of by him from time to time under the order and direction of the court among the creditors of the said defendant; and until the further order of the court to the contrary, he shall have full power and authority to run and operate the railroads of the said defendant, as well those situate, lying and being in this State as those connected therewith, and leased by said defendant or the said complainant, and situate, lying, and being in the State of Pennsylvania, and the ferry at Communipaw; and it is made his duty to preserve and protect the corporate franchises, privileges, and property, and the corporate existences of the Central and of the complainant as lessor and reversioner of the said railroads in the State of Pennsylvania.

REPORT OF THE EXAMINING COMMITTEE ON THE CONDITION OF THE ROAD.

The report of the committee appointed by the stockholders to examine the books of the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company will be presented at a meeting to be held to-day, and will be a very unfavorable showing. A member of the committee assured a TIMES reporter yesterday that nothing would be whitewashed, and a lively time is anticipated in consequence. A number of the stockholders are reported as in favor of consolidating with the Lehigh Navigation Company as the best means of escaping from their pressing embarrassments. It is proposed that preferred stock shall be issued to stockholders of the Lehigh Company in full for its capital, and that the common stock of the consolidated company shall be issued to the holders of the stock of both the other companies as well as holders of the floating debt of both. It is said that unless such a compromise will be effected foreclosure by bondholders, which would wipe out the entire property of both. It is argued that the earnings of the consolidated line would be ample to pay interest and dividends on the preferred stock.

A SUIT FOR DAMAGES.

Charles E. Hibbard has begun a suit in the Court of Common Pleas against the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company, which is a noteworthy case as being the first commenced in consequence of the accident which occurred on Oct. 24, 1876, at Evons, N. J., resulting from the displacement of a switch during the strike of the engineers of the road. Hibbard was injured in person, and claims $5,000 damages. The answer makes a denial of all negligence, and sets up that the accident was caused by the criminal acts of some person or persons, not in the company's employment, in opening the switch and setting the signal lights so as to indicate that the switch was correctly turned. The company claims it is not therefore liable.

THE NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

THE FINAL ADJOURNMENT RESOLUTION CALLED UP IN THE SENATE—UNINTERESTING SESSION OF BOTH HOUSES.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1877.

The business of the State in the two houses of Legislature was almost entirely devoid of interest to-day. The Senate was busy all the morning in the discussion of Ward's bill fixing the rate of interest at 6 per cent., and making a larger rate usury. Hobart succeeded in amending it so that it should not be applicable to existing contracts. Just before adjournment there was a little brush over the resolution fixing March 2 as the day for a final adjournment. The resolution passed the House some days ago, but when it reached the Senate it was put on the Speaker's desk, and has been there ever since. The Democrats have been afraid to touch it. A dim consciousness has pervaded them that the purpose of pressing the resolution for final adjournment was in some way connected with a presumed design to defeat an election in joint meeting. The resolution was called up in the Senate this morning, by a motion to take it from the table. The motion was adopted by the aid of Senators Madden and Bidgeway, two Democratic members. The Democrats accepted the vote as an indication that the resolution would itself pass if the Republicans succeeded in getting it before the Senate. A motion to adjourn was sprung and declared carried in the twinkling of an eye.

The House has had two sessions, but nothing of public interest was transacted. Mr. Brigham made an effort to call up Senator Abbett's Anti-Commission bill, but it failed by a tie vote.

OBITUARY.

M. AMEDIE PICHOT.

The death of M. Amedie Pichot, the French writer, is announced by cable from Paris. He was a native of Arles, born in 1796, studied at the College of Juilly, and afterward studied medicine at Montpelier and Paris. In the latter city he began the practice of medicine in 1819, but soon abandoned it for literature, the languages, and general science. He visited England and Scotland in 1822 and 1824, and returned to France with a mind stored with information respecting these countries, and more or less familiarized with their literature. In politics and in literature his sympathies tended toward the moderate-liberal school. In 1843 he succeeded M. L. Galibert as editor in chief of the Revue Britannique, in which position he remained up to the time of his death. Among the works that bear his name are various sketches of travel in England and Scotland; translations of English publications and essays, and sketches on historical and legendary subjects.

RUSSIA'S LINE OF ACTION—SIX MORE ARMY CORPS TO BE MOBILIZED—THE COMMENCEMENT OF WAR IMMINENT—DREADFUL STATE OF ONE OF THE TURKISH ARMIES.

BELGRAD, Feb. 14.—A decree has been issued convoking the Great Skupochtijna for Feb. 26.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—A dispatch from Vienna says the Servian Diplomatic Agent there has intimated that the Czar, on the 24th instant, will order the mobilization of six more Army corps. Russia has already decided upon her line of action.

A later telegram from Vienna says advices from St. Petersburg, Kisheneff and Berlin, indicate a decided tendency in the direction of war. It is asserted that the Czarewitch has declared that the commencement of war is imminent.

A Berlin correspondent says the Government is again considering the expediency of prohibiting the exportation of horses from Prussia.

An English physician with Mukhtar Pasha's Army, in Trebinje, writes to the Stafford House Charitable Committee reporting that the Army is in a dreadful state on account of the insufficiency of hospital accommodations, lack of medicines, &c., that between 20 and 30 soldiers are dying daily, and dysentery and typhoid fever have appeared and are spreading rapidly.

A dispatch from Belgrade says Servia's appeal for advice from Russia is still unanswered. The Russian Consul General declares that he is greatly embarrassed at the silence of his Government. It is surmised that the Servians have been abandoned by Russia as the price of Austrian acquiescence or co-operation in Russia's policy, because, if Servia is quieted, the great cause of restlessness among the Slavs in Hungary would be removed. It is probable that Russia will not adopt a similar course toward Montenegro, but will put her forward as the champion of the Turkish Christians. It is reported that Karageorgewitch's partisans are intriguing. Some demonstration is possible in the Skupochtijna.

A correspondent at Kisheneff gives a full account of the Russian mobilized army in a letter dated Feb. 9, which has been delayed in transmission. He states that the army at Kisheneff, which would first move against the Turks, numbers 120,000 infantry, 8,000 cavalry, and 428 guns. It would be immediately followed by two corps which are now at Odessa, making the total of the army of advance 180,000 infantry, 12,000 cavalry, and 720 guns. The correspondent continues: "As far as I can ascertain, everything is ready for the army to take the field at a moment's notice. A thousand horses have been bought for the tram. The bridge lying here is capable of passing the whole Army over the Danube in a day. There are also 13 enormous steam launches large enough to cross the Atlantic, two large barges, seven small boats, and masses of other things, showing that everything is looked after to the smallest detail. No difficulty has been experienced in obtaining horses. I am assured that, despite rumors to the contrary, mobilization has proceeded so satisfactorily that within a month four army corps could have crossed the Pruth."

A Vienna correspondent says: "It is stated here on trustworthy authority that the powers are disposed to leave England to give the keynote for a reply to Gortschakoff's circular."

THE LONDON STOCK MARKET.

DEPRESSING EFFECT OF THE WAR RUMORS.

LONDON, Feb. 14.—The Daily News in its financial article says: "The stock markets were drooping throughout the day yesterday, closing at the worst points touched. The cause of this was the unsatisfactory tenor of information from the East, and rumors that a rupture is imminent. Without specifying more particularly the exact nature of these rumors, it will suffice to say that a belief that highly unfavorable intelligence had been received in influential quarters was deemed sufficient to produce general weakness. A belief in commercial circles that war is inevitable between Russia and Turkey gains ground, and little desire is shown to extend commitments in the stock markets."

India Council bills were awarded to-day at about 1-16d. per rupee lower.

Silver closed to-day at 56⅜d. per ounce.

A JUDGMENT ADVERSE TO THE DIRECT CABLE COMPANY—QUEEN VICTORIA TO VISIT GERMANY—TERRIBLE COLLIERY EXPLOSION IN FRANCE—DOM PEDRO VISITS THE POPE—THE LIBERTY OF THE FRENCH PRESS.

LONDON, Feb. 14.—The Privy Council has delivered judgment adverse to the Direct United States Cable Company on an appeal from the decision of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland continuing the injunction against the Direct Cable Company's using the mainland of Newfoundland for the purposes of telegraphic communication or operating the section of cable moored in Conception Bay. The appeal was dismissed, with costs. As the Direct Company, in anticipation of this judgment, some time since removed their cable from Conception Bay, the decision above referred to does not now affect them in any way.

OHIO OPINIONS OF THE COUNT.

GOV. HAYES SERENE AND CONFIDENT—THE TRIBUNAL DENOUNCED BY A DEMOCRATIC NEWSPAPER—A POLICY OF DELAY URGED ON THE PARTY LEADERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 14.—Gov. Hayes, who, with his wife, has been in the city for two or three days, returned to Columbus this evening. He appears to be very little disturbed over the proceedings at Washington. He has a serene confidence in the result, and loses no sleep on account of the Presidency. In conversation to-day he remarked that he supposed the Democrats had it in their power, if they chose, to place obstacles in the way of the tribunal, and possibly prevent a decision, but he had no thought that they would do such a thing. They could not afford to place themselves in such an attitude before the country.

The Enquirer declares to-day, in a double-leaded editorial, that there is no hope for justice or fairness from the tribunal, and boldly advises the Democrats who hold seats in it to refrain from further participation. It urges the House to place every obstacle in its power in the way of the counting of the vote, and refuse to recognize Hayes as President after the Commission has proclaimed its findings. It calls upon Democrats everywhere to write and telegraph their Representatives to inaugurate a policy of delay and fight every step to the end. This remarkable advice is not acted upon with alacrity by the Democrats here, who cannot forget that two weeks ago the Enquirer was loud in its praises of the arbitration plan. The general feeling in the party is, that after the enthusiasm shown for the Commission in its early stages, they cannot repudiate its decision without making themselves appear ridiculous.

THE BOSTON ENGINEERS' STRIKE.

NO MATERIAL CHANGE IN THE SITUATION—THE STRIKERS BUYING OFF THE NEW MEN—FREIGHT TRAFFIC ON THE LINE ENTIRELY SUSPENDED—A WARNING TO OTHER ROADS FROM THE BROTHERHOOD

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Feb. 14.—The strike on the Boston and Maine Railroad continues. The managers of the road seem to find no difficulty in obtaining substitutes, but many of these are incompetent men and patrons of the road display much uneasiness, fearing trouble and disaster from the running of the engines by new men. No overt act has yet been committed by the strikers, but several of the engines run by the new men have been found to be unsafe, owing to the "frothing" of the water in the boilers, produced by soap, which has been found in large quantities in them. This is charged upon the strikers, but their leaders insist that they are ignorant of any such performance on the part of the men out. The road to-day had no better success than yesterday in running the trains. The freight traffic is at a complete standstill, and quantities of merchandise are accumulating along the line, interrupting business and causing serious difficulty. The few through trains which have been out from this city went through all right to-day, but the day train from Portland which usually starts at 9 did not get off till 1:10 this afternoon. The first engineer who was placed in charge of the engine on this train was bought off for $100, and the non-Brotherhood man who finally took it out reported to have refused $1,000 to desert his post. Other new engineers have been bought off, and the chief work of the leaders of the strikers at present seems to be directed toward this end, and their funds appear to be ample. Nothwithstanding the threats of last night, the officials of some of the other roads, particularly the Boston and Albany, the Old Colony, and the Baltimore and Ohio, furnished men to the Maine managers to-day, and an order has gone out from the Brotherhood to the several committees to notify the assisting managers of these roads that they must desist, or strikes along their lines will be ordered. At a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen to-day extra Police were appointed to serve at the station and along the line of the road within the city limits, and a special meeting of the stockholders of the road is proposed.

The chances of the ultimate success of the strike are daily growing more encouraging to the friends of the engineers. The patrons of the road are talking of getting up a petition to put its management into the hands of the State until a new management can be chosen. There is little sympathy with the corporation in its struggle, for there is a general belief that there has been good and sufficient cause for the opposition. The branch roads are nearly all crippled. A train sent out to Great Falls to run an engine there to-day was bought off before he had finished his first trip, and the traveling public must depend on carriages. At Dover the same thing was done, and the company cannot now depend on any of the new hands, as they do not know how long they will remain. The present condition of affairs cannot last more than a few days longer, for the people will not tolerate it. The Brotherhood of Engineers have offered to expel any man who will be found guilty of in any way interfering with the property of the corporation, and this puts them on a good standing with the community. The Lynn Crispins have sent them a series of resolutions of sympathy.

THE HOSTILE INDIANS OF DAKOTA.

CHEYENNE, Feb. 14.—Two Sioux Indians, "Charging Horse" and "Makes-them-stand-up," arrived at the Spotted Tail Agency on the 9th inst., having left the hostile camp Jan. 16. They report that Crazy Horse, with all the hostiles except the Uncapapas, is encamped on the Tongue River, near the mouth of Prairie Dog Creek; that Sitting Bull, with his band is on this side of the Yellowstone, marching to join them; that all desire to make peace on the best terms obtainable, and that they themselves are official couriers to notify Gen. Crook that such are the facts. The hostiles furthermore desire that Spotted Tail may visit them in person, and bring some tobacco in proof of the sincerity of the whites. They express a willingness to come in with Spotted Tail and acknowledge his authority. Spotted Tail himself places confidence in the truth of these statements, and has no doubt that he will be able to bring them all in. It is reported that there are great numbers of buffalo near the hostile camp, and that the country thereabouts is covered with deep snow, the crust of which will bear up a horse. Gen. Crook and staff arrived at Fort Laramie last night, where he will remain for the present.

YANKTON, Feb. 14.—A bill has passed both houses of the Legislature and will be approved by the Governor, giving the Black Hills a United States Court, and assigning an Associate Justice there as resident Judge, to take effect immediately on ratification by Congress of the agreement with the Sioux Indians ceding that country. Provision is also made for organizing counties there, giving them local courts and county officers. The Legislature has made a large appropriation for locating and improving three roads from the Black Hills to points on the Missouri River. All that now remains to furnish a large population there with all the facilities for local government, is the ratification of the agreement by the House of Representatives, the Senate having already approved it. The very mild weather of the month past has served to give impetus to emigration there, and trains are leaving here almost daily for the Hills. The Legislature has also changed the location of the United States Court in the Northern District from Fargo to Bismarck.

THE GOETHE CLUB.

LECTURE BY MR. JOHN ELDERKIN ON "GOETHE AS A TEACHER OF ART."

Mr. John Elderkin read a paper entitled "Goethe as a Teacher of Art," before the Goethe Club, at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, last evening. Dr. A. Ruppaner introduced the speaker. Mr. Elderkin, after referring to Goethe's influence upon the men and literature of his time, said that the reason why America still lacked the poetic and artistic taste which distinguished certain foreign nations was because of our superlative activity in business, social, and political fields of action. The widespread desire for wealth, the constant bustle of trade and politics, the jarring influence of the current literature of the day with its endless succession of new ideas and absorbing facts, were all opposed to the cultivation of the artistic faculty. In Goethe's day the newspaper was a petty and stale affair compared with the journal of the present, and yet he writes of it, "that it exercises anything but a stimulating effect upon art." The truth was that true art formed like crystals, in silence and in the dark. The action of the mind in its highest state was automatic. Goethe had said that the true formula of art was "the stilling of the soul." Repose was indispensable to its highest intellectual action, and no one realized this truth better than he. Schiller had called the artistic faculty "the play faculty," to distinguish it from the utilitarian or "work" faculty. It was one of the beauties of Goethe's character that he never suffered his art to be dwarfed by the supernatural. [Applause.] When in 1792 the Dumouries opened fire on Valmy, Goethe told the Germans that they now beheld the commencement of a new era in human history. The excesses of the French Revolution, however, so disgusted him that he refused his support to the new ideas, which were in effect but the legitimate fulfilment of his own. The enemies of Goethe had called him "Old Heathen" and "friend of the powers that be," but not all the cavilling of his critics could obliterate his great services to the cause of free thought and art. If Schiller wrote for the great principles of the Revolution, Goethe wrote for a renewed spirituality. It was too much the fashion for the American Philistine to sneer at the superiority of Europe in the realm of art, and to make up for our deficiencies by lauding the intensely practical spirit of our age and country. The lecturer, in conclusion, dwelt upon the present shortcomings of American art, and pointed out the directions in which improvement was most necessary.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14—P. M.

Speculation on the Stock Exchange to-day was irregular, with wide and frequent fluctuations in prices. The coal shares were in the main strong on covering of short contracts, while, on the contrary, investment stocks were generally weak and lower.

The entire transactions amounted to 191,079 shares, which embraced 67,275 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 34,720 Western Union, 24,800 Lake Shore, 15,180 Delaware and Hudson Canal, 14,575 New-Jersey Central, 7,864 New-York Central, 5,500 St. Paul, 4,546 Michigan Central, 3,250 Rock Island, and 3,050 Pacific Mail.

New-Jersey Central figured less conspicuously in the dealings than of late, and was comparatively steady, which was doubtless owing to the fact that the appointment of a Receiver to-day had been generally anticipated, and therefore discounted. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western declined at the opening from 66⅛ to 65¾, and, after rising to 66½, dropped to 65⅜. The stock later rose to 68, and finally sold at 67½. Delaware and Hudson Canal declined from 48 to 47½, rose to 49¾, declined to 47⅜, advanced to 51¼, and closed at 49¾@50. New-Jersey Central advanced from 14¼ to 15¾, but lost the improvement at the close. Morris and Essex closed at 85, the extreme prices having been 85¾ and 85 regular, and 84⅜ and 84 seller 30 days. Western Union ranged between 69⅞ and 70⅝, closing at 70¼. There were free offerings of the stock on seller's option, 60 days, at a concession of ¾ from the regular price, which, however, found few takers. New-York Central, in regard to which a variety of unfavorable rumors were in circulation, was heavy, and declined from 99¾ to 98, closing at a fractional recovery. Rock Island declined from 99⅞ to 99⅜, and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy from 114½ to 114. Lake Shore rose from 51¼ to 51⅞, dropped to 51, and closed at 51½. Michigan Central advanced from 44¾ to 45⅜, Illinois Central from 52¼ to 53, and C., C., C. and I. from 25½ to 27¼. The Northwest shares were weak at the opening, and declined from 32⅜ to 32 for the common, and from 51¾ to 51 for the preferred. The former closed at 32½ and the latter at 51¼. St. Paul common was neglected. The preferred ruled steady at 48@48¼. Harlem sold at 139¼. Pittsburg declined to 89¼. Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph advanced from 16⅞ to 17⅜ on sales of 1,100 shares. Express shares continue quiet and steady.

The supply of money seeking employment continues largely in excess of the demand, and the ruling rates for call loans remain at 3@3½ ℔ cent., with exceptional transactions at even lower figures. Discounts are unchanged. The national bank notes received at Washington for redemption to-day amounted to $700,000. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities: Savannah, ¼ premium; Charleston, easier, par to ¼ premium; St. Louis, ½ premium; Cincinnati, firm, buying par, selling 1-10 premium; New-Orleans, commercial, ⅛@3-16; bank, ¼; and Chicago, 6-10 premium.

The foreign advices reported British Consols and American securities steady and unchanged in prices at London. Consols for both money and the account closed at 95⅜@95¾. United States 1865s (old) at 105⅜, 1867s at 109⅞, new 5s at 107½, and 10-40s at 108⅛ ex coupon. Erie recovered the ½ ℔ cent. decline made yesterday, and closed at 8¼. New-York Central recorded a further decline of 1 ℔ cent., closing at 97. Bar silver was lower, and sold at 56¾d. ℔ ounce. At Amsterdam, Erie was quoted at 7⅛, and North-western preferred at 49¼. French Rentes improved 5c., closing at 105f. 95c. The Bank of England lost £15,000 to-day on balance.

The sterling exchange market was quiet at $4 84@$4 84¼ for banker's 60-day bills, and at $4 85@$4 85¼ for demand. The inquiry for bills was very light.

The gold speculation was entirely devoid of feature, the market having been extremely dull with all the sales at 105⅛ and 105⅜. The latter was the opening and closing quotation. On gold loans the rates ranged from 3 ℔ cent. interest for carrying to flat.

There was a firm undertone to the Government bond market and a good demand prevailed. Business was moderately large, the ease in money stimulating purchases for investment. In railroad mortgages the general list was steady, but in the New-Jersey Central issues some wide changes were noted. Firsts, new, ranged between 102½ and 103, closing at the former figure. Consolidated Firsts declined from 66 to 65, advanced to 67¼, and closed at 66⅛. Convertibles fell off from 60 to 59½, and Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Consolidated from 40 to 38¼, the latter closing at 38½. Chicago and North-western consolidated gold coupons declined to 89¾ and closed at 90. Milwaukee and St. Paul Consolidated Sinking Funds advanced to 84, Ohio and Mississippi Consolidated Sinking Funds to 88, do. consolidated to 87¾, do. Seconds to 51, Pittsburg Fourths to 95, and Hannibal and St. Joseph Convertibles to 86¾. In State bonds Missouri Long 6s rose to 106. Tennessees were steady at 42½, notwithstanding the announcement that the Governor of the State had approved the resolution of the Legislature postponing the payment of interest on the bonds. District Columbia 3.65s were firm at 72¾.

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ TO THE BONDHOLDERS OF THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

The agreement of 1st of October, 1876, having been signed by a majority of the first mortgage indebtedness and Tennessee sub-bondholders has become binding on the subscribers thereto.

Any plan of reorganization predicated upon obtaining the consent of the majority of the first mortgage indebtedness holders has now become impracticable, and it is therefore the interest of the yet outstanding bondholders to be a party which will have the best chance to purchase the road whenever a decree for its sale will have been obtained.

We hereby give notice that bonds can be deposited under this agreement on the 1st March next; all bondholders who have not acceded to it by that time will, at the discretion of the committee and without further notice, be liable to be debarred from participating in it.

BANK ROBBERS ARRESTED.

THE NORTHAMPTON BANK ROBBERY.

GOOD WORK BY PINKERTON'S DETECTIVES —THE RESULT OF PATIENT WATCHING —THREE OF THE SUPPOSED BURGLARS ARRESTED—TWO OF THEM IN PHILADELPHIA AND ONE IN THIS CITY.

Three men, who it is alleged were engaged in the robbery of the Northampton National Bank, are now in custody, one in this City and two in Philadelphia. The circumstances of this great robbery must be still fresh in the public mind. The people of the little town of Northampton, Mass., were greatly excited over the startling occurrance, and the news of the burglary flashed over the telegraphic wires to all parts of the country, with an offer of $25,000 reward for the capture of the burglars, was read with absorbing interest. The details of the robbery, in brief, are as follows: On the night of Jan. 26, 1876, the residence of Mr. John Whittlesey, Cashier of the bank, was entered by seven masked men, and the first intimation he had of their presence in the house was the appearance of five of them at his bedside. His family, six in number, and himself were gagged. The former were left securely bound and guarded in the house, and he was forced to accompany the robbers to the bank under a threat of instant death if he refused. When the party arrived there the unfortunate Cashier was compelled to tell what he knew of the secret combination of the lock of the safe. Four men were intrusted with the secret combination used in locking the safe, each having one part of it, and it required, on previous occasions, the presence of the four to open it. The possessors of the secret combination were the Cashier, Teller, President, and a Director. As the Cashier could only give one part of the combination, the manner in which the other three parts were obtained is still enshrouded in mystery. The total amount stolen from the bank was $720,000. This sum consisted of Missouri State bonds; Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad shares; Lake Shore and Michigan Southern; Chicago, Burlington and Quincy eights; Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati; Union Pacific; Ohio and Mississippi second mortgages; United States bonds; Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fé; Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw; Ogdenburg and Lake Champlain; Missouri Pacific; registered stock and bonds of the United States and various corporations; Detroit, Lansing and Lake Michigan stock, and greenbacks and national bank bills to the amount of $10,000. Of the $720,000 carried away by the robbers, the bank lost $12,000. The heavy losers among depositors were ex-Judge C. E. Forbes, who lost $128,000 in United States bonds, and $70,000 in railroad stocks; Henry Hinckley, who lost $60,000 in United States bonds, and J. S. Lathrop, who lost $30,000 in Georgia bonds. Other depositors suffered in amounts ranging from $3,000 to $20,000.

After the robbery the burglars were supposed to have fled to this City, but it was believed by the bank officers that they had concealed a great part of the securities and bonds stolen in Northampton. Pinkerton's detectives were set to work, and have been on the trail of the burglars with the persistency of sleuth hounds. Mr. Robert A. Pinkerton yesterday said that his agency had known for five months past who the robbers were and where to find some of them at any moment. The reason that no arrests had been made before was because certain lawyers in this City had been trying to compromise cases of bank robberies, and that depositors in the Northampton bank were anxious to negotiate for the recovery of a part of their lost money. The first man arrested, around whom the Pinkertons had fastened a chain of circumstantial evidence sufficient, in their minds, to clearly establish his complicity in the bank robbery, was a man known as "Jim" Dunlap; the second was "Bob" Scott, alias "Hustling Bob," and the third was William Connors, known in this City as a gambler and "go-between" for the "upper class" of thieves. Dunlap and Scott left the City on Tuesday last on an early morning train for Philadelphia. They bought tickets for Richmond, Va., in Philadelphia, and were arrested by detectives of Pinkerton's branch office in Philadelphia, while preparing to go South, as was supposed, to commit a robbery. The two men were lodged in jail, and now await a requisition from the Governor of Massachusetts for their conveyance to that State to stand trial. Yesterday morning Mr. Pinkerton, with the assistance of Detectives O'Connor and Field, of the District Attorney's office, arrested Connor, whom they had been tracking since Sunday last. The detectives traced the burglar to his house in this City, only to find that he had changed to other quarters, and, after patiently watching, succeeded in ingovering him at Solari's restaurant, on University place, where he had engaged board for himself and his wife at the high figure of $100 per week. He was lodged in the Fourteenth Precinct Station-house until 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when he was taken before the presiding magistrate at the Tombs Court, and, although living sumptuously at Solari's, had in his possession, when arrested, only a small sum of money, with some burglar's tools.

Connor was arraigned before Justice Kilbreth at 3 o'clock P. M., and on the sworn complaint of Robert A. Pinkerton, was committed to await a requisition for his body from the Governor of Massachusetts. The complaint of Mr. Pinkerton set forth that the prisoner was believed to be one of the Northampton burglars, and prayed that "he be detained until the arrival of the necessary papers on the requisition from Massachusetts." The prisoner asked to be allowed an interview with his counsel, Mr. Blankman, of the firm of Blankman Brothers, of Broadway, which request the Justice granted. Connor is a man of medium height, thick set, and gives evidence of the possession of considerable physical strength. His eyes and hair are dark, and he wears a heavy mustache. He was neatly dressed in dark clothing, carried a new silk hat of the latest fashion in his hand, and during the short proceedings in the court was perfectly self-possessed. In a brief conversation with a reporter of THE TIMES, he said that he was innocent of the charge preferred against him and would be able to prove an alibi. In regard to his occupation, he said, with a smile, that he was what might be termed a "sporting man."

"Jim" Dunlap, one of the two men arrested in Philadelphia by Superintendent Franklin, of the Pinkerton Agency, was originally a resident of St. Louis, Mo. He went, Mr. R. A. Pinkerton said yesterday, from St. Louis to Chicago, previous to the great fire, and there met with a notorious burglar named "Johnny" Berry, who taught him the business of blowing open safes. About this time "Bob" Scott, who had been released from Joliet State Prison, while he had been confined for burglary, became acquainted with the two, and the trio came to this City about six years ago. The first work that Dunlap was engaged in was the robbery of the First National Bank of Elmira, for which Berry is now, under the name of John Myers, serving a term of five years in the State Prison at Auburn. Other robberies followed, among them that of the Fall City Tobacco Bank of Louisville, from which about $300,000 were stolen on the night of March 8 or 9, 1873; that of the First National Bank of Quincy, Ill., Feb. 12, 1874, from which $80,000 in currency, and a large amount of securities were taken; that of the First National Bank of Pittston, Penn., which was robbed of a large sum, and finally the Northampton bank robbery.

Mr. Pinkerton says that he has proof enough to convict the three men now in jail, and is on the track of others concerned in the burglary. The way he obtained a clue which led to the arrest of the three men was by watching the parties who were endeavoring to make a compromise with losers by the bank robberies.

MRS. SPARR AND HER LODGER.

Mrs. Mary Sparr, of No. 189 Second avenue, the woman whose singular experiences with her lodger, Major Corliss, have been already published in THE TIMES, called on Superintendent Walling yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Capt. McCullagh and Patrolman Butterly, of the Seventeenth Precinct. Mrs. Sparr informed Mr. Walling that from an unfinished letter found by her in the rooms lately occupied by the Major, and from fragments of other epistles scattered about, she believed that he had been engaged in dishonorable practices. Mrs. Sparr had, however, no evidence to sustain her allegations, and the Superintendent therefore directed her to consult the District Attorney and procure the indictment of Major Corliss by the Grand Jury. Mrs. Sparr left the Central office, and said that she would take that course. Capt. McCullagh will also make a complaint against the Major for firing his pistol through the door when he attempted to enter the apartments.

THE CHARGES AGAINST CAPT. HEDDEN.

Capt. Hedden, of the Thirty-third Precinct, who was to have been tried yesterday for conduct unbecoming an officer, in borrowing money from patrolmen under his command, and in some instances failing to repay the loans, submitted his case, and by permission of the board presented an affidavit in answer to the charges. In his sworn statement the Captain admitted the truth of several specifications in which he was charged with having borrowed money from several patrolmen, but other specifications he denied, claiming that he had not borrowed money from the officers named therein, but from third parties, and was not aware that the money came from the policemen. All these sums had been repaid since the charges were preferred. The decision of the board was reserved.

THE KINZEY ABANDONMENT CASE.

MR. KINZEY RELATES HIS SIDE OF THE STORY —ALLEGATIONS AGAINST THE MORAL CHARACTER OF HIS WIFE PREVIOUS TO HER LAST MARRIAGE.

The report in yesterday's TIMES of the proceedings at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court in the suit of Mrs. Adelaide Kinzey against Mr. William Kinzey, for abandonment, was necessarily ex parte, for the reason that Mr. Kinzey was not represented by counsel who could state his side of the case to Justice Bixby. Mr. Kinzey made the following statement to a TIMES reporter yesterday afternoon: "I was introduced to the lady who now calls herself Mrs. Kinzey by a friend, who called her Miss Adelaide Kliem. I then took her into my employ, where she remained about 15 months. A short time after she came to my store she gave into my keeping the sum of $1,600. Her counsel now says that sum was her accumulated savings of years of labor. How many years of labor it represented I do not know, but I am certain the sum did not represent her savings. It was bequeathed to her by a Southerner named Hale, with whom she lived, as his mistress, for several years, in this City, in Canada, and elsewhere. This man Hale died just before I met Adelaide. I only had the full sum of $1,600 in my possession for several days, for, at the end of that period, she drew $500 to give her brother, Frederick Kliem, who then went into the produce business. Afterward she drew various sums for the purchase of articles she desired. About Jan. 1, 1871, Adelaide withdrew from her position in my store, and on Feb. 21, 1871, I married her. I had previously learned that she had been married before and was the mother of two children, a boy and a girl. She told me that her husband had abandoned her, and that she had procured a divorce from him. It was several months later when I discovered that she had only received papers of separation, and that these were issued by Judge Cardozo on April 5, 1871, six weeks after the date of our marriage. I discovered that my wife and I would not agree within a short time after our union; only a month after the ceremony she revealed her temper, and I told her that if she continued to act so we would not live together a year. She then told me, and repeated the expression at other times, she could 'live with my betters.' After our marriage I paid the board of her son by her first husband, a youth of 15, and clothed him. I also procured him a situation with a friend of mine in business down town. The youth became fast, however. He was detected in stealing from his employer to support a woman in Hoboken. I settled the affair quietly, and then told the boy he must in the future look out for himself, as I would have nothing to do with him. Some time after my marriage I heard that a friend of mine had been criminally intimate with Adelaide while she was known as Miss Kliem; I questioned him, but he denied the truth of the rumor I had heard. Soon afterward, however, its truth was confirmed by Adelaide herself; while in a delirium caused by indulgence in morphine and other stimulants, she reproached me for having attended a dinner party given by my friend; I asked her if he was less respectable than before our marriage, and her reply was a disgusting proof of her unchastity. Since I have been finally separated from Adelaide, my friend has told me what he knows about her, and says he is willing to testify to the facts in court. The counsel of Mrs. Kinzey, and her freaks while under the influence of morphine or liquor, caused me to leave her three times previous to last August, when our final separation took place. Last Summer I took her to Long Branch. On Aug. 13, while we were dining in the Ocean House, she became angered and struck me with considerable force. I then left her. I had no desire, however, to leave her without support. Although possessed of the knowledge that she was merely an adventuress, I was willing to aid her to live. I sent her $20 a week, and have now receipts which show she received about $600 from me before her annoyances determined me to cease all communications with her and to have our marriage set aside by the Supreme Court. I then set about learning the whereabouts of her first husband. From his family in Rahway, N. J., I learned that her story about him being compelled to abscond from this City was untrue. I also discovered that he was living in Boston, and kept up a correspondence with his relatives. She could at any time have learned where he was. His family would have told her, though they refused to otherwise recognize her, and also kept her daughter from communication with her. The statement made on her behalf by her counsel were, of course, false, but I do not mean to imply that Mr. Townsend knew what he said was untrue. I felt annoyed at being taken to a Police Court, and expressed my feeling without intending to show any disrespect for Justice Bixby. There was no necessity to take me to such a place. My counsel, Mr. Butler, informed Mr. Townsend I was willing to pay Mrs. Kinzey $20 per week pending a suit to set aside our marriage, on condition she would cease to annoy me. Mr. Townsend, however, did not respond to Mr. Butler's courteous communication, and I was arrested and had to appear in court without counsel. Since leaving Mrs. Kinzey many persons have informed me of her bad character, and only the other day a lady said to me: 'I am surprised you married Addie Kliem. Why, I knew she was fast even in her youth.'"

TURFMEN'S TROUBLES.

CASES HEARD AND DECISIONS RENDERED BY THE BOARD OF APPEALS OF THE NATIONAL TROTTING ASSOCIATION.

Several appeals were heard by the Board of Appeals of the National Trotting Association which held a session at the New-York Hotel yesterday. Alden Goldsmith appealed to the board for relief from a suspension for the non-payment of $200 entrance money to the Washington Driving Park Association, for the entrance of the gelding Oscar in the 2:35 race, and of the gelding Driver in the 2:30 race at the last October meeting of the association in Washington, D. C. The start of the horses was not effected, and Mr. Goldsmith claims he was not able to obtain definite information as to whether the purses for the races had filled. The case was referred to the board in executive session. A similar disposition was made of the case of S. J. Hollings against M. Williams & Son, of the Brooklyn Driving Park. J. Wenzel, of Springfield, Mass., entered a claim for the first money offered in a race at the Brooklyn Driving Park last Summer. Wenzel's horse took second place, the first place being won by the mare Rachel. Mr. Wenzel claimed that the latter was formerly known as Maggie S. This was denied, however, it being claimed that Maggie S. is a valuable mare and that Rachel is a poor one. A committee was appointed, and visited Newark, N. J., yesterday afternoon. Both animals are at that place, and the committee reported that there is a great deal of difference between their appearance. Rachel looking like a truck horse and the other being a "cleanly-cut" trotter. The animals are owned by half brothers named De Camp. The consideration of the case will be resumed to-day. Several cases were preferred against the Prospect Park Fair Ground Association, among them being one by Dan. Mace and Ben. Mace, who were suspended for not paying entrance fees for their horses, Crown Prince and Nellie Walton, in two races at Prospect Park, in June, 1875. They claimed the entries were made conditionally, the fees to be paid only in the races in which the horses started. As they did not start the horses they did not think they ought to pay the entrance money, and they were suspended for such non-payment.

The board rendered decisions in the following cases in executive session, Tuesday evening: In the case of J. H. Weible, of Tidioute, Penn., against the Pittsburg Driving Park, John A. McKee, proprietor, for the suspension of C. G. Coltman, and the horse Hardware. The board reinstated them, but at the same time approved of the action of the association in suspending them. Thomas Johnson, who petitioned for reinstatement and removal of the order of expulsion, was reinstated on probation for the year 1877. In the case of the Goshen Driving Park against William Killmer, as it appeared from the evidence that the bay gelding Cream had had his name changed to Trout and from Trout to Nightshade without due notice to the association, the board imposed a fine of $200 upon the delinquent owner for violation of the rules, and ordered that he stand committed until it was paid. It also imposed a fine of $25 upon William Killmer for driving the horse when he knew that its name had been changed.

BLOOMING GROVE PARK ASSOCIATION.

The annual dinner and ladies' reception of the Blooming Grove Park Association took place on Tuesday evening at the Hoffman House. It proved a very pleasant affair, being devoid of formalities, and partaking of the nature of a home party. The ladies present were attired in charming costumes. About 100 ladies and gentlemen sat down to the banquet, the menu comprising numerous tempting dishes. When the tables were cleared, Col. S. S. Bruce, Vice President of the Association, who presided, made a pithy address, saying that the 12,000 acres of woodland owned by the Blooming Grove Park Association are now better stocked with game than ever before, having entirely escaped the forest fires of last year which drove the wild animals, &c., out of other coverts. He alluded to the improvements about to be made by the association near its club-house in the Pennsylvania woods, and having said that a rifle range would be opened there next Summer, called on Judge Henry A. Gildersleeve to respond to the toast, "The American Team." Judge Gildersleeve made a pleasant speech, during which he rambled over the fields of law and of rifle-shooting. Dr. Bradley spoke for some time, wittily playing upon the names of his hearers. Mr. John N. Pattison, the pianist, then played in a brilliant manner a "Polka de Corsair," his own composition. Dancing was afterward indulged in for several hours.

INSURANCE DISCLOSURES.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE COMPANY.

THE TESTIMONY TAKEN YESTERDAY BEFORE THE REFEREE—THE DEATH CLAIMS AGAINST THE COMPANY—HOW THE MONEY IS SAID TO HAVE BEEN DIVIDED BETWEEN LUTHER W. FROST AND OTHERS—SERIOUS CHARGES AGAINST S. M. HAMMOND.

The hearing before Mr. William Allen Butler, the Referee in the matter of the Continental Life Insurance Company, which was resumed yesterday at No. 20 Nassau street, elicited some important testimony relating to the Western transactions of the company. The first witness called was Mr. Marvin E. Parrott, the Claim Agent of the company, who testified that on Oct. 25, 1876, the death claims against the institution were as follows:

Approved by the committee and past due, loans and deferred premiums deducted.	$48,325 07
Approved by the committee and not due, loans and deferred premiums deducted.	37,016 89
Claims filed (proofs furnished) but not acted on by committee, loans and deferred premiums deducted	23,828 82
Notices of death received, policies in force, no proofs yet received, presumably valid claims, no deductions	35,098 00
Claims disputed, proofs of death having been furnished	222,308 00
Notices of death received in which no proofs have been furnished, policies having lapsed	68,484 00
Total claims	$435,060 75

Mr. Parrott said that there were about 38 suits pending in relation to these claims; witness knew Mr. Hammond, but had no knowledge of the contracts between that gentleman and the company except what had been told him; Mr. Hammond did not say to him that he [Mr. Hammond] had paid only $3,000 to the officers of the Southern Life Insurance Company for reinsuring the risks of the Continental, and had divided the rest between himself and Mr. Frost; what he did say was that the entire amount was sent there, and that some of the Directors were sharper than the officers; he also stated that he had been told here that the officers of the Continental Company, or some one of them, had written to the officials of the Southern Life Company after it failed, and suggested that they should send back a portion of the money that had been paid to them, and they returned an answer that they had only received about $3,000 of the whole amount.

The next witness was Mr. Henry S. Metzger, of Chicago, Ill., who was associated with Mr. Charles H. Frost in the management of the North-western Department of the Continental; he had been with Mr. Frost about six years; the territory included in this department included Illinois, Nebraska, Iowa, and Minnesota; witness last saw Mr. Hammond on Saturday, at the office of the New-York Life Insurance Company, when he informed him that he had seen Mr. L. W. Frost on the night previous; he had several conversations with Mr. Hammond at the Metropolitan Hotel in Omaha in relation to the business then being carried on in California and elsewhere, that of purchasing the policies; witness was aware of the fact that drafts had been drawn upon the company by Mr. Hammond for larger amounts than they should have been; he related a case in point, where the policy of a man had been purchased for $45, for which amount the policy-holder signed a blank draft; Mr. Hammond filled it in for $60 and offered witness $7 50 as his share, which he refused to take; at another time Mr. Hammond had a case to court. The case of Mrs. Kinzey, and her freaks while under the influence of morphine or liquor, caused me to leave her three times previous to last August, when our final separation took place. Last Summer I took her to Long Branch. On Aug. 13, while we were dining in the Ocean House, she became angered and struck me with considerable force. I then left her. I had no desire, however, to leave her without support. Although possessed of the knowledge that she was merely an adventuress, I was willing to aid her to live. I sent her $20 a week, and have now receipts which show she received about $600 from me before her annoyances determined me to cease all communications with her and to have our marriage set aside by the Supreme Court. I then set about learning the whereabouts of her first husband. From his family in Rahway, N. J., I learned that her story about him being compelled to abscond from this City was untrue. I also discovered that he was living in Boston, and kept up a correspondence with his relatives. She could at any time have learned where he was. His family would have told her, though they refused to otherwise recognize her, and also kept her daughter from communication with her. The statement made on her behalf by her counsel were, of course, false, but I do not mean to imply that Mr. Townsend knew what he said was untrue. I felt annoyed at being taken to a Police Court, and expressed my feeling without intending to show any disrespect for Justice Bixby. There was no necessity to take me to such a place. My counsel, Mr. Butler, informed Mr. Townsend I was willing to pay Mrs. Kinzey $20 per week pending a suit to set aside our marriage, on condition she would cease to annoy me. Mr. Townsend, however, did not respond to Mr. Butler's courteous communication, and I was arrested and had to appear in court without counsel. Since leaving Mrs. Kinzey many persons have informed me of her bad character, and only the other day a lady said to me: 'I am surprised you married Addie Kliem. Why, I knew she was fast even in her youth.'"

TURFMEN'S TROUBLES.

CASES HEARD AND DECISIONS RENDERED BY THE BOARD OF APPEALS OF THE NATIONAL TROTTING ASSOCIATION.

Several appeals were heard by the Board of Appeals of the National Trotting Association which held a session at the New-York Hotel yesterday. Alden Goldsmith appealed to the board for relief from a suspension for the non-payment of $200 entrance money to the Washington Driving Park Association, for the entrance of the gelding Oscar in the 2:35 race, and of the gelding Driver in the 2:30 race at the last October meeting of the association in Washington, D. C. The start of the horses was not effected, and Mr. Goldsmith claims he was not able to obtain definite information as to whether the purses for the races had filled. The case was referred to the board in executive session. A similar disposition was made of the case of S. J. Hollings against M. Williams & Son, of the Brooklyn Driving Park. J. Wenzel, of Springfield, Mass., entered a claim for the first money offered in a race at the Brooklyn Driving Park last Summer. Wenzel's horse took second place, the first place being won by the mare Rachel. Mr. Wenzel claimed that the latter was formerly known as Maggie S. This was denied, however, it being claimed that Maggie S. is a valuable mare and that Rachel is a poor one. A committee was appointed, and visited Newark, N. J., yesterday afternoon. Both animals are at that place, and the committee reported that there is a great deal of difference between their appearance. Rachel looking like a truck horse and the other being a "cleanly-cut" trotter. The animals are owned by half brothers named De Camp. The consideration of the case will be resumed to-day. Several cases were preferred against the Prospect Park Fair Ground Association, among them being one by Dan. Mace and Ben. Mace, who were suspended for not paying entrance fees for their horses, Crown Prince and Nellie Walton, in two races at Prospect Park, in June, 1875. They claimed the entries were made conditionally, the fees to be paid only in the races in which the horses started. As they did not start the horses they did not think they ought to pay the entrance money, and they were suspended for such non-payment.

The board rendered decisions in the following cases in executive session, Tuesday evening: In the case of J. H. Weible, of Tidioute, Penn., against the Pittsburg Driving Park, John A. McKee, proprietor, for the suspension of C. G. Coltman, and the horse Hardware. The board reinstated them, but at the same time approved of the action of the association in suspending them. Thomas Johnson, who petitioned for reinstatement and removal of the order of expulsion, was reinstated on probation for the year 1877. In the case of the Goshen Driving Park against William Killmer, as it appeared from the evidence that the bay gelding Cream had had his name changed to Trout and from Trout to Nightshade without due notice to the association, the board imposed a fine of $200 upon the delinquent owner for violation of the rules, and ordered that he stand committed until it was paid. It also imposed a fine of $25 upon William Killmer for driving the horse when he knew that its name had been changed.

BLOOMING GROVE PARK ASSOCIATION.

The annual dinner and ladies' reception of the Blooming Grove Park Association took place on Tuesday evening at the Hoffman House. It proved a very pleasant affair, being devoid of formalities, and partaking of the nature of a home party. The ladies present were attired in charming costumes. About 100 ladies and gentlemen sat down to the banquet, the menu comprising numerous tempting dishes. When the tables were cleared, Col. S. S. Bruce, Vice President of the Association, who presided, made a pithy address, saying that the 12,000 acres of woodland owned by the Blooming Grove Park Association are now better stocked with game than ever before, having entirely escaped the forest fires of last year which drove the wild animals, &c., out of other coverts. He alluded to the improvements about to be made by the association near its club-house in the Pennsylvania woods, and having said that a rifle range would be opened there next Summer, called on Judge Henry A. Gildersleeve to respond to the toast, "The American Team." Judge Gildersleeve made a pleasant speech, during which he rambled over the fields of law and of rifle-shooting. Dr. Bradley spoke for some time, wittily playing upon the names of his hearers. Mr. John N. Pattison, the pianist, then played in a brilliant manner a "Polka de Corsair," his own composition. Dancing was afterward indulged in for several hours.

CONTRACTS TO BUILD NEW STEAMERS.

In addition to the two new steamers for James E. Ward & Co., described in THE TIMES the other day, John Roach & Son have contracts on hand for building five other steamers—one for Alexandre's Havana Line, of 3,000 tons burden, two for the Savannah Line, (Georgia Railroad Company,) of 2,200 tons each, one for Mallory & Co.'s Texas Line of 1,400 tons, and a small steamer for the Panama Railway Company. They are all to be of iron, and are to be constructed in the best manner, with every improvement. They will have accommodations for from 60 to 100 first-class passengers each. All are to be furnished with compound engines. They will be launched at periods during the coming Summer from June to October—Ward's two first, then Mallory's, the Savannah Line's, Alexandre's, and the Panama Railway's in the order named. The Messrs. Roach have recently finished an additional steamer for Mallory & Co. which has been christened the Rio Grande. They say that it is a long time since they have had so much business on hand, and they augur from this a decided revival of trade in the near future.

THE MARDI GRAS UNLAWFUL.

THE PROPOSED MASKED PROCESSION CONTRARY TO LAW AND NOT, TO BE PERMITTED.

The attention of Superintendent Walling having been called to the efforts which are being made by Col. St. Martyn and others to organize a masked street procession in April next in imitation of the practice prevalent in some of the Southern States, that official stated yesterday that such a procession was in opposition to law and would not be permitted. Chapter 20, title 2, of the Revised Statutes of the State of New-York reads as follows:

SECTION 5. Every person who, having his face painted, discolored, covered, or concealed, or being otherwise disfigured in a manner calculated to prevent him from being identified, shall appear in any road or public highway, or any field, lot, wood, or inclosure, may be pursued and arrested in the manner hereinafter provided, and upon being brought before any Judge or any other officer hereinafter designated, of the same county where he shall be arrested, and not giving a good account of himself, shall be deemed a vagrant within the provisions of the second title of chapter 20 of the first part of the Revised Statutes, and on conviction, as provided in said title, shall be committed to and imprisoned in the county jail of the county where such person shall be found for a period not exceeding six months.

Section 6 makes it the duty of all officers of the peace (which of course includes the Police force,) to arrest all such offenders, if the offense is committed within their view, without warrant. Section 7 provides that officers of the peace can call to their aid any citizens who may be in the vicinity at the time, and the succeeding section makes it a misdemeanor to refuse or neglect to assist an officer when called upon. Section 9 holds that it is the duty of any magistrate who learns of such congregation of such disguised persons to issue process for their arrest. Section 10 makes it a misdemeanor punishable with not more than one year of imprisonment for three or more persons so disguised to congregate in any public house. Mr. Charles F. MacLean, counsel of the Board of Police, was also consulted in relation to the proposed celebration, and after reading the statute referred to above gave it as his opinion that such a gathering as contemplated by those having charge of the proposed celebration would be illegal, and the Police Commissioners cannot grant permission for the passage through the public streets of a masked procession. It was under this law that the late John A. Kennedy, when Superintendent of Police, some years ago caused the arrest of a number of highly-respectable young men and women of the Jewish faith, who, while celebrating the Purim Festival, passed through the streets in fancy costumes and masked. This law was also enforced on last Thanksgiving Day, when several companies of fantasticals, marching through the streets with their faces painted, or covered with masks, were broken up by the police, and their members lodged in the Station-houses.

A DOUBLE EXECUTION TO-DAY.

Last night the gallows on which Oschwald and Ryan, the murderers of Officer Brock, are to be executed to-day, was erected in the Newark Jail, only 20 feet from where the condemned men were confined. It is the same instrument of death on which George Botts suffered for the murder of Pet Halstead. A new cross-beam has been substituted and holes made for two drop-ropes, so that both men can be hanged at the same time. The weights on the end of the rope weigh 930 pounds, sufficient to break the necks of both culprits. At noon yesterday Oschwald informed Special Officer Carson that Ryan was very ill and wanted something to drink. He was given some brandy in the hope that it would strengthen him, but his stomach would not retain it. He grew weaker, and when his uncle called later in the day he complained of being very weak. He said he had been subject to weak spells for a number of years past, and that one of his lungs was affected. Late in the afternoon Dr. Kornman was sent for, who administered a sedative. Mrs. Oschwald and Miss Ryan and a number of friends of the condemned bade them farewell shortly before 7 o'clock last evening, when the culprits were separated for the first time since their arrest. Oschwald was placed in cell No. 4 and Ryan in cell No. 5, on the ground tier, where they were watched by a special guard of four constables through the night. No persons were admitted to the jail after nightfall, except the clergymen, Rev. Messrs. Allen and Weed, and the parents of the doomed men. This morning a force of 60 policemen and all the constabulary of the county will form a cordon around the jail, and no person without a pass will be allowed to cross the lines. Only the sworn deputies of Sheriff Harrison and the representatives of the press will be allowed in the jail. The Sheriff has taken every precaution against a crowd, and intends that the hanging shall be as private as possible. Oschwald and Ryan still adhere to their declaration of innocence, and say that they will die protesting that their hands are not imbrued with the blood of Officer Brock.

A REMARKABLE LIBEL CASE.

The trial of County Clerk James M. Brann for libel was concluded yesterday in the Hudson County courts. When on Monday Rev. Henry A. Brann, D. D., a brother of the defendant, went on the stand and made a sworn statement that he and he alone was the author of the libelous circular, the court adjourned the case until yesterday to give counsel an opportunity of considering that new and startling phase of the case. The business of the court was not proceeded with at the usual time, owing to the absence of Dr. Brann, and the court waited for his appearance until 1 o'clock. At or about that time a telegram was received from him stating that he was ill and would be unable to attend. Judge Hoffman convened the court and asked counsel if they were ready to proceed with the case. Mr. Collins, counsel for the defendant, expressed the opinion that the statement of Dr. Brann was sufficient to fix the publication of the circular, and if the State did not desire to press what might appear to be a technical publication on the part of County Clerk Brann the defense would rest. Senator Abbett, who, as counsel for Mr. Mullone, assisted District Attorney Garrettson in the prosecution, answered that the circular contained charges against Mr. Mullone of so terrible a nature that it left him no election but to complain to the Grand Jury. That course was absolutely necessary for the vindication of his character. The charges were so atrocious and at the same time so false that he would have been untrue to himself had he not made the complaint. So far as Mr. Mullone was concerned, the acknowledgement of the authorship of the circular, and the retraction of the charges contained in it, had satisfied him, and he was now willing that the defendant should be acquitted. Mr. Collins replied that the defendant had always disavowed the circular; he had not desired its publication, and would not pretend to allege its truth. Judge Hoffman then charged the jury, dwelling particularly on the atrocity of the libel. In conclusion, the court intimated that in view of the fact that Dr. Brann had admitted the authorship of the circular, the jury ought to acquit the defendant. The jury then retired, and remained in session for some time. They came in for instruction twice, the second time inquiring if a verdict of acquittal would necessarily impeach the witnesses for the prosecution, and on being assured that such was not the case, rendered a verdict of acquittal.

TROTTING PROGRAMME FOR THE SEASON.

The Board of Stewards of the trotting circuit of the North-eastern District met at the New-York Hotel last evening to arrange their programme of events for the coming season. The members present were Morgan L. Mott, of Poughkeepsie, President; E. B. Graham, of Utica, Secretary, and Messrs. Edwards, of Cleveland, Ohio; Hamlin, of Buffalo; Sheldon, of Rochester; Barnard, of Fleetwood Park; Loomis, of Hartford, Conn.; and Powers, of Springfield, Mass. It was decided that the purses in Buffalo, Rochester, and Utica should close together on Wednesday, July, 18, and in Poughkeepsie, Saringfield, and Hartford on Monday, Aug. 13. Each association is limited in the gross amount of purses to not more than $20,000 or less than $5,000. The events will be as follows: First, "free for all" purse, barring Goldsmith Maid, $4,000; second, open to all who have never beaten 2:21, $2,000; third, those who have never beaten 2:23, $2,500; fourth, those who have never beaten 2:25, $2,000; fifth, those who have never beaten 2:27, $2,000; sixth, those who have never beaten 2:29, $2,000; seventh, those who have never beaten 2:31, $1,500; eighth, those who have never beaten 2:34, $1,500, making a gross purse of $18,500. The postponement claim in the programme of last year will be in force this year. In each purse there will be four "moneys" or prizes, the division being 50, 25, 20, and 15 per cent. respectively.

DEATH OF A WELL-KNOWN FREEMASON.

One of the best known members of the Masonic fraternity in Brooklyn, Mr. William M. Richardson, died on Monday last. The deceased was in his 60th year, and was as universally esteemed as he was widely known by the members of the Masonic craft. He was a member of Hohenlinden Lodge, No. 56, F. and A. M., at the time that body first occupied its room in the Phenix Building. He was then Tiler of the lodge, and subsequently was selected to fill the same position in all the Masonic bodies on that floor of the building. The funeral will take place from Trinity Church, Montague and Clinton streets, at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The following Masonic lodges are invited to be present at the obsequies: Clinton Commandery, No. 14, K. T.; Brooklyn Chapter, No. 148, of R. A. M.; Gate of the Temple Chapter, No. 208, R. A. M.; Nassau Chapter, No. 109, R. A. M.; Brooklyn Council, No. 4, Royal and Select Masters; Zerubbabel Lodge, No. 485, F. & A. M.; and Hohenlinden Lodge, No. 56, F. & A. M.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Bayard Taylor will deliver a course of lectures on German literature, in Association Hall, on Tuesdays and Fridays, at 11 A. M., during the Lenten season.

The beginning of the Lenten season was observed yesterday by impressive religious ceremonies in the various Roman Catholic and Episcopal churches of this City.

The ball to be given in honor of George Mitchell, ex-Chief of the Caledonian Club, takes place in Irving Hall on the evening of Wednesday next, eve of Washington's birthday.

The Grand Encampment of Patriarchs of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows of the State of New-York is to visit Booth's Theatre on next Tuesday evening. The members will wear their handsome regalia.

Mr. Thurlow Weed fell in the porch of the Post Office building yesterday, and was slightly injured by the fall. He was conveyed to his home, where he still remains suffering from the effects of the accident.

Mr. Arthur Cheney, of the Globe Theatre, Boston, who fell in the street Tuesday night, in consequence of a sudden attack of vertigo, was not severely injured. He is about his business again, and apparently in perfect health.

The regular session of the Board of Aldermen will be held to-day. As hitherto, resolutions will probably be offered in favor of providing work for the unemployed, although the heads or departments state that they have no work to give.

Early yesterday morning, cars Nos. 78 and 83, of the Dry Dock and Battery Railroad, came into collision at the corner of 23d street and First avenue, and Kate Robinson, aged 25, of No. 172 Avenue B, who was a passenger on one of the cars, was severely injured. She was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

Hon. J. D. Cameron, Secretary of War; Gen. Hancock, Gen. Sherman, and his brother, the Senator, with a number of invited guests, visited Fort Hamilton yesterday, and were received by Gen. Getty and his staff. After receiving the hospitality of Gen. Getty the party proceeded to inspect the fortifications at Sandy Hook.

On Tuesday night a team of horses broke loose from a Belt Railroad car, in First avenue, near Thirty-fifth street, and ran down to and through Thirty-fourth street, where one of the frightened horses ran into a Second avenue car, smashing the windows and breaking in a portion of the side of the car. Lucy Gillen, a passenger on the Second avenue car, was slightly injured.

Miss Arabella Root will give the third ballad concert of her series at Chickering Hall to-morrow evening, for the benefit of the poor of this City. Among the artists who have kindly offered their services for the occasion are Mme. J. Tingley Logan, contralto; Mr. M. Arbuckle, cornetist; Mr. William J. Hill, tenor; Mr. F. G. Bourne, basso, and Mr. Henry Gaits, baritone.

Boyden, Malloy & Co., hat jobbers, at Nos. 520 and 522 Broadway, have failed. At a meeting of the creditors at the St. Nicholas Hotel, a committee, with George J. Ferry as Chairman and Julius Corn, Secretary, were appointed to investigate the affairs of the concern. A report was presented, showing liabilities, $84,000; nominal assets, $76,000; real assets, $40,000. It was the general opinion that a settlement would be the best course, and 40 cents on the dollar will probably be the terms.

BROOKLYN.

At a regular meeting of the Brooklyn Yacht Club held last evening, President P. W. Ostrander in the chair, it was decided to hold the annual regatta of the club on the 12th of June next.

At a meeting of the Supply Committee of the Board of Supervisors yesterday, Supervisor Strong said the county charitable institutions were using four times the amount of medicine than was necessary.

At the instance of Thomas F. Clark, who was assaulted with a riding-whip by Douglass Walker in the Academy of Music on Monday evening, Justice Walsh yesterday issued a warrant for Walker's arrest. The latter will probably be brought to court to-day.

About a year ago Louis A. Moore began a suit for absolute divorce against his wife. On Monday he abandoned the suit, and the following day Mrs. Moore died. It is said her death was the result of overwork in the effort to support her children after the separation from her husband.

At a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen, called by the Mayor for 7:30 o'clock last evening, a committee was appointed to draw up resolutions of respect to the memory of the late Cyrus P. Smith. The Aldermen resolved to attend the funeral in a body, and a committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements.

At a meeting of the Board of Supervisors yesterday resolutions of respect to the memory of the late Cyrus P. Smith were passed, and the board resolved to attend the funeral in a body. The funeral services will take place at 2 o'clock this afternoon at the First Presbyterian Church on Henry street. The family request that friends refrain from making floral offerings.

In the City Court yesterday, before Judge McCue, Mary Lux sued Mrs. Mepzo and the latter's husband for slander, laying the damages at $2,000. The allegation was that the defendants called plaintiff a thief. The suit was dismissed, on the ground that the complaint did not contain the exact words alle

DETAILS OF THE OREGON INFAMY.

DEMOCRATS GREATLY DISTURBED BY RECENT EXPOSURES—SENATOR KELLY'S CONNECTION WITH THE DISGRACEFUL AFFAIR—TILDEN'S HAND PLAINLY DISCERNIBLE—THE MONEY SENT OUT FOR THE PURPOSE OF BRIBING ELECTORS—THE EVIDENCES OF GUILT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The deciphered Oregon dispatches, as produced last evening by the Senate committee, have created a great deal of disturbance among Democrats who had hung a slight hope upon the action of the Commission in the Oregon case. They have also caused much distress to Senator Kelly. He had an earnest conference with Senator Kernan and David Dudley Field, and the two last named also talked the matter over together. Kelly, in his speech yesterday, which wore a virtuous appearance, has made it impossible for him to explain further. He must deny his statement in the Senate by admitting the truth of the dispatches. There was a promise of a display of Democratic virtue, which failed, if it was ever seriously intended. It was threatened that a resolution for Kelly's expulsion would be offered by a Democrat, which would have been a useless exhibition, because it would have been done only for political effect at this time. Kelly cannot be made Tilden's scapegoat. His offense, however, is very grave. In one dispatch he fully indorses the purchase of a Republican Elector, and the use of money by himself is made certain by two dispatches. He telegraphs Pelton that he has borrowed money on his individual responsibility, and trusts it will be replaced; and the same day receives answer to go ahead and he will be reimbursed. These two dispatches are not signed, but they are so connected by substance and by date that the addresses make the authorship absolutely certain. The handwriting is also said to fasten the evidence. The case on Tilden himself is worse than on Kelley. There is the dispatch from Grover direct to Tilden, sent, no doubt, as an authentication of the information unauthoritatively conveyed by Patrick and others. Then Pelton, Tilden's Private Secretary, conducts the transaction, taking the money desired for the purchase of a Republican Elector from Gov. Tilden's bank, the Third National. There is only one other question to be settled: Was the money paid from Mr. Tilden's private account? As the case stands to-day everybody believes it was. This belief can be removed only by clear and direct proof as to where the money really came from, and any attempt to prevent an investigation of this branch of the subject will be received as equivalent to a confession of guilt. Other dispatches are being deciphered by the key, and will probably be made public to-morrow.

Cashier Jordan, of the bank, is expected before the committee to-morrow. A curious connection of questions and answers is shown between a dispatch from Pelton to Patrick desiring the fee to be made contingent and payable in March, and a dispatch from Patrick to Pelton declaring that this cannot be done, which same dispatch reports minutely the disposition to be made of the money.

Senator Kelly says he has no intention to make any public explanation of his dispatches. He says he was not acquainted with the cipher; that dispatches in cipher were read to him, and, believing they contained only the words read, he signed them. He says he signed no dispatch knowingly which contained the words given in the interpretation of those printed today. This will strike the average mind as a very weak explanation, but admitting that Senator Kelly was deceived by those who were plotting to steal the Electoral vote of Oregon, it cannot be denied that such dispatches were forwarded to and from Oregon.

THE WHEREABOUTS OF THE MAN PATRICK—HIS HIDING PLACE IN OMAHA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Feb. 15.—J. H. Patrick—the Oregon Patrick—who attempted to steal one Elector and buy another in Oregon for that great reformer, Tilden, has been hiding in his Omaha home since the Senate Committee began its investigations, but parties here have at last heard of his whereabouts. Since the Detroit firm deciphered his dispatch for the benefit of a curious people, he has been informed by them that the jig is up; that being subpœnaed by the Senate Committee, they must produced the documents to prove the infamy in which he had been plunged. He notified Pelton, Tilden's nephew, of this state of affairs. It is now in order for the Senate Committee to send for Patrick in Omaha, and get at the correspondence by telegraph and otherwise that has taken place between Hinman, Patrick, and Pelton.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The cipher telegraphic dispatch sent from Oregon on Dec. 1, to Hon. Samuel J. Tilden, of New-York, and signed "Gobble," is translated by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, with the aid of the "key" furnished them by Mr. Shaw, of Detroit, Mich., to read as follows:

PORTLAND, OREGON, Dec. 1.

To Samuel J. Tilden, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New-York:

I shall decide every point in the case of Post Office Elector in favor of the highest Democratic Elector, and grant the certificate accordingly on morning of 6th inst. Confidential.

GOVERNOR.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTION.

COMING REPORT OF THE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE'S INVESTIGATION—THE HAYES MAJORITY 800—THE ELECTION TO BE DECLARED ILLEGAL TO MAKE A POINT BEFORE THE COMMISSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The committee of the House which went to South Carolina to investigate the recent election in that State, held a final meeting to-day to agree upon its report. There were few of the committee present, and very little interest was taken by the members, as most of them were disgusted with the result of their visit to the Palmetto State. One of the Democratic members was heard to remark, when asked to attend that meeting today, that he did not care to hear any more upon that subject. His Democratic colleagues had a meeting, however, and agreed upon their report, which concedes a majority of about 800 to all of the Hayes Electors upon the face of the returns, and makes no claim to Mr. Tilden being entitled to a vote from that State. The report, however, declares that the whole election was illegal, because there was no registration of votes, as required by the Constitution of the State. It also avers that there was great fraud, violence, and intimidation in the conduct of the election, but censures the blacks as well as the whites, and holds each party equally responsible. This claim as to the illegality of the election is an afterthought, since the Democracy could set up no claim to the Electoral vote, and is made to hang an objection upon to counting the vote for Hayes, should the Democratic case as to Louisiana and Oregon fail before the Commission. The committee will, if possible, make its report on Saturday.

THE ELECTION IN ALABAMA.

TESTIMONY OF CONGRESSMAN HAROLSON—HOW HE WAS COUNTED OUT BY HIS DEMOCRATIC OPPONENTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15. — Congressman Harolson, of Alabama, testified before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day in regard to the conduct of the recent elections in that State. The law of the State requires that both parties shall be represented on the Board of Election Judges at each precinct. Shelly, who was his Democratic opponent for Congress, had the appointment of these Judges, being Sheriff of the county, and in each precinct he selected two white Democrats and one negro, who, in every instance, could neither read nor write. The ballots were generally received through a window by one of the Democratic Judges, who, if it was a Republican ballot, would drop it on a chair under the window, and picking up another and a Democratic ballot, would pass it over to be put into the box. If the colored Judge questioned the proceeding he would have the muzzle of a revolver shoved in his face, and he would be asked if he intended to accuse his colleague of cheating. Of course he had to back down and let the game proceed or have his head shot off. Harlason said in the town of Selma he was met by his opponent, the Sheriff, and invited to an interview at the Sheriff's office, which he declined to attend. He was soon after arrested by a deputy on a trumped up charge, and taken into the jail, when he was asked to choose between his life and the signing of a paper, the contents of which he was not allowed to know. He signed the paper, and was released. He afterward discovered it was his withdrawal as a candidate for Congress, and a retraction of charges he had made in his speeches against the Democratic nominee. It was afterward printed in the newspapers and on posters and circulated throughout his district, losing him thousands of the votes of the people, whom he had no time to reach with a contradiction.

BROOKLYN'S WATER FRONT.

THE WALLABOUT MARKET BILL UNDER CONSIDERATION IN THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The Senate to-day passed the bill known as the Wallabout Market bill, which provides for the sale of certain Government lands in the City of Brooklyn for a market place, and which was introduced and passed through the House at the last session. Some time since the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs reported it with an amendment. But opposition manifesting itself, the bill was recommitted, and was supposed to be lost. Mr. Bliss, who has labored industriously for its passage, renewed his efforts, and succeeded in inducing the committee to again take up the bill and accord him new hearings. The result was that the bill was reported favorably, without amendment, and as it came from the House, and speedily put upon its passage, with the result mentioned. The land described in the bill contains 27 acres, and is bounded by Washington, Flushing, and Clinton avenues and the Wallabout Bay. When the sale is consummated Brooklyn will have a much-needed water-front for her market, and for another public dock.

DISTRICT EXPENDITURES.

TILDEN'S PRIVATE SECRETARY IN THE POOL—TESTIMONY OF COL. PELTON—AMONG OTHER THINGS, HE DECLARES HE NEVER USED MONEY IMPROPERLY.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The Committee on the Real Estate Pool this morning examined Dr. L. S. Filbert, of Philadelphia, of the firm of Filbert & Taylor, contractors under the late Board of Public Works of this city. He testified that the contract ran from 1871 to 1873. His partners were McLane, Vandenburgh, Taylor, and Crawford. The capital, amounting to about $900,000 or $1,000,000, was mostly furnished by Taylor, and the contracts were chiefly for the laying of wood pavements. Among the books kept by the company and under the immediate supervision of Messrs. Nagle and Slater, was a stub check-book. Witness used to secure the contracts, and the profits were divided. Col. W. A. Cook was attorney for the company in a lawsuit, and as such obtained possession of the books of the company. The books were first brought here during the lawsuit, which was between himself and Taylor with a man named Gallope. They were given in charge of the Savings and Trust Company, and witness thinks that Col. Cook obtained them from there. Although Col. Cook may be unwilling to give up these books, witness himself has no objection to have them delivered up to the committee for the purposes of this investigation. Dr. Filbert was shown a memorandum-book containing entries of moneys paid out, but stated that he did not know what the money was expended for, as Mr. Taylor generally ordered payments to be made; he himself drew but few checks, and upon these he generally made notations showing for what purpose they were issued. This memorandum shows payment on a check for $1,000, to Capt. I. N. Burritt, of the Sunday Herald of this city, for a contract purchased from him. Dr. Filbert supposed that the contract was awarded Mr. Burritt through favoritism, inasmuch as Gov. A. R. Shepherd owned an interest in the Herald. There was also paid to D. C. Forney, the proprietor of the Sunday Chronicle, $1,000 for a contract which he had obtained and which was purchased from him by the company. Dr. Filbert did not think Gov. Shepherd had an interest in that paper also. Dr. Filbert further stated that another contract was bought from J. M. McFarland, at that time the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, but now deceased, and the consideration paid that gentleman was $2,700; no money was ever paid to Col. John W. Forney; in another instance Capt. Burritt was paid $747 49 for procuring a contract, and $50 was paid to a man named Young; Hallet Kilbourn was paid $1,100 for political purposes, as witness supposes, in aid of the Republican Committee of this city; witness consulted with Mr. Taylor concerning the matter, and the latter ordered the money to be paid because it would keep them in good standing with the Republicans. Gov. Shepherd, so far as witness is aware, had nothing to do with this matter; a further sum of $1,000 was paid for political purposes to Mr. Bingham, Postmaster at Philadelphia, and Chairman of the Republican State Executive Committee of Pennsylvania.

In response to questions, Dr. Filbert stated that the contract obtained from Burritt was not awarded in Burritt's name, but through a power of attorney, so as not to have his name appear on the papers. Burritt secured the contracts and then gave witness an order for them, and in consideration of this was paid the different sums named. A like course, Dr. Filbert said, was pursued in the case of nearly all other contracts which were procured through the agency of the gentleman named; under like circumstances and conditions a contract was purchased from a Justice of the Peace named David L. Smith, who was considered a poor man; Gov. Cooke and Shepherd, while acting as President of the Board of Public Works, awarded such contracts as they pleased; witness never paid or caused to be paid any money to any member of Congress for his influence or intercession, nor did he know of any member who was connected in any manner with these matters. Dr. Filbert stated that a gentleman named Woodbridge, who at one time did work for him and Taylor, failed financially, and being a personal friend of Gov. Cooke came here and asked for assistance. Gov. Cooke gave him a contract for laying 50,000 yards of pavement at $5 50 per square yard. Col. W. T. Pelton, Gov. Tilden's Private Secretary, and Mr. Sprague, then United States Senator, were interested in this work.

At this point the committee adjourned until to-morrow.

ASSASSINS IN THE SOUTH.

ONE OF TILDEN'S FRIENDS PLAYING THE ROLE ASSIGNED HIM—AN ATTEMPT ON THE LIFE OF GOV. PACKARD IN NEW-ORLEANS—ARREST OF THE ASSASSIN AND ONE OF HIS ACCOMPLICES—A DESPERATE STATE OF AFFAIRS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 15.—Another Wilkes Booth has appeared on the political stage; this time in Louisiana, with his pistol pointed at the head of the Governor of the State. The Democrats here have frequently repeated the assertion that it the President recognized Mr. Packard as Governor of Louisiana, that gentleman would not long live to govern. A few Democratic papers have openly advocated assassination as a means of ridding the State of Republicans distasteful to the White League community. One paper went so far as to say that Gov. Packard should be followed even to his hotel or his office, and there killed. The status quo and hopes for Tilden's success lulled the storm for a time, but since the Florida decision the old threats have been heard again, and in consequence strangers and suspicious-looking persons have been questioned before being allowed to enter the State-house. To-day, however, a well-dressed young man, who said he had been in the Union Army, passed the guard, accompanied by a one-armed man. Once in the State-house, the young man proceeded to the Executive office, and in the reception-room gave the name of Joseph Hutton, saying that he represented the Philadelphia Press, and wished to see Gov. Packard. He was soon admitted to the Governor's private office, and appeared to show some surprise at finding several persons in the room. Nothing daunted, though, as soon as Gov. Packard had finished speaking with a gentleman present, the young man approached the Governor's desk and said: "When can I see you?" The Governor turned toward the man just in time to push down a pistol which was aimed and fired at him, and received a bullet wound on the knee. At the same time the Governor struck his assailant a blow on the forehead, and a bystander shot him in the left arm. The assassin fainted from loss of blood, and, appearing to be dead, was not further molested.

The would-be assassin is a handsome man about 25 years of age, and who subsequently gave his name as William H. Weldon. Some old letters of recommendation found on his person confirmed his statement as to his name. He said he was from Pennsylvania, and had been about two months in the South, living at Mobile. He said he was a Democrat, and that his attempt at assassination was made from patriotic motives. When told that Gov. Packard had interposed to save his life from the vengeance of friends he seemed quite affected. He said there were three other men with him in the conspiracy to kill Gov. Packard, but they had deserted him at the last moment.

As soon as the shooting was heard the one-armed man left the reception room, and was captured on the stairway while endeavoring to leave the building. He is a dark looking man, like many of the desperate Sicilians about New-Orleans, and refuses to talk. The wounded assassin and the man supposed to be his accomplice are prisoners at the State-house in charge of the Metropolitan Police. What is to be done with them has not been determined upon. To turn them over to the White League Magistrates would be simply to release them on bail. All law here is in statu quo. Desperate men ready to do deeds of violence are not wanting. There is murder in the air, and the city is wild with excitement.

THE WOULD-BE ASSASSIN UNKNOWN IN PHILADELPHIA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 15.—Inquiry at the office of the Philadelphia Press to-night shows that the man Weldon, who shot Gov. Packard in New-Orleans to-day, has never been connected in any capacity with that journal. He is entirely unknown here. He may be from Bethlehem, Penn., 54 miles from here, as advices state that a letter on his person contained a recommendation from Charles H. Schwartz, a prominent citizen of that place.

THE FEELING IN WASHINGTON.

GREAT EXCITEMENT PRODUCED—DEMOCRATS WHO ARE GLAD OF IT—THE EFFECT OF THE NEWS ON THE COMMISSION—BELIEF THAT THE PRESIDENT WILL NOW RECOGNIZE THE REAL GOVERNMENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The news of the attempted assassination of Gov. Packard was received at the Capitol about 3 o'clock this afternoon, and was rapidly circulated about the House and Senate, and soon became known in the Supreme Court-room, where the arguments in the Louisiana case were in progress before the Electoral Commission. The reports were meagre and uncertain, and produced a great deal of excitement. Marshal Pitkin, Senator West, Gov. Kellogg, and others, received brief dispatches; but so little information was gained that the press dispatches to the papers of to-morrow morning are eagerly awaited. One report stated that Gov. Packard was dangerously wounded, and all the first dispatches concurred in saying that the assassin was mortally hurt.

The expressions of opinion and sentiment were various, and showed great and earnest feeling. The effect which the news would have upon the decision of the Commission in the Louisiana case seemed to rise prominently in the minds of men of both parties. There were many Republicans who spoke earnestly of the delay of the Administration in recognizing fully and sustaining the Packard Government. Democrats were very bitter, generally, and the names of several of them might be given who said, in substance, they were glad of it, and only wished the attempt to kill Packard had been successful. The affair must hasten the decision of the Louisiana Governorship by the President. The subject was laid before him to-day, but no action was taken. The Cabinet will meet to-morrow, and the situation will then be fully considered. There seems to have come the occasion when decisive action is immediately imperative. It is hoped by Republicans that to-morrow the Government will announce its purpose to sustain Republican authority in Louisiana. This seems the more necessary, as two of the Democrats before the Commission have given that body warning that the peace of the State depends upon its action in respect to the Electoral vote. It has been believed here for several days that the counting of the State for Hayes was to be the signal for an uprising of the White League. There is much information of such a purpose, and the Administration should be in readiness, as it doubtless will be, to prevent the overthrow of the State Government. The latest private information received here indicates that the attempted assassination was the result of a conspiracy; that the person who made the attempt was a Sicilian hired for the purpose, and that he will "give away," as the detectives say, those who employed him. One accomplice has been arrested, and the names of others are known. Packard appears to have had a very narrow escape from death. The assassin Weldon was designated by lot to do the deed.

TROUBLESOME ENGINEERS.

THE STRIKE ON THE BOSTON AND MAINE RAILROAD—HOW THE TOWNS ALONG THE ROAD ARE AFFECTED BY THE STRIKE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Feb. 15.—The striking engineers of the Boston and Maine Railroad remain firm, and express their confidence in eventually carrying the fight; but meanwhile the managers of the road appear to find no difficulty in employing serviceable substitutes, and to-day a notice was posted on the door of the Superintendent's office that no more men are wanted. In consequence of the warning sent out by the Brotherhood leaders, the local roads hereabout have stopped furnishing men to the Maine road, and the later recruits have mainly come from the Vermont Central and the Maine Central lines, where the force has lately been reduced. Mr. Furber, the Superintendent, says that no men will be placed in charge of passenger trains who are not known to be thoroughly competent and trustworthy, and that the public need have no fears of the safety of travel on the road. To-night the running of local freight trains was begun, and the Superintendent announces that by to-morrow he hopes to be able to resume the old time-table for all trains. Acts of violence along the road are repeatedly reported, but the strikers insist in their protestations that they do not countenance these, and it is generally believed that they are committed by over-zealous friends and sympathizers. At the head-quarters of the Brotherhood, where the strikers mostly congregate, "stick" is the word. That they have the sympathy of their brethren on other roads is evident. They assert that the road is losing money through this disarrangement of its business, and that within a fortnight its managers will be glad to compromise with the strikers. Patrons of the road send words of encouragement to the strikers, and state that the fear is that some serious accident may occur through the running of the engines by inexperienced men who do not know the road. It was stated at the head-quarters that the Portland mail agent, upon the arrival of the train in this city shortly after 9 o'clock to-night, openly asserted that at the time the train left Portland the engineer and firemen were gloriously drunk; that they continued so up to their arrival in this city, and that he would not have risked his life with them had not his duty required him to accompany his mail matter.

The effect on business by the strike in the towns and cities along the line of the railroad has of course been very serious. In Haverhill a great deal of indignation was expressed by dealers who have had to suffer from delays in the transshipment and receipt of goods. The freight trains which were sent out to-night helped to take off part of the immense stock of freight in waiting. At Newburyport a good deal of inconvenience has been experienced. The Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, which sometimes ships 200 tons of coal per day over the Boston and Maine, now have large orders from Exeter and Plaistow, N. H.; Lawrence, Haverhill, Groveland, and other inland cities and towns, which they are entirely unable to fill. Some of the cotton mills are anticipating large shipments of cotton from the South, and will be seriously inconvenienced if the strike should continue after their cotton reaches this city.

CINCINNATI ELECTION FRAUDS.

THE OCTOBER CONSPIRACY—FURTHER IMPORTANT DEVELOPMENTS—DEPOSITION OF ONE OF THE PRINCIPAL OFFENDERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 15.—Another important step in uncovering the October election conspiracy was taken to-day. Eph. Holland, the noted gambler, who disbursed a large portion of the corruption fund, and who was arrested in New-York the other day, has made a deposition which will make a sensation when produced. All that the newspapers can ascertain to-night in regard to it is that he has laid bare the whole plot, as far as he knew of it, and has treed some large game of the Democratic Party. When arrested he was allowed to languish for some time in jail before bail could be procured, and this disclosure is probably prompted by a desire for revenge against the prominent Democrats involved who did not fly promptly to his relief. The attorney who extracted the confession from him says it settles the fate of Banning. The appearance of the document is waited with much interest.

WRECK OF FOUR SCHOONERS.

SEVEN LIVES KNOWN TO BE LOST IN CHESAPEAKE BAY—THE CREWS OF TWO OTHER SCHOONERS BELIEVED LOST.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CRISFIELD, Md., Feb. 15.—Two of the four schooners which were wrecked in Chesapeake Bay, near here, on Monday, are the Delmay and Colbourn, of Virginia. The crew of the Delmay were saved, while the seven men aboard the Colbourn were lost. Their names are unknown. It is probable that the other two vessels have gone down with all hands. The excitement is intense here, and boats are continually out in search of bodies.

JOE COBURN AND TWO POLICEMEN SAID TO HAVE BEEN SHOT—ONE OF THE POLICEMEN WOUNDED IN TWO PLACES.

At an early hour this morning a fight of considerable desperation occurred at the corner of Thirty-third street and Broadway. Joe Coburn has a liquor-saloon in this vicinity, and during the night a disturbance was excited by some cause unknown at the hour of going to press. Some arrests are supposed to have been made, and when upon the sidewalk in front of the saloon pistols were drawn by both the police and others and shots were fired. Joe Coburn is said to have been wounded but how seriously was not learned; he was shot, however, by the policemen. The latter, in their turn, were wounded, it is understood, either by Coburn or some of his friends. One of them received a shot in his right arm and another in his breast, but whether dangerously wounded or not was not learned. Coburn was a prize-fighter of considerable notoriety in his day and is abundantly able to take care of himself in any trifling engagement.

THE INDIAN TROUBLES.

DEADWOOD, Feb. 15.—During the last week numerous reports of Indian depredations have been coming in from small towns adjacent here. To-day these rumors assumed an alarming aspect, and substantiated news of simultaneous attacks in different directions, which leads to the belief that the Indians are surrounding this vicinity. Volen's large cattle train was captured entire near Bear Butte, yesterday, and Fiether's herd of mules was also captured in the same vicinity. Montana ranche, a short distance from here, was attacked about the same time, the Indians capturing all the stock. Wigginton's herd of horses, which was near Crook City, was also captured. Wigginton was wounded, and his assistant killed. Considerable stock in the vicinity of Spearfish was run off.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

MR. EVARTS' ARGUMENT.

THE MOST CONVINCING YET DELIVERED—MATT. CARPENTER ANSWERED—THE QUESTION OF FILLING VACANCIES—MR. EVARTS' NON-PARTISAN ACTION—AN ELOQUENT APPEAL—JUDGE CAMPBELL'S PLEA FOR TILDEN—A FITTING REPRESENTATIVE OF THE LOST CAUSE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The Electoral Commission resumed its session shortly after 10 o'clock this morning, Mr. Evarts, on the part of the Republicans, being the first speaker. At each previous sitting of the Tribunal, the court-room was densely crowded, many of the most prominent members of Congress and other distinguished gentlemen being present. Mr. Evarts' address, which was continued for upward of two hours, is admitted on all sides to have been the clearest and most convincing argument yet delivered. At the outset he referred to the fact that the Constitution of the United States provided that Presidential Electors should be chosen in such way as the States themselves ordained and directed. Then, after explaining at some length the relative powers of the Federal and State Governments, he showed very clearly that the Commission could not legally exercise the same legislative power as the two houses did acting separately. They, according to the accepted meaning of the Constitution, counted the votes, while the Commission was only delegated power to determine questions relating to such count. Regarding Mr. Matt Carpenter's wild theory that the Louisiana State law of 1868 made no provision for filling vacancies in the Electoral College, Mr. Evarts was particularly clear and forcible, showing beyond all question that the ground taken by Carpenter was simply ridiculous, and unworthy of credit. Admitting, for the sake of argument, however, that Mr. Carpenter's statement was a correct one, still Mr. Evarts contended that the Electors Brewster and Levisse, to whose case the law in question referred, were still legally entitled to cast their votes for the Presidential candidates whom they were chosen to support. They were not, Mr. Evarts continued, entitled to the position of Elector, because of any title which they received at the election on the 7th of November, but because of the appointment which on the 6th of December they had lawfully received from the legally elected, returned, and certified Electors, who were charged with the duty of filling all vacancies which might occur in the college. Mr. Evarts refuted a number of Carpenter's ingenious arguments with ease and rapidity, and then, referring to the claim that Gov. Kellogg could not legally certify to his own election as Presidential Elector, and consequently was not eligible to the latter position, he quoted the case of Gov. Ingersoll, of Connecticut, and showed that he had certified to his own election as Elector, and that his vote had been counted without question or debate. Similar action had been taken at the commencement of the nation's existence, when Hancock certified to his own election as President of the United States Congress. Following up this line of discussion the speaker dwelt at considerable length upon the proposition made by the Democratic counsel to inquire into the details of the State election, and denied that either Congress or the Commission had jurisdiction to do so. Judge Trumbull had claimed, he continued, that at the last election the Government of Louisiana was not republican in form, because it was necessary for the Federal power, and a part of the Federal Army to uphold the laws and the State Administration. In his opinion it would be just as well to claim that the United States Government had not been republican in form because for four years during the late war it had been upheld by armed men—citizens who became soldiers because they believed that the form of the Government was republican, and because they loved that form. He knew that the spirit which animated these men was still alive in the land. He for one was always a citizen before he was a partisan, and he felt himself bound to denounce as unwarranted the statement that in the present case he or his associates acted as partisans. Every demand which they made, every appeal which they made, was in the name of law, of right, of truth, and justice. This part of Mr. Evarts' address was truly eloquent, and delivered with much greater warmth and dramatic effect than is usual with him. As he sat down it was remarked by a number of prominent Democrats who were present that he had completely demolished Mr. Carpenter's plea and overthrown Trumbull's strongest points.

At the close of his speech a recess was taken for half an hour, and then the venerable Judge Campbell, of New-Orleans, took the floor. His appearance created a marked sensation, and vividly recalled all the circumstances of his somewhat eventful life. He was at one time a Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and, as a peer of the highest legal authorities in the nation, sat upon the very bench to which he to-day appealed. He left that high position to join the forces of the men who were in arms against his country, and to-day he appeared to advocate the cause of a man who pronounced the war for the Union a failure, and declared that the Southern States had the right to secede. Mr. Samuel J. Tilden was fittingly represented by ex-Justice Campbell. His argument was based upon legal quibbles from the commencement to the end, and it proved nothing except that the Judge was well versed in old English law, but knew little about the statutory enactments of the State of Louisiana. He was frequently prompted by the well-known Major Burke, of New-Orleans, who sat at his elbow. But even with this aid he was unable to show one good reason how or why the Commission, or any other creature of Congress, is authorized to go behind the returns of a State, or inquire into the manner in which the States conduct their elections or appoint their officers. At the close of his argument a number of legal references were submitted by counsel on both sides, and then the public meeting was adjourned, and the Commission went into executive session.

THE COMMISSION'S DECISION.

A VOTE ON THE ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE TO BE TAKEN TO-DAY—THE LOUISIANA CASE TO BE FINALLY DECIDED ON MONDAY—THE DEMOCRACY PREPARING FOR DISTURBANCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The Commission had a private conference this evening, which lasted about three-quarters of an hour. There was some desire manifested to remain in session till a decision should be reached on the question of the admissibility of the evidence, but the members of the Commission are really not able physically to undertake such a labor, as several of them are not in vigorous health, and they have during the last three days had a weighty test laid upon their endurance by the long sessions. An agreement or order was, therefore, made that the Commission adjourn till to-morrow morning, and that a vote be taken at 4 o'clock on the admission of testimony. This will be decided as a preliminary question, as in the case of Florida, and after the decision counsel will again be heard. There is no reason to believe that the Commission will reverse its opinion as heretofore given, and the first intention was to have the case presented entire and upon its merits, and then to decide; but the counsel have drawn the Commission from this purpose. The case cannot now, therefore, be decided this week, or rather, cannot be sent back to Congress this week. The refusal to hear testimony would be followed by brief arguments on Friday night or Saturday, and the final decision may be ready to communicate to Congress on Monday.

If, as is generally admitted, the vote of Louisiana is to be counted for Hayes, the height of excitement will be reached when the announcement is made. The full force of all the Democratic purpose to break down the law and prevent the declaration of an election under its provisions will then burst forth. They are now preparing for a state of tremendous excitement by getting unduly elated. There are many of the Democratic members who are really jubilant. They have been made sanguine by their leaders that the reaction may be the more intense. They are told that the Commission is going behind the returns this time by the vote of Justice Bradley, and they believe that the information is true. But once the announcement is made that the vote is given to Hayes, the revolutionary spirit will make a desperate effort to assert itself, and for a time at least the scenes of New-Orleans will almost be threatened in Washington. Ultimately the purpose of revolution will probably be suppressed, though some unusual and desperate proceedings in the nature of a Democratic protest may be expected.

One of the most frivolous of complaints is the recent one that the framers of the bill meant the Commission acting under it to go behind the returns. The point was squarely stated in debate, and all that Mr. Thurman claimed in the Senate was that the bill submitted to the Commission the question of the power of Congress to take extrinsic evidence, and he said if that question had not been left to the Commission no Democrat would vote for the bill. It was never claimed that the Commission must go behind the returns, but only that they might. Otherwise no Republican would have voted for the bill, and every Republican who voted for it did so knowing it gave the Commission power to review the State elections, but in the full faith that no commission would decide that such a power existed; and it was also believed that if Mr. Thurman and Mr. Bayard were on the Commission they would vote against such a proposition. The claim that there has, or could have been any bad faith in this matter is absurd.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

The Commission met at 10:15 this morning, owing to the compromise vote last evening at the adjournment, when neither 10 nor 10:30 would be accepted. When Mr. Evarts rose to speak the room seemed especially crowded, a great demand for admittance being made, and the number of ladies being considerably increased.

ARGUMENT OF MR. EVARTS.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMISSION: The general subject of controversy before the Commission is, how this Commission, under the powers conferred upon it, and in the discharge of the duty confided to it by an act of Congress under which it is organized, shall advise the two houses of Congress in the discharge of their duty, under the Constitution of the United States, in counting the votes of President and Vice President—what votes shall be counted for the State of Louisiana. The Constitution has undertaken to determine that the State shall have the power to appoint Electors as its Legislature may direct, and no authority or argument can disparage or overreach that right of the State. That right is in the State. It is not a gift from the Federal Government, for there was no Federal Government to give it. It is not carved out of any fund of power or right that the Federal Government possessed, for the Federal Government had no general fund of power or right out of which it could carve a gift to the State. The State of Louisiana stands in this behalf as one of the original 13 States stood. Whatever was the right of one of the original 13 States in the election of Washington, is the right of Louisiana now in the election of a President; and, therefore, it is not to be measured as a gift; not to be measured in its relation to any general fund of authority on the subject that the United States had, and which it has limited, but as one of the conditions, one of the original limitations, one of the original distributions of power out of which, and by which, combined, comes the Government of the United States, and exist the Governments of the States as members of the Union. This topic at once leads us to consider wherein the Constitution of the United States has established, and how it has distributed the authority of choosing a President of the United States; what part of it is administered and administrable as the action of the Federal Government; what part of it is administered and administrable as the part of the State action. In the matter and on the terms of the Constitution, is this demarkation to be drawn and ahered to, and in this regard, as well as in every other respect of power, are the maxims of the Constitution as to construction concerning the line drawn, to be observed as well as in every other? The Government confers nothing upon the States; the Government comes into existence by and through the States and their people, and the arrogation of authority is primary in the State and is in the General Government only by its allotment of the terms of the Constitution, and there is therefore the same method of construction and interpretation in drawing the line and in maintaining its defenses in this matter of election of President as in all others. Whatever the Federal Government has in this matter of election of a President, it has by force of terms in the Constitution. Whatever the State has, it has upon the same terms, and then the tenth amendment applies, and the ninth applies—that there is to be no disparagement of the rights that are arrogated by the rights that are conferred, and that whatever is not conferred upon the Federal Government by this Constitution, and is not forbidden to the States, is reserved to the State or to the people. Now, it is not for me to repeat the arguments made by my learned associates so well, and by me so far as I could aid them, in the general discussions which were presented under the Florida case. These general propositions were that the whole matter of creating the Electors belonged to the State; the whole matter of ascertaining, accrediting, and setting forward with credentials, belonged to the State so far as the text of the Constitution read, and that, whatever the statute of 1792 had sought to prescribe in the matter of these credentials, it was directory and for the convenience and instruction of the body that was to count the vote. As to the fact that it had not been a State, that the Elector was not an officer of the State, that in no very considerable sense could he be created an officer of the United States, that he was an Elector, having the right under the Constitution of the United States to vote for President, and that he was a representative Elector, was to be measured only to discern whether he was deputized to act as an agent, or whether he was accredited with the voting power to vote as an Elector having the suffrage in his hands. To say that he was a representative Elector because he comes to be an Elector in representation of and participation in the government of a State, amounts to nothing more than to say that you members of the two houses of Congress are representative legislators. You are representative legislators. You are legislators in a Government resting on the will of the people and upon its communicated authority to you as representatives; but you are not deputised to derive your instructions and authority from a principal at home. You are representatives of the legislative authority lodged theoretically in the people, and, in the theory of representation, possessed by you, in the same plenary power that the people themselves would have exercised it. It was then announced as our proposition that after the appointment of Electors, then the vote and title to vote, and the exercise of the right and performance of the duty to vote on the part of the Electors, had come under the exclusive dominion of the Federal Constitution, the representation, so far as it entered into the creation of a title and the conferring of the authority having been exhausted. Now, in the Florida case, as here, these considerations had their weight, and were accepted or declined by the different members of the Commission, according to the estimate of the Constitution and laws of their country. In that case, as in this, there were present before the Commission matters of consideration about which, as they were open entirely for your inspection, and necessarily form a part of your determination, there was no question; I mean the papers that were opened by the President of the Senate, according to the Constitution, in the presence of the two houses of Congress. They are before you under the law of 1877 as they were before that Assembly, in that presence under the Constitution without the law of 1877, and now the question as to what more is or can be before you is a question under the law of 1877, as interpreted by its own terms in the light of the Constitution of the United States. It has passed beyond dispute. We did not dispute it in the Florida case. But if we are to receive the intimation of Mr. Justice Bradley, it has passed beyond dispute in your own deliberations as receiving the concurrence of all, that you have the powers that the two houses have in the act and transaction of counting the votes and no other powers; not that you have the powers that the two houses of Congress together or separately have as the Legislature of the country; not that you have any of the powers that either of them separately has in respect to what is accredited to either of them separately in the Constitution outside of legislative power; you have no particle of any authority that is lodged in the two houses of Congress under any of the general grants of authority to them as the Legislature, or to either of them separately, except what is granted by the Constitution within the very terms of this article; that the transaction being completed in the States, they having forwarded their votes hither under such representation as brings them into the presence of the two houses of Congress, that their contents may be disclosed and acted upon; that whatever action thereupon proceeds by the two houses, there met, or by the two houses separating in the discharge of, and in the continued exercise of the function of counting the votes, this is passed over to you that your advice may be given to them as it would proceed out of their original, their independent deliberations and construction, if they had limited themselves to the conduct of the counting of the votes in the simple terms of the Constitution, and they then proceed to count. They count the vote. Having made a law unto themselves, which they cannot transcend without its repeal, that this instruction, as to what votes ought to be counted under the Constitution of the United States, they will act upon as determining what votes under the Constitution ought to be counted unless their united judgment shall contravene this great authority they have given to you.

A DEMOCRATIC CHANGE OF POSITION.

We insisted, therefore, in the Florida case, that one great consideration in determining what the powers of Congress were in this mere procedure was what the nature of the proceeding was, what the constitutional objects and solicitudes in providing for the transaction had indicated as the will of the people when they adopted the Constitution of the United States, and that were met by very learned and very authoritative statements from eminent lawyers. Mr. Field, in behalf of the House of Representatives, proposed to you that you had at least the powers of a court on quo warranto. Mr. O'Conor, with that accuracy and precision that proceed from his statements, demanded the same authority; insisted that otherwise the correction of frauds, the redress of violence, the curbing of the excess of authority would be result of the election in the State comports with the facts that he did not so certify, nor on the point that Brewster and Levisse came into the Electoral College, on the transaction preserved in the minutes of the Electoral College and presented here. If we look at the offers of proof we see that at once, so far from introducing, therefore, any element of proof that is to separate the Governor's certificate from the things certified, or in any disparage the Governor's right to certify under the Constitution of the United States, these offers of proof expressly concede that condition of things, and plant themselves wholly upon something antecedent in the State's transaction to this action of the Governor, and this action in the State which produces the recorded result on which the Governor must certify. In the first place, we were saved any question, and, I think, might have been saved any argument about Gov. Kellogg's being a de facto Governor, filling the office and performing its duties, for they offered under their first head to prove that said Kellogg was Governor de facto of said State during all the months of November and December, 1876, and then when you come to their offers concerning the disqualification of Levisse and of Brewster, found on the 17th page, you will observe that there is not the least proposition that on the 6th day of December, when these two men came into the office of Elector by the choice of the Electoral College, following the vacancy, they were under any disqualification whatever. The proposition is I read now from what is called here the fifth proposition—"That on the 7th day of November, A. D. Levisse, one of the offered College of Electors in Louisiana, was at the time of such election, a Court Commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana," and for Brewster in the same way. The offer of proof then falls entirely short of disparaging his capacity to receive an election on the 6th day of December, and the proof offered to counteract the transaction by which he came in through the vote of the Electoral College, as displayed in the certificate. Now, in regard to the substantive matters of proof, so far from being obliged to rest on the proposition, that there is no offer to intervene, that proof between the record result of the election and the Governor's certificate of that result as producing these Electors and no others, the offers of proof are affirmative to their proposition that that state of facts does exist, and is part of the things they are able and ready to prove. I ask attention to this principal offer of proof, which is as follows: It has been deliberately produced and made of record in that State that by the authority intrusted with the final act of evidence and certification, these Electors did receive a majority of the legal votes in the State of Louisiana. They say it was done in full faith and through all the steps and then done. The act was consummated, and you are relieved therefore from any disturbance of this definite and limited proposition, of whether it is competent for the two houses of Congress to penetrate the action of a State, and determine, first, whether it conforms to the real facts of the election as deducible through successive steps from the depositing of the votes in the ballot-boxes, and secondly, whether they conformed to legal authority.

THE GROUNDS OF OBJECTION ANALYZED.

It is necessary for us, then, before we can approach definitely the consideration of whether any of this proof can be offered, to understand at least what the laws of Louisiana are, and it will follow—if we have any right here to consider the conformity of the action of the canvassing officers, or any of the subordinate functionaries in the election, or any of the voters themselves, to that law—that we should see, at least, upon what statute or statutory enactments it is based that these objectors seek to base the question of the action had in these separate departments of the transaction. Now, I confess to an inability to understand that there should really exist any confusion on that subject, or as to the statutory enactments in force, on their face, governing this election. As to what took place on the 7th of November in the primary depositing of the votes, and concluding later in the year by the final result of the canvass certified and recorded, a little confusion, I am afraid, has been made out of the attempt to shorten a little the reprint so useful in all particulars, made under the direction of the Committee on the Session Laws of 1868, and in the acts of that session, are found two independent acts on independent subjects, both of which were in force until either or both of them were repealed. They were not inconsistent, and they were not in pari materia, unless in so far as that some portion of enactment that might have been included in the general law was not included in the special or particular law to which I shall call attention. The first of these acts is found on page 218 of the Session Laws of 1868, and is numbered 164. Its title is, "Relative to Elections in the State of Louisiana, and to Enforce Article 103 of the Constitution of the State." It is not any part of the law of 1868, but is a reproduction of certain sections of the Revised Statutes passed in 1870.

Commissioner Abbott said that counsel had suggested yesterday that the law of 1868 and the revision were precisely the same.

Mr. Evarts said that during his argument he would show exactly how the matter stood. Now, there is another law of 1868, the General Election law to enforce article 103 or the Constitution of the State. On page 245 (No. 193) is another act entitled, "Relative to Presidential Electors," that contains in its first section the entire distribution of this election under the General Election law, and says such elections shall be held and conducted in the manner and form provided by law for general State elections.

Mr. Evarts then read from the General Election law of the 19th of October, 1868, section 32, as follows:

"That in every year in which an election shall be held for Electors of President and Vice President of the United States, such elections shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, in accordance with the act of the Congress of the United States, approved Jan. 23, 1845, and such election shall be held and conducted in the manner and form provided by law for said elections."

Now, said Mr. Evarts, in this Presidential Electors Act there are two provisions which do bear on questions that we are to discuss, as to the proper method of carrying on, certifying, and canvassing the election held last November, if they were in force, and I will ask your attention to them. I will first read section 4, which is as follows:

"That immediately after the receipt of the return from each parish, or on the fourth Monday of November, if the returns should not sooner arrive, the Governor, in the presence of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and District Judge of the district in which the seat of government may be established, or any two of them, shall examine the returns and ascertain therefrom the seven persons who have been duly elected Electors."

Then there are certain administrative provisions, not important. Then the eighth section is as follows:

"That if any one or more of the Electors chosen by the people shall fail, from any cause whatever, to attend at the appointed place at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. of the day prescribed for their meeting, it shall be the duty of the other Electors immediately to proceed by authority to supply the vacancy or vacancies."

Now, our learned and ingenuous friend (Mr. Carpenter) argued that it was wholly immaterial to the practical result of this case whether you held that law was repealed or whether you held that it was in force. He said that if it was repealed so as to carry down the canvassing section, then section 8 being carried down the power to fill vacancies did not exist, and two vacancies were therefore left in the College of Electors, which, as he said, would be enough for his purpose, and that is as regards the latter proposition. But we are under no such limitation as that. By the subsequent laws, the canvassing section was repealed, and by no subsequent laws was the rest of the Electoral act affected. Now, that is the proposition which at least liberates us and this Commission from any confusion or from any resort to either of the horns of the dilemma. Why do we say this, and on what does our proposition rest? for it needs but to be stated to be understood, and the laws need but to be pointed out to carry the evidence of what the existing statutory law was in Louisiana in 1876. There came about, in 1870, a revision of the statutes of the State of Louisiana—not a repeal, not a re-enactment, but a reduction of the laws that were already understood to be in force, and in regard to which the last of the Legislature was to be impressed upon them that they were the laws in force—a transaction entirely similar to that which took place in Congress in the production of the Revised Statutes under which we now act. On this point I will read from a book published in 1870.

Commissioner Bradley interrupted counsel, and stated that he had the original publication, which the counsel could use if he chose.

Mr. Evarts said he would be very glad to avail himself of the volume, and would do so. He continued: In the first place there was a statute entitled "Elections." Then there comes after the general provisions about elections, grouped under this consolidated table of elections, a statute concerning contested elections, which in terms is referred to as the statute of 1855, page 408. This contested Election law is reprinted as a law already in existence.

Commissioner Thurman inquired if counsel was reading from the Revised Statutes.

Mr. Evarts replied that he was reading from the edition of 1875, which was the proper one.

Commissioner Thurman inquired it that was passed as one act.

Mr. Evarts replied that he understood it was. He then continued: Then we have another title in these Revised Statutes, separated 100 pages from the other, entitled "Presidential Electors," (on page 550,) which begins by reciting the acts of Congress, and then in 10 sections enumerates the provisions on that subject. Now, those two laws, being for our purposes the same as the two laws of 1868, were in force when these Revised Statutes came into operation, unless by and through repeal, or by the methods of legislation which operated repeal before these Revised Statutes went into operation, and the repeal of one or the other of them in some part had taken place. These were passed on the 14th of March, 1870, and, on the 16th of March, 1870, a law was passed, and is to be found in the first edition of this compilation.

Commissioner Edmunds enquired whether there was any law or provision in the Constitution of Louisiana which provided at what time the acts passed at the session should take effect?

Commissioner Bradley said that the acts themselves all state the time when they should go into effect.

Mr. Evarts said he did not understand that there was any general provision; but, as a matter of fact, the general declaration of the acts that they took effect from and after the time of their passage. Now, there was passed on the 16th of March, 1870, an act which is found in the session laws of that year, page 145, entitled "An act to regulate the conduct, and to maintain the freedom and purity of elections," prescribing the mode of making and designating the officers who shall make the returns thereof, and to prevent fraud, violence, intimidation, &c. The title of this act is the same as that of the Election act of 1868 in its general propositions to regulate elections and enforce article 103. Now, this act provides, at section 54, that the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, and John Lynch and T. C. Anderson, or a majority of them shall be the Returning Officers for all elections in the State, and there is at section 85, the final section of the act, the repealing clause—"that all laws or parts of laws contrary to the provisions of this act, and all laws relating to the same subject matter are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect from and after its passage." Now, what were then under that repeal? In the first place, upon general principles, all of the Revised Statutes that came under the title of "elections" enforcing this provision No. 103, and all parts of other laws that were within the purview of the conduct of elections held in this State, and no other parts of said laws were repealed by that section. You have then, in the general start of the section, a provision that all elections for State and parish officers, and members of Congress, shall be held on the first Monday of November, "and said election shall be styled the general election." Now, section 33 of this act (which is the equivalent of section 32 in the General Election act of 1868, and is identical with section 1 of the Electoral act of 1868) is reproduced as section 35. In that we have a provision that all general elections, so called, shall take place on the first Monday of November; that the election for Electors shall take place on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November according to the provisions of the act of Congress; and then there is a provision (as a section coming after the description of general elections, and after the section that is relative to Presidential elections, which is the fifty-fourth section) that the Canvassing Board shall be Returning Officers, not for all general elections, but for all elections held in that State, and governed by the necessary statutory construction—the elections that had been mentioned preceding, some of which were called elections of State officers, members of Congress, &c., and called general elections, and one of which was called the Presidential election. Now, the election of 1872 was held under that law. Did anybody in Louisiana conceive that the Governor was to canvass? Some question was raised whether the act of 1872, which was passed on the 20th of November, to provide another Returning Board, was in operation, but the courts of the State, to the auth rities have been proposed for your Honors' consideration by my learned associates, dispose of this question as to who were the Returning Board and the Canvassing Board—being one and the same thing—in November, 1872, prior to the 20th of that month. Therefore the whole operation of this act of 1870, in repeal of this or that portion of the Independent acts, the General Election acts, and the Presidential Election act, (which was not an act concerning their election, but concerning the discharge of their duties giving them nothing but the statute apparatus,) remained unvaried except the Canvassing Board. Now, whether the Canvassing Board of 1868 was the same or not is not material. Now comes the act of 1872, which is reproduced.

Commissioner Bradley Right there, if your attention has not been called to it, let me state that the digest of the statutes made immediately after the revision and publication in January, 1871, contains the text of the revision itself under the title of "Elections," and the title of "Presidential Electors." The digest is made by John Ray, under the direction of the Committee of Revision, and in that digest, under the head of "Elections," he inserts the same title that the revision contains, with the exception of the Returning Board, which seems to indicate the impression of the profession at the time.

Mr. Evarts—I thank you for the reference. In resuming his argument he said: I now contend, however, that the section relating to the duties of a Canvassing Board regarding Presidential Electors, was repealed by the act of 1870, and the rest of the statute, which had nothing to do with their election, but only with their conduct as Electors, if they were elected, was left standing. In this judgment of the statutes of Louisiana, kindly given me by Mr. Justice Bradley, on page 356, is found the Electoral law, and it is distributed along its various sections, and the act upon which it was supposed to rest. The first section is attributed to the act of 1868, and is substantially the same section as is found in 1864. The second section is attributed to the act of 1868, and the third the same, and in the fourth, which is a provision concerning the Returning Board, it gives the section that makes the Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, and Lynch and Anderson a Returning Board, attributes that to the act of 1870, and then it goes on resuming at the fifth section its attribution to the act of 1868, and in the sixth section is reproduced the provision about Electors filling vacancies. This is a digest, not a re-enactment, published under the authority of the State in 1870. It is very apparent that this is no new construction upon the force of the repealing act. It is the published construction in the authorized publication of the statutes, in the form of a digest, followed by the courts and accepted by the profession, and the novelty is in the stress that is here made for the first time upon this point, which seeks to produce a collapse of statutory law in order to destroy the election. Did any of these eminent lawyers who attended in New-Orleans during the month of November, suggest that Gov. Kellogg ought to canvass these votes of Presidential Electors? But now the vice, the fatal, the incurable wound of this election, they say, is that Gov. Kellogg did not canvass. Now, the act of 1872 takes up this whole subject and substitutes itself for the act of 1870, and repeals all existing regulations that properly are, in the very matter of the conduct and regulations of elections in general, and of special provisions found in any other act, at variance with itself, its forms, its methods, and its agents concerning all elections held in the State. But the act of 1870 had already extruded the section of the election law that related to canvassing, and extruded that alone, and left standing the clause that relates to the conduct of the Electoral College, as I was explaining in filling vacancies. Now I have satisfied your Honors that, not only was it wholly immaterial which of Mr. Carpenter's views you adopted, but that it was wholly immaterial if you adopted them both, for the subsequent legislation had left them in this shape—that

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Feb. 15.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate, the bill to provide for the transfer of a piece of land in the Wallabout Bay to the city of Brooklyn was passed. A resolution was agreed to allowing the Electoral Commission to occupy the Senate chamber in the evening. Mr. Windom made a statement of the condition of the appropriation bills, showing that Congress was behind in its work, and that an extra session might be necessary. The bill for the support of the District Government was amended and passed. The consideration of the Pacific Railway Sinking Fund bill was then resumed. Pending discussion thereon the Senate took a recess until morning.

In the House, Mr. Whitthorne's amendment to the Naval Appropriation bill, providing for a commission to decide upon the future naval policy of the United States, was adopted as an independent section; and the consideration of the bill having been finished it was passed. A Message from the President vetoing the bill perfecting the revision of the laws was sustained, and the objectionable feature having been eliminated, the bill was passed. The bill to ratify the agreement with the Sioux was also passed.

SENATE.

The Senate reassembled at 10 A. M., and immediately took another recess until 12 o'clock.

THE WALLABOUT BAY BILL PASSED.

Upon reassembling at noon Mr. CHAGIN, of New-Hampshire, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the House bill to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New-York, to the City of Brooklyn. Passed. It authorizes the President to appoint three Commissioners to arrange equitable terms for the conveyance to the City of Brooklyn of that piece of land partly under water, situate in Wallabout Bay and fronting 580 feet on Flushing avenue, 1,650 feet on Clinton avenue, and 1,475 feet on Washington avenue. The Commissioners are to report their conclusions as to the terms and conditions of sale to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall transmit the same to Congress at the next session for ratification.

THE MEXICAN AWARDS.

Mr. CONKLING called up the Senate bill to provide for the distribution of awards made by the convention between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, and said the statement made yesterday as to fraud in these awards was withdrawn. It having been ascertained that the matter had been investigated and settled.

Mr. STEVENSON, of Kentucky, objected to the bill, and said a distinguished citizen of Alabama had informed him that there was fraud in the award.

Mr. CONKLING said he had no idea of pressing the bill now, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky, but he hoped the gentleman making the charge would take steps to substantiate it as soon as possible. The bill was then laid over.

THE SILVER COMMISSION.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, submitted a concurrent resolution providing that the Silver Commission created by the joint resolution of June 15, 1876, shall be allowed until Feb. 24, 1877, to submit their report. Agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN, of Illinois, gave notice that he would call up the bill now on the calendar for the remonetisation of the silver dollar at the first opportunity.

THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION TO SIT IN THE SENATE CHAMBER.

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, submitted a resolution allowing the Electoral Commission to occupy the Senate Chamber for its sittings in the evening after the Senate had taken a recess for the day. Agreed to. In submitting the resolution, Mr. Hamlin said he did so at the request of the members of the Commission, as there were no fixtures for lighting the Supreme Court room now used by the Commission.

THE SUPPORT OF THE DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

The morning hour having expired, the CHAIR laid before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts so as to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the indebtedness due the Government by Pacific Railroad companies, but on motion of Mr. SPENCER, of Alabama, the unfinished business was laid aside, and the House bill for the support of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, was taken up.

The Senate Committee on the District of Columbia reported an amendment to strike out of the House bill the clause taxing "land outside of the Cities of Washington and Georgetown used solely for agricultural purposes $1 on each $100 of the assessed value thereof," so that all real and personal property in the District shall be taxed $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value, except property of $1 for agricultural lands and $1 50 for city property. After some debate the amendment was agreed to—yeas 34, nays 19.

An amendment reported by the District Committee, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to advance to the District Commissioners, between July 1 and Nov. 1, 1877, such sums, not to exceed $500,000, as may be required for the payment of interest on the old funded debt, and for the current expenses of the District Government—the Treasury to be reimbursed out of the revenues of the District—was agreed to. Various other amendments reported by the District Committee were agreed to.

CONDITION OF THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Pending discussion, Mr. WRIGHT, of Iowa, demanded the regular order of business—being the bill in regard to the Pacific Railroad sinking fund. A long discussion ensued as to the order of business, during which, Mr. SARGENT, of California, said the Committee on Appropriations would soon press the appropriation bills, and they would antagonize anything which might be before the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, spoke of the condition of the appropriation bills, and said the Pension bill was the only one which had passed and become a law. The Indian, Fortification, and Military Academy bills were in conference. The Consular and Diplomatic bill had passed both houses, and it was now awaiting the action of the House on the Senate amendments. The Legislative, Judicial, and Executive, and the Post Office bills had been reported to the Senate by the committee, but could not be acted upon because there was no money to print them. The Deficiency bill had passed the House, but had not been acted on by the Senate committee on account of there being no money to print it as passed. The Sundry Civil, Army, and Navy bills were yet to be acted upon by the House of Representatives; there were only 14 working days of this session left, and the obstruction as to the public business was not a very flattering one. The cause of delay in acting upon the Appropriation bills had been the deficiency in the appropriation for public printing. The bill to supply that deficiency passed yesterday, and now awaited the action of the President. In a couple of days the Legislative and Post Office bills could be printed and ready for action, and the committee would press their consideration. The bill making appropriation for public printing as it passed last year did not appropriate sufficient money to carry on the business, as was then stated in the Senate, and it was on account of that deficiency that the public business was now delayed and an extra session of Congress made probable.

After some further discussion, Mr. WRIGHT withdrew his demand for the regular order, with the understanding that the District Tax bill should be disposed of to-day. He gave notice that to-morrow he would insist upon a vote upon the Railroad Sinking-fund bill, which would come up as the unfinished business.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BILL.

The discussion upon the bill for the support of the Government of the District of Columbia was continued at great length, the pending question being on the amendments of Mr. Kernan, exempting from taxation property actually occupied and used for educational purposes. The debate was mainly in regard to exempting religious and educational institutions from taxation, Messrs. INGALLS, CAMERON of Pennsylvania, CLAYTON, and ALCORN, speaking in opposition thereto, and Messrs. DAWES, KERNAN, SAULSBURY, and MERRIMON, in favor thereof. The amendment of Mr. Kernan was then agreed to —yeas, 33; nays, 19.

Other amendments exempting the Louise Home and the works of art in the Corcoran Gallery, as well as the building, from taxation, were agreed to. The bill was then read a third time and passed—yeas 29, nays 12.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD SINKING-FUND BILL.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts so as to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the indebtedness due the Government by the Pacific Railroad Companies.

Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, submitted an amendment to the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads, so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to carry to the credit of the sinking fund for the Central Pacific and Union Pacific Companies the amount which may be due them for transportation, &c., as provided in the bill of the committee, and each of the companies shall pay in proportion to their respective indebtedness to the United States, in semi-annual installments, on the 1st of April and October in each year, commencing with the 1st of October next, and concluding with a final and full payment on the 1st of October, 1905, such sums as shall be ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the provisions of the act, to be necessary and sufficient, together with the interest thereon when added to the other sums to the credit of said sinking fund, to pay off and extinguish the Government bonds advanced to them, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from their respective dates, up to the 1st of October, 1905. Interest on all sums placed to the credit of the sinking fund shall be credited and added thereto semi-annually at the rate of 6 per cent.; provided, however, that on the failure or refusal of either of said companies to comply with the act for the period of six months, the provisions thereof shall become inoperative as to such defaulting company, and the rights and powers of the United States in relation thereto under the original acts shall be in full force and effect. The amendment further provides that the payments made in pursuance thereof shall be in lieu of all other payments and requirements under existing law. Ordered to be printed.

The Senate then, at 5 o'clock, took a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 10 o'clock this morning, and took a recess until 11 o'clock.

THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On reassembling at 11 o'clock the House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MILLS, of Texas, in the chair, on the Naval Appropriation bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, of Tennessee, moved to reduce the appropriation for the Bureau of Steam Engineering from $800,000 to $700,000, but subsequently withdrew the motion.

When the end of the bill was reached Mr. WHITTHORNE offered, as an independent section, the amendment authorizing the appointment of a commission to decide and report upon the future naval policy of the United States, said commission to consist of the Admiral of the Navy, the General of the Army, two naval officers to be appointed by the President, two Senators, and three members of the House.

Mr. CONGER raised the objection that the amendment changed existing law, and was not in the direction of economy.

The CHAIR overruled the point of order, holding that there was nothing in the amendment changing existing law, and nothing on the face of the amendment which made an appropriation of money.

Mr. CONGER appealed from the decision of the Chair, pending which the committee rose.

After the introduction of several bills, and the transaction of some other business, the House again went into Committee of the Whole, and resumed consideration of the Naval Appropriation bill.

The appeal from the decision of the Chair, in regard to the amendment for the appointment of a commission, was withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, moved to amend so that no expense should be incurred by the Government by reason of such commission. Adopted.

Mr. KILBURN, of Maryland, offered a substitute for Mr. Whitthorne's amendment, providing that the commission shall consist of nine members, namely, two Senators, three members of the House, and four officers of the Navy, two of whom shall be officers of the line not below the rank of commander; one a chief engineer of the rank of Captain, and one a naval constructor not below the rank of Captain, who may be selected either from the active or the retired list of the Navy. Rejected, 65 to 25.

On motion of Mr. BEEBE an amendment was agreed to providing that all the expenses incurred by the commission shall be borne by the members thereof.

Mr. WHITTHORNE'S amendment was then adopted.

Mr. BEEBE offered a resolution directing the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to reduce the aggregate appropriations of the bill to $9,000,000. He was opposed to appropriating $12 000,000, part of which must be expended by an officer of the Navy, Isaiah Hanscom, who had been declared by the House last year as a corrupt man.

Mr. CONGER defended the Secretary of the Navy and Admiral Porter. He could understand why the Democratic Party had made the attack on those gentlemen last year; but now the election was over, and he did not see why the attack was renewed.

The resolution was rejected. The committee then rose and the bill was passed.

A PRESIDENTIAL VETO SUSTAINED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a Message from the President vetoing the bill perfecting the revision of the laws of the United States. His objection is to the section which directs the Clerk of the House of Representatives to select one newspaper in each of the States and Territories in which all treaties and laws of the United States that may be ordered for publication shall be published.

Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky, moved to sustain the veto, and said that he would, as soon as possible, report back the bill with the objectionable feature removed. The veto was sustained—yeas 211, nays 1.

Mr. DURHAM then reported back the bill, leaving out the section objected to by the President, and it was passed.

THE DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR BILL.

On motion of Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, some of the Senate amendments to the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bill were agreed to, and some non-concurred in.

THE SIOUX AGREEMENT.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the Senate bill to ratify an agreement with certain bands of Sioux Indians, and also with the northern bands of Arapahoes and Cheyennes.

Mr. MILLS, of Texas, moved an amendment providing that nothing in the act should be construed as authorizing the removal of Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory. The amendment was agreed to and the bill passed.

UNION PACIFIC BRIDGE TOLLS.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RANNEY, of Missouri, in the chair, on the bill limiting rates of tolls and charges for crossing over the bridge constructed by the Union Pacific Railroad across the Missouri, at Omaha, Neb. The bill provides that the Government Directors of said railroad company shall inquire into and fix the rates for transportation across said bridge.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Missouri, on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, offered, as a substitute, a bill fixing the rate of toll at $5 for each car, and 25 cents for each passenger.

Without having disposed of the bill the committee rose.

THE MONETARY COMMISSION.

On motion of Mr. WILLARD, of Michigan, the House concurred in the Senate resolution allowing the Monetary Commission until Feb. 24 to make their report.

The House then at 4:40 o'clock took a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

A SERGEANT MISUSING HIS CLUB.

SERGT. THOMPSON ON TRIAL FOR STRIKING MICHAEL CANNON—TESTIMONY OF W. S. ANDREWS AND OTHERS.

Sergt. Theron T. Thompson, of the Fourth Police Precinct, was arraigned at the Tombs Police Court yesterday on complaint of W. S. Andrews, Secretary of the National Democratic Committee, for having on the 13th inst. struck in the face with his clenched fist Michael Cannon, who was at the time under the influence of liquor, three severe blows, and knocking the said Cannon down each time. Mr. Andrews conducted the prosecution, Mr. Oliver appeared for the defense, and Charles F. MacLean watched the proceedings in behalf of the Police Commissioners. Mr. Andrews testified that on last Tuesday evening he was in the vicinity of the Post Office when his attention was attracted by a crowd around a Fourth avenue car which was proceeding up town; Michael Cannon and another man were in angry conversation with the driver; Sergt. Thompson crossed from the sidewalk to the middle of the street, where the crowd was assembled; Mr. Andrews stated that the Sergeant promptly seized Cannon by the collar of the coat, swung him round, and struck him a blow with his clenched fist in the face, knocking Cannon down. The Sergeant next pulled the man on his feet, and knocked him down with his fist again, repeating the blow and knock-down a third time, and from the motion the Sergeant made with his foot, the witness concluded that he was kicking the man on the ground. Cannon offered no resistance, and was evidently under the influence of liquor. The Sergeant at last desisted from beating the man, when Cannon walked away with his friend up Park row; the Sergeant made no arrests; when opposite the Staats Zeitung Building the witness noticed the Sergeant approach O'Hearn, who was in Cannon's company; Sergt. Thompson pushed O'Hearn, and aimed a blow at his face, without, however, striking him; at this time Officer Canovan arrived, and he arrested Cannon and O'Hearn; the witness followed to the station-house, and when the Sergeant arrived with the prisoners he laughed aloud, but made no complaint; Officer Canovan charged them with being drunk and disorderly, and they were locked up in the cells. The main facts in the witness' testimony were corroborated by J. N. Hubbard, of No. 18 Murray street; F. H. Knox, No. 236 West Fifteenth street, and Mr. Kesse, of No. 21 Bleecker street.

The defense called John W. Irwin, the conductor of the Fourth avenue car, who testified that Cannon and O'Hearn entered his car while under the influence of liquor; they were acting in a disorderly manner and he stopped the car to put them off; Sergt. Thompson then called Sergt. Thompson; the Sergeant, the witness said, took hold of Cannon and shoved him away from the horses, when Cannon fell down; the Sergeant placed him on his feet and advised him to go home, or else he would be locked up; Cannon became very abusive, and attempted to strike the Sergeant, who pushed him away and he again fell down; the witness did not see the officer use any unnecessary violence. Sergeant T. T. Thompson, the defendant, denied having struck Cannon. He only used the necessary force to take him away from standing in front of the horses. Justice Kilbreth stated that there was a no iota of evidence; but that enough had been determined to put the Sergeant on his defense. There was a probable cause, and enough of evidence to justify the court in holding the defendant. He would, therefore, hold him to answer, but Sergeant Thompson being a public officer, the court stated that the bail was fixed at $500. The case will be tried in the Court of General Sessions.

THE TROTTING SEASON OF 1877.

The Board of Stewards of the National Trotting Association for the North-eastern District held a late session on Wednesday night, but beyond making arrangements for the trotting purses, as reported in yesterday's TIMES, nothing was accomplished. The effort to establish running races on the same tracks proved a failure, as it was found that such an attempt would seriously jeopardize the trotting interests. The trotting races will take place at Cleveland, Ohio, during the week beginning on July 14; at Buffalo, July 31; Rochester, Aug. 7; Utica, Aug. 14; Springfield, Mass., and Poughkeepsie, Aug. 21; Hartford, Aug. 28, and Fleetwood, Park, Sept. 4. The entries to Fleetwood will close on Aug. 20. A typographical error in the programme as published in yesterday's TIMES, made the second purse read $2,000, instead of $3,000. The aggregate amount of the purses is limited to not less than $6,000, nor more than $24,000.

LAW REPORTS.

A CONVICTION AND A COURT SCENE.

THE CONVICTION OF JOHN S. BRUSH OF FORGERY—A WIFE OVERCOME WITH GRIEF, BUT RECOVERS SUFFICIENTLY TO SAY NAUGHTY WORDS.

There was an affecting scene in the Court of Over and Terminer yesterday, at the close of the trial of John S. Brush, who was convicted of forgery. Brush was indicted jointly with one John S. Carpenter for forging the signature of Sargent & Co. to four checks, on the Importers' and Traders' National Bank, which were presented to the bank on Nov. 19, 1876. The amounts of the checks aggregated $1,600. The trial yesterday was on an indictment of forgery and uttering a check for $400. The principal witness against the accused was one Anson Hutton, who had been in the employ of Sargent & Co. for three years or more. Hutton testified that he had made the acquaintance of Brush at a boarding-house in Greenwich street. Brush said he was going into business in California. He offered Hutton double the wages that the latter was receiving from Sargent & Co., to induce him to consent to accompany him. Brush said he liked the form of check which Sargent & Co. used, and he asked Hutton to steal one of the paid-up checks for him. Hutton did so and handed the check to Brush, who kept it for three days before returning it. Hutton's suspicions were aroused, and he asked Brush if he was going to use it in order to forge the firm's name. Brush admitted that was his purpose. Hutton continued in the firm's employment, but concealed the fact of stealing the paid-up check. Carpenter, who is accused of having been an accomplice of Brush, was arrested while coming out of the latter's house. Brush put in no defense, and Judge Brady, who presided at the trial, charged the jury that though Hutton was an accomplice, his testimony was admissible, and not having been contradicted, the jury might convict the prisoner if they believed Hutton's testimony. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty. Assistant District Attorney Russell, who represented the prosecution, then moved for judgment, and made several statements to the court, which were not in evidence, to the effect that Brush had been known as a forger for years, and was a man of bad character. William F. Kintzing, who appeared for the prisoner, objected to the making of these statements as being unwarranted and uncalled for.

The prisoner was then called to the bar and in response to questions said he was 34 years old, and never learned any mechanical trade. When asked what he had to say why sentence should not be pronounced against him, he said, in a voice almost stifled with sobs: "I am not guilty; I am innocent of the charge." Judge Brady addressed the prisoner, saying the jury had found him guilty, and the court was obliged to accept their conclusion as the just and proper one. The prisoner had shown that he was respectably connected and had never been convicted before. The crime of forgery, said Judge Brady, was, however, becoming too prevalent, and it was necessary that some check should be put to it. He deemed it his duty to sentence the prisoner to the full term, five years at hard labor in the State Prison. His good behavior 16 months of this time would be remitted.

The prisoner's wife had sat beside Brush during the trial, watching eagerly every bit of testimony, and listening with painful intentness to the remarks of counsel and of the court. When Judge Brady inflicted the sentence she fell back ward in her seat as though thunderstruck, and a moment later was sobbing vehemently. She went afterward to that portion of the court where Hutton, the principal witness was sitting, and in a voice choked with sobs, exclaimed: "You are a liar, and you swiffed for this." Her husband tried to console her, but in vain, and she followed the prisoner out of the court-room moaning piteously.

CHURCH MUSIC AND DISCORD.

THE ORGANIST AND CHOIR OF THE CHURCH OF THE INCARNATION — AN OPINION CONCERNING MUSICAL COMMITTEES.

A suit in which some funny disclosures are made was brought to trial before Chief Justice Curtis and a jury in Part III. of the Superior Court yesterday. Edward Schenck, the auctioneer, appears as the plaintiff in the suit, and the Church of the Incarnation is the defendant. On Feb. 1, 1875, it seems Schenck made a contract to supply the church with an organist and a quartet choir to sing in the church for one year from May 1, 1875. Schenck says he fulfilled his contract, and he asks for $3,000 which it was agreed he should have. The church sets up in answer that it made an agreement with Schenck, but that it was part of the agreement that the choir and organist should be suitable and be duly skilled and competent to conduct the musical part of the services of the church, and that Schenck should cause such musical services "to be carried on and conducted in a quiet, orderly, and suitable way," and with suitable skill and competency on the part of the performers. Instead of this, the defendant says, the soprano in the choir was incompetent for the purpose, and so the four singers "did not constitute a skilled choir," Schenck himself, it is alleged, interfered with the management and conduct of the musical part of the service in such a way as to embarrass and annoy the organist and others. The church dismissed the soprano, and then dismissed the others of the choir and the organist, then rehired the discharged persons excepting the soprano, in whose place another lady was put. Schenck objected on the theory that he has to pay the artists, they having been hired by him. The church sets up, however, that the artists have been paid. Mr. Schenck was put on the stand as the first witness for the plaintiff. He was rather jocose and demonstrative in giving his testimony, especially on cross-examination. He mentioned a call of the Musical Committee of the church on him, and of their desire to get rid of a tenor. The matter was ended by Mr. W. B. Clerke, the Chairman of the committee, buying off the tenor's claim. Mr. Schenck contributed some money for the purpose. The committee then wanted to get rid of the choir. "I said to them," observed Mr. Schenck, stretching out his arms in a protecting manner, "'Gentlemen, easiest thing in the world, gentlemen. Just pay them, only pay them.' 'But they won't go!' said all of them." The committee, it seemed, afterward inumated a desire of a different kind. "They came to ask me whether I wouldn't withdraw, and I said 'Not any,'" said the witness, smiling benignantly upon the jury. The jurymen smiled rather audibly, and the witness, encouraged, went on to say there had been about 40 calls in the church since the beginning. "They have a new choir," said Mr. Schenck; "every year. The Musical Committees don't know anything about music. The fact is, they ain't supposed to know anything about music."

Mme. Maretzek was then called as a witness, and testified as to the compass of the disobarged soprano. Several other witnesses were called for the plaintiff, and then the defendant's counsel made his opening speech for the defense. He claimed that the soprano did not sing well in the choir, and that Mr. Schenck as a musical conductor was offensive. The latter, suggested the counsel, might do very well in wielding the baton of an auctioneer, but was not so great a success as the wielder of a conductor's baton. Schenck was in the organ-loft and gave his directions, in the tone in which he was accustomed to say, "going, going, gone." Again, the counsel thought it was hardly edifying for the congregation, during the church services, to behold the bald head of an elderly gentleman bobbing up and down in the loft and giving the directions "louder, lower," &c., to the artists. Such her witnesses were then examined with a view of showing that Mr. Schenck's manner of conducting the musical services was annoying. The case is still on. S. S. Rowland and Freeman J. Fithian appear for the plaintiff, and John E. Parsons for the defendant.

A DAUGHTER SURPRISES HER MOTHER.

Mrs. Gertrude Schneller appeared before Justice Flammer at the Washington Place Police Court yesterday and preferred a complaint of petit larceny against her daughter Gertrude. Mrs. Schneller testified that her daughter ran away from home, and stole from her a brooché shawl valued at $15, and $6 in money. The defendant, who is a very attractive young woman, on being called up, admitted her guilt, and burst into tears. On being asked her name she said it was Gertrude Hunt, which rather astonished her mother, who was still more surprised when her daughter accounted for her change of name by saying that she was married. Mrs. Schneller then regretted her action in making the complaint against her daughter, and wished to withdraw the charge, but the Magistrate decided to accede to this proposition, and the accused was held for trial in $500 bail.

THE SUTTON PERJURY CASE.

The trial of James Sutton, President of the Aldine Publishing Company, charged with perjury in swearing to a greatly exaggerated list of losses by a fire on June 24, 1875, was resumed before Recorder Hackett yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Assistant District Attorney Herring, in proving the case for the prosecution, called a number of additional experts in the production of chromos and electrotypes, who testified that the estimates of loss sworn to by Mr. Sutton were largely in excess of what they should have been. The evidence was simply corroborative of that given on the previous day, and presented no features of interest to the general public.

A REMARKABLE ASSAULT.

James Moylan brought suit in the Marine Court against Henry Lemken to recover $3,000 damages for an aggravated assault and battery, and the case was tried before Judge McAdam, in Marine Court, Chambers, yesterday. The defendant did not put in an appearance, and the plaintiff was put under oath and told his story. It appears that he was in a South street saloon several weeks ago and rent his trousers. He was bending over, looking at the floor, when the defendant, who was slightly under the influence of liquor, seized a red-hot poker and ran it through the rent into the plaintiff's person. Moylan said he was confined to his bed for three weeks, and that he suffered excruciating pain. On asking Lemken why he had made the assault, he was told by the latter that he "wanted to make a Freemason of him." Judge McAdam thought the imitation was rather too severe, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for the whole amount claimed.

BODY AGAINST TILDEN.

NOTICE OF A MOTION TO DISMISS THE COMPLAINT—CONCLUSION OF BOODY'S EVIDENCE—HIS OVERLOOKED CLAIMS ON THE POOL.

The trial of the suit brought by Henry H. Boody against Samuel J. Tilden and others, to recover alleged overpayments of supposed profits in "the Chicago-Galena Pool," was resumed yesterday morning in the Special Term of the Superior Court, before Judge Sedgwick.

In answer to a question by Judge Sedgwick as to the probable duration of the case, Mr. Niles gave notice that on the conclusion of the presentation of the case for the plaintiff he should move to dismiss. Mr. Niles then resumed the cross-examination of Mr. Boody, who went into details in reference to the manner in which the accounts of the pool were kept. Mr. Niles then introduced printed reports of the transactions at the Stock Exchange relating to the sales of Chicago and Galena Union stock from March 26, 1864, to and through the panic in the money market occuring soon after that date, for the purpose of comparing the reports of the quotations with the testimony given by witness in relation to the prices paid by him and others during the period stated, the object of Mr. Niles being to show that witness and others with whom he had arranged to buy this stock had apparently charged higher for the stock obtained by them than what the stock was actually selling for.

Mr. Hawkins said that, if this was apparently the case, it was not so in reality, so far as Mr. Boody was concerned, as he had charged the pool simply what he paid for the stock, and that if there was any overcharge, it was a matter to be explained by other purchasers for the pool on whom Mr. Boody had to rely.

Witness resumed, testifying that he had in the pool about $700,000 of his own money, including moneys he had on deposit or had control of as his own for the time being; that he was active agent by which those in it wanted to make money as well as to effect the consolidation of the Chicago and North-western and the Chicago and Galena Union Companies; at the time of the pool transactions, Mr. Perry H. Smith, as Vice President, had charge of the Chicago and North-western Railway in the West, and Mr. George Bunday was the Superintendent of the railway; witness had had an arrangement with Mr. George M. Bartholomew, one of the members of the pool, who had been joined as a defendant in this suit; Bartholomew had paid him $5,000, and he had given him a receipt in full of all demands; this receipt was given by witness since he made a claim in the Fall of 1875 against the parties to the pool, and before he began the present suit; witness had not made any claim upon other members of the pool from August, 1874, until the Fall of 1875, for the reason that he did not know during that interval that they had received overpayments, and that the pool had not been charged with debts of $12,000 and $60,000 for which it was liable; Mr. Tilden was present at most, if not all, the interviews had in reference to a consolidation of the Chicago and North-western and the Chicago and Galena Union Companies; witness would have obeyed directions of Mr. Ogden in relation to legitimate dispositions of funds held by witness as banker for the Chicago and North-western Company.

To Mr. Hawkins—There were accounts which had not been examined which should have been examined in order to have had a strictly accurate statement; these accounts included a private Galena account, an account in Pittsburg and Fort Wayne stock, and an interest account; the aggregate interest paid by witness on obtaining stock for the pool and not charged against the pool was $11,873 37; there was also credited to the pool, by error, $17,000 on account of stocks on which the pool had no claim, they being stocks under the private control of witness, and there had been a transient absence of other stock credited to the pool which should not have been; the book-keeper, by mistake, credited other shares of stock belonging to witness as belonging to the pool; witness' loss of $71,500 during the panic in order to carry the pool through was not considered when witness and Young were making the books, and the pool got the full benefit of that amount, which really belonged to witness; Mr. Ogden had told witness that the pool must be carried through at all hazards, as its failure would be ruinous, and this induced witness to use his private means to make the pool a success; witness had no knowledge of the Board of Directors of the Chicago and North-western authorizing Mr. Ogden to permit witness to use the funds of the company in furthering the projects of the pool.

After the witness had answered a few additional questions his testimony was announced to be concluded, and an adjournment was taken to 11 o'clock this morning, when further evidence is to be offered on the part of plaintiff.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Barrett.

Smith vs. Smith.—Decree of divorce vacated, with costs, and the defendant may answer.

Hoffman vs. Burke.—The appeal, in my judgment, is frivolous and for the purpose of delay. If the defendant has been in good faith, he should before moving have paid up all back taxes. He neither offers to pay the taxes nor to give security. The motion is denied, with $10 costs, and the stay vacated.

Beardsley vs. Cashion.—Leave to issue execution granted.

Wilson vs. Grotchers.—Motion granted and judgment ordered.

Smith vs. Smith.—Counsel fee of $200 and alimony $25 per week.

Langley vs. Thurber.—This is hardly a case for the short cause calendar. Motion denied.

Lange et al. vs. Ballard.—We cannot direct satisfaction of the judgment to be entered. The order, if any, should simply note in the judgment book the fact of a discharge upon surrender on a certain date.

Jarvis vs. Furman.—Default entered, but costs (as agreed,) but the judgment must stand as security, with leave, however, to the defendant to apply for a reference and the settlement from the whole or any part of the property, upon giving persons security or a special lien upon part of the realty, or upon fresh papers showing clearly and convincingly that a release of the lien of the judgment will not impair the plaintiff's security.

Stimpson vs. Brown.—Application denied. The Special Term has no jurisdiction.

Hartfield vs. Terry.—Application denied.

Collender vs. Phelan.—Order granted.

In the matter of One Hundred and Seventy-fifth street and One Hundred h street.—The proofs as to the Surveyor's fees seem to be clear; but the Controller's objections to the clerks' fees and to room rent papers to be well taken. The objections must be met by proof.

In the matter of Beekman.—Report confirmed and Trustee appointed.

Hanrahan vs. Hanrahan.—This application is denied. The order to show cause as to alimony and counsel fee is unnecessary. The plaintiff may move on notice of motion. The injunction could not prudently be granted on these papers.

Smith vs Jones.—The authority of an attorney extends to the management of the cause in all the exigencies which arise during its progress. He cannot compromise the claim of his client, however, nor can he release the cause of action or satisfy a judgment in his client's favor without payment in the absence of special authority. There is no implication or authority to do acts of this character from his appointment as attorney in the case, and a party dealing with him is bound to take notice that they are not within the scope of his authority. (See 63 N. Y., p. 619; 45 N. Y., pp. 628, 655; 6 Cow., 365, Clarke's Chancery, 321.) The defendant fails to recognize the distinction between the attorney's power to discontinue the action and his authority to discharge the cause of action itself. Motion denied.

West vs. Horse.—Motion to vacate arrest denied.

Porter vs. Davenport.—Motion granted unless within two days the plaintiff serves an amended summons, allowing the defendant "six days" to answer instead of "two." No costs.

McCallum vs. Simon.—Motion granted; each side must hand in a proposed order and I will determine which is correct.

Rhoades vs. Foster.—See indorsement on papers.

Hebbard vs. Brisbill.—Motion to compel third person to pay over. Granted.

Mogit vs. Davidson.—Motion denied without costs.

Black vs. Kalkbrieck.—The defendant should have notice of the application for the order requiring the third persons to pay over.

Bamberger vs. Stern.—Motion to resettle order denied. The affidavit of Raphael Stern will be rejected for three reasons: First, because not served with the motion papers; second, because not responsive to the plaintiff's affidavits; third, because irrelevant. (4 Wend. 317; 21 How. 187; 45 N. Y. 68; 10 Box. 369.)

Cuiller vs. Bassier.—The denial in the answer is in one of the forms allowed by the Code, (sec. 149,) and I cannot try the issues upon affidavits. (45 N. Y. 281, 463; 6 Hun. 18.)—Motion denied without costs.

The attempted assassination of Gov. PACKARD yesterday is but another illustration of the political methods of Louisiana Democrats. The weak temporizing of the Federal Government with the desperadoes who have grasped at power by intimidation and murder has had its natural result in paralyzing justice and offering a standing encouragement to deeds of violence. The courts are in the hands of the White League Party and to turn the assassin over to magistrates who are as likely as not to secretly sympathize with the deed would be equivalent to procuring his release. The man WELDON or WALDO is said to be merely the tool of a gang of political conspirators, and may possibly be driven to reveal the names of his accomplices and employers. The question of recognizing the Packard Government will be at once considered by the Cabinet, and this sudden revelation of the kind of forces which the apathy of the Federal power has developed, ought to leave no doubt about the decision.

A petition is said to be in circulation among life insurance policy-holders protesting against the confirmation of JOHN F. SMYTHE as Superintendent of the Insurance Department. Those who are getting up this document must act promptly if they mean to accomplish anything, and, in any case, the prospects are not very brilliant that their protest will be heeded. The nomination is part of a corrupt political bargain, which is said to embrace a division of the spoils of the Quarantine, Banking, and other departments of the State Government. The "trade" ought to cover with lasting disgrace all who are parties to it, but that consideration will hardly prevent the Democratic Senators from voting solidly to accept the nominations made in pursuance of the new political deal, or from carrying with them certain Republican Senators who may be trusted to follow where the chief trafficker in the political patronage of the State shows the way. According to the Albany Argus, Postmaster SMYTHE "has been urged by underwriters with much unanimity and persistence" for the position to which he has been nominated. It would be well for either the Democratic or Republican parties to this shameless intrigue to give the public the names of these underwriters.

Gen. CHANGARNIER, who has just died, was a Frenchman whose name will pass into history. He was born during the Reign of Terror, and was a lad when NAPOLEON was First Consul. He saw the First Empire rise and fall, and was in active military life when the Bourbons were restored, in the brief reign of Louis XVIII. He saw the house of Orleans established in the Tuileries, and was recalled to Paris from service in Algeria when the Citizen King fled to England. When LOUIS NAPOLEON became President, CHANGARNIER was at the head of the Army. Like a faithful soldier, he suppressed the dangerous outbreaks; and he suffered imprisonment and banishment because, faithful to France, he refused to countenance the usurpation of the BONAPARTE. But he lived to see the collapse of the Second Empire, the flight of another reigning family, the madness of the Commune, the restoration of the Republic, and the beginning of a new and peaceful epoch. In most of these important events CHANGARNIER had some part. His name gave dignity to the struggle in which France was engaged when he was called to serve with BAZAINE, near the close of the Franco-Prussian war. And he figured in the fruitless negotiations which resulted in the capitulation of Metz. If he was opinionated and sometimes self-sufficient, he was, undoubtedly, a patriot, and a man of untarnished honor.

Mayor ELY agrees with the majority of the community in thinking that the various City departments could be very efficiently administered by a single head to each. The only exception he makes is in favor of the Police Department, to which he would give two Commissioners, on the ground that it is intrusted with the appointment of Inspectors of Elections. But that there is no reason why these Bureau of Elections should remain in the Police Department—in fact, there are a good many reasons why all control over election machinery should be taken away from it. The political intrigues which have been at the bottom of the gross maladministration of this department have centred around the business of managing elections, and it would be a most desirable reform to place all the duties vested by the Election law in the Police Department in the hands of an independent board.

The constitutional impediment is supposed to be the only formidable obstacle to the passage of a satisfactory bill for the reduction of City salaries. One of the amendments adopted in 1874 prohibited the Legislature from passing a local bill "creating, increasing, or decreasing fees, percentages, or allowances of public officers, during the term for which said officers are elected or appointed." It seems sufficiently plain that an "allowance" mentioned in this connection was never intended to cover a fixed annual salary, and it must be remembered that decisions of the Court of Appeals have denied to most of the subordinate employes the title of "public officers," so that their case cannot be covered by the amendment. Even if it were, they hold their positions practically at the will of heads of departments, and a simple removal and reappointment would be all that is necessary to take away the slightest pretext for a crop of lawsuits. Then the whole question can be reached by a general law, which should declare, say, that no Mayor of a city should be paid more than $8,000, no head of a department more than $5,000, &c. As to subordinates, their salaries could be scaled thus: A general reduction of 10 per cent. on all salaries below $1,000; of 20 per cent. on salaries between $1,000 and $2,000; 25 per cent. above that amount. The constitutional difficulty, if it exists at all, can be easily got over if the Legislature is in earnest in the matter—a fact which the decided refusal of certain members of the Committee on Cities to include Police and Firemen in the proposed reduction renders somewhat doubtful.

THE COMMISSION'S PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. EVARTS yesterday summed up and pressed home the arguments in the Republican case before the Commission with that acuteness, directness, and force for which he is justly famed. Nothing could be more clear than his statement of the relations of the State to the Federal Government, and of the rights of the former in the process of electing a President. The State does not act as an agent of the Union; it does not derive its authority from Federal legislation; its powers are defined by the Constitution, and within the clearly-drawn limits of that definition it is as supreme as is the Federal Government in any part of the domain of its authority. The State Legislature is authorized by the Federal Constitution to direct the manner in which the Electors for President and Vice President shall be appointed, and the process of appointment is, therefore, wholly within the jurisdiction of the State. All that the United States Congress can ask is the duly authenticated result of the process. It cannot go back of that. It cannot inquire as to the stages of the process. If the State intrusts to a Returning Board the duty of ascertaining who were appointed Electors, and provides no means of reviewing their finding, then the finding cannot be reviewed by Congress, or by the Commission, which possesses only the power of Congress. As Mr. EVARTS, with a happy terseness and completeness of statement, puts it, the Commission can inquire into the Electoral vote, but not into the vote for Electors.

Our readers will not be surprised to see that Mr. EVARTS turns upon the Democratic counsel the conflicting terms of their own offer of proof regarding Mr. KELLOGG, as Governor of Louisiana. The offer of proof asserts at one moment that Mr. KELLOGG'S certificate to himself was invalid, because he was de facto Governor; at another moment that Mr. KELLOGG'S certificate to all the Electors is void, because he is not Governor, even de facto. Such contradiction in an ordinary case would argue stupidity on the part of the counsel. In this case, however, it argues only desperation. The argument of the Democrats from beginning to end is honeycombed with inconsistencies; but it could not well be otherwise, when they hold on the one hand that Louisiana has not a Government republican in form, and on the other that the action of the Returning Board is to be judged by the legislation of this void Government.

As a matter of fact, however, the Returning Board acted clearly within the statutes of Louisiana. Mr. EVARTS yesterday added to the lucid explanation of these statutes submitted the day before by Mr. SHELLABARGER. It had been held by the Democratic lawyers that the law which gave the Returning Board the right to canvass "all elections" had repealed a law which gave the Electors themselves the power to fill a vacancy, and which also gave the Governor power to canvass the votes. Mr. CARPENTER had made great parade of this point. He declared to the Commission, with a show of defiance, that whatever construction they chose to put on the statutes, "his man," meaning Mr. TILDEN, was sure to go in. If the law was repealed, then the Electors could not fill the places of LEVISSE and BREWSTER. If it was not repealed, then the board could not canvass the vote for Electors, and the State must lose its vote. In one contingency, two Republican Electors were out of the way; in the other, eight were disposed of. But Mr. EVARTS and Mr. SHELLABARGER had no trouble in showing that the later law, which gave the Returning Board its powers, repealed so much of the previous law as related to the exercise of those powers, but did not repeal that part of the law which related to the powers of the Presidential Electors. As this was the main reliance of the Democrats, the blow is a severe one.

The next line of defense on which the Democrats fall back is, like their principal one, purely technical, and is an attempt to make a defect in form deprive the substance of validity. It is this: The two Electors, LEVISSE and BREWSTER, whose eligibility to an election by the popular vote was contested, absented themselves from the College of Electors, and the vacancies thus created were filled by the appointment of these two gentlemen, who then acted. Now appears the ingenious Mr. TRUMBULL, backed by Mr. HOADLEY, who furnished the legal lore for GROVER to sustain his prearranged decision in Oregon, and declares that because LEVISSE and BREWSTER were not eligible, there was no appointment in their case, and therefore no vacancy. This is the converse of the absurdity in physics that two things can be in the same place at the same time. It is an assertion that a position can be vacant without there being any vacancy in the position. It required very little exertion of Mr. EVARTS' acute analysis and perspicuous statement to break down this impudent pretension.

But there is one position from which the Democrats will refuse to be driven. They will always insist that if they were allowed they would prove that the election in Louisiana was in law and in reality for TILDEN, and that he can only be deprived of its fruits by the refusal of the Commission to hear evidence. No claim could be more false in fact or more shameless in spirit. The Commission cannot go behind the decision of the State authorities, because it has no power to do so, because the houses, which it represents, have not, for the peculiar function with which the Commission deals, the power to do so. But if that were not the case, if the law allowed it, and there were time to make it, a full and complete investigation into the facts of the Louisiana election would show that it was clearly and irreversibly for HAYES. After making all allowance that can be made for fraud, after weighing the effect of the irregularities on both sides, after applying to the disturbed districts the tests of party strength afforded by the result in the districts which were not disturbed, there is not a shadow of doubt that the majority of the voters in Louisiana was for HAYES. The decision of the State authorities must stand, for there is no authority anywhere to review it—none in the State itself, none in Congress, none in the Commission. But it is a just decision. It accords with the facts and with reason. It is not a balancing of fraud against fraud, or of fraud against force. It is not a wrong done to bring about the right. It is in substance and effect the right itself. The Democratic counsel seek to hide the dark record of Democratic crime in Louisiana and to fasten public attention on the charges which they bring against the Republican rulers of that State. They feel the safer in doing this, because the Commission is not likely to allow the matter to come to proof. But the facts remain that the majority of Louisiana voters is Republican; that the laws of Louisiana afford means—not complete, but sufficient—to give effect to this majority; that by the acts of the Returning Board this has been done, and that if the Commission give the eight votes of Louisiana to HAYES and WHEELER, it will do exact and entire justice.

THE GOVERNOR AND THE LIFE INSURANCE FRAUDS.

Opposition to Gov. ROBINSON'S nomination for the head of the Insurance Department does not imply the alternative of confirming the present Acting Superintendent in that position. It is not necessarily a choice between SMYTH, the Owego editor, and SMYTHE, the Albany Postmaster. We have reasons for doubting the fitness of Mr. SMYTH for the position he fills, but at least his integrity and freedom from partisan dictation are unquestioned. He may be supposed, too, to have acquired some knowledge of the working of the Department; and though we should have little hope of seeing it thoroughly efficient in his hands, we should never suspect it of complicity with dishonest managers. The Governor's nominee, on the other hand, has not a single recommendation. No one alleges in his behalf that he is familiar with the theory and practice of life insurance. He is, confessedly, ignorant of both. He has no reputation as an ordinary business man. He is known only as a servile partisan, and his selection by a Democratic Governor implies some discreditable understanding, which will ultimately be brought to light. The fact which for the moment most concerns the public is that Gov. ROBINSON, in his first important appointment, discards considerations of capacity and fitness, and challenges criticism of his own relation to the influences which have produced the present crisis in life insurance.

The Governor's connection with the Insurance "Ring" has always been suspected, and the suspicion will not be lessened by the support which well-known members of the Ring accord to his nomination for the Superintendency. We are accustomed to hear of "strikers" who menace companies with hostile legislation, and extort money as the price of peace. Comparatively little is said of another class of legislative agents—those, we mean, who use their positions in the Senate and Assembly to stifle inquiries and to resist measures that would be unpalatable to the life companies with which, in one way or another they are associated. As a matter of morality there is little difference between black-mailing legislators, who are indifferent to the interests they pretend to watch, and legislators who derive profit and importance from their connection with the investments of companies which may at any time become objects of investigation. It is significant that both of these classes are content to have Mr. SMYTHE installed in an office which he will certainly disgrace. The weaker and the worse he is, the better he is suited to their purposes. Having no knowledge of life insurance, he is not likely to frustrate fraud when the "strikers" attempt it, or to vex the companies' retainers with inquiries and restrictions too stringent to be pleasant. His partisan training will make him insensible to the obligations of an extremely delicate position, and expose him to a pressure from which the Superintendent of Insurance should be free. Any examination he may direct will be a sham. Any certificate of solvency he may give will be worthless. He will be dependent on subordinates for everything, and will be as incapable of supervising their work as of determining the status of companies whose affairs may require his scrutiny.

If Gov. ROBINSON is not bound to do the will of the life insurance Ring, or to give effect to a bargain entered into by the man to whom he owes his own nomination, his choice of SMYTHE is inexplicable. The need of a Superintendent who is at once capable and honest, faithful and fearless, familiar with the intricacies of life insurance, and independent of the companies on whose condition he must pass judgment, was never so great as now. It is folly to assume that the era of distrust is over; its effects are only beginning to be apparent. There may be managers who delude themselves into the belief that superficial examinations will re-establish them in the public confidence, but their feeling is not shared by those who trace the ramifications of mismanagement and fraud, and who know the impression which these produce upon persons insured, as well as upon persons contemplating insurance. At the outset we heard only of the failures of companies. These were bad enough, but there was a disposition to attribute them to nothing worse than injudicious management, aggravated in its consequences by hard times. No such charitable interpretation is entertained now.

The evidence acquired has been cumulative in a double sense. It has added one form of fraud to another. The idea prevailed that the lowest depth had been reached when the officers of the Security were shown to have falsified books and accounts, and to have sworn falsely to render the fraud effective. Embezzlement is also alleged as an explanation of the disappearance of certain funds. For these offenses the persons implicated are to be prosecuted, and if there is any virtue in the administration of law in this State, the prosecution will be pushed forward vigorously. The partial exposures of the Continental and the New-Jersey Mutual—for investigation has hardly got below the surface in either case—reveal mazes of dishonesty which ought to terminate in the State prison. One startling branch of inquiry has barely been touched—we refer to the manufacture of mortgages, based upon enormous overvaluations of real estate, and used as assets in substitution of moneys or securities that have disappeared, no one can tell how. There are mortgages, for example, amounting to $100,000 on New-Jersey unimproved property that would be dear at $15,000; yet they were to the last accepted as good assets by the department at Albany. Who believes that this is the only fraud of its class? Who does not see in its detection a reason for making the investigation of mortgages held by other companies a much more thorough piece of work than it has been under the management of the outgoing Mr. SMYTHE? Of other frauds and perversions of trust we already have plenty in the records of the allied Continental and New-Jersey Mutual. Mortgages and other securities, bogus and genuine, were now in the safe of one company and now in the safe of the other, doing duty apparently in hoodwinking investigators who only pretend to investigate. Then we have the admitted fact of a company's Government bonds hypothecated to raise money for the personal accommodation of the President, and redeemed, under pressure, by one of the persons associated with him in the business of bogus mortgages. These are merely odd incidents which have come to the top, and which very imperfectly illustrate the variety and infamy of the illegal practices that have been carried on, so far with impunity.

In the question, how long is this impunity last, we have one cause for anxiety in regard to the office of Insurance Superintendent. Of course, the duty of instituting criminal proceedings against the parties concerned rests with the Attorney General. It is a duty to which he cannot too soon address himself. But the connection of the Superintendent with all cases of this sort is too clear to be overlooked. His investigations should be the groundwork of criminal indictments; and he should be the first to detect and expose fraud, instead of taking up matters second-hand, as in two of three cases now before the public. Keeping all these considerations in view, the nomination of SMYTHE is much more than a mistake. It is a deliberate betrayal of a great interest, and will be accepted as an assurance of impunity by the rascals who have inflicted sorrow and suffering upon helpless people.

THE OREGON CONSPIRACY.

Let us hope that the worst of the Tilden conspiracy to steal the Presidency is out at last. Certainly there ought to be no lower depth of infamy than that revealed in the dispatches between Gramercy Park and Oregon. Reading these telegrams, the American people will see a candidate for the Presidency, a man who claims to be elected to that high office, conspiring with men to bribe Electors and fraudulently to obtain the Electoral vote of a sovereign State. This iniquity cannot be put off upon some irresponsible agent. The negotiations are made directly with TILDEN and TILDEN'S nephew, PELTON. The communications are sent to TILDEN'S own house, No. 15 Gramercy Park. This infamous correspondence, so far as now made public, begins with Nov. 28. There were other dispatches to prepare the way, but on that date PATRICK, confidential agent in Oregon for TILDEN, telegraphed as follows:

PORTLAND, Nov. 28.

W. T. Pelton, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New-York:

Certificate will be issued to one Democrat. Must purchase a Republican Elector to recognize and act with Democrats and secure the vote and prevent trouble. Deposit $10,000 to my credit with KOUNTZE Brothers, Wall street. Answer.

J. H. N. PATRICK,
JAMES K. KELLY.

I fully indorse this.

This needs little explanation to one familiar with the history of the Oregon conspiracy. There was one Democrat—CRONIN—who claimed the right to participate in the Electoral College of Oregon. PATRICK tells TILDEN, through his nephew, that Gov. GROVER will give CRONIN his certificate; but, in order to get him into the Electoral College, the vote of one Republican Elector must be bought, "to prevent trouble." He wants $10,000 deposited to his (PATRICK'S) credit in New-York. KELLY, Democratic Senator from Oregon, telegraphs his indorsement of this proposition to bribe an Elector. But $10,000 seemed too much money to risk on what appeared to be a doubtful venture. TILDEN or his managing man replied thus:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 29.

J. H. N. Patrick, Portland, Oregon:

No. How soon will Governor decide certificate? If you make obligation contingent on result in March, it can be done and incremable slightly, if necessary.

This was exercising that foxy caution for which the "railroad lawyer" is so famous. No cash to be paid until it was known when GROVER would settle the business by giving CRONIN his certificate. Even then, if possible, TILDEN would prefer to put off the payment until the Presidency was fairly his. He would pay in March, and the payment should be "incremable," or, as one might say, "increasable," or to be added to. He would pay "slightly" more in March than in November. But, at all events, the bribe must be "contingent on result." The wary candidate would not buy promises. On the next day, the Democratic conspirators in Oregon, seeing that TILDEN expected to buy GROVER, as well as the rest of the crew, sent this reassuring message:

PORTLAND, Nov. 30.

W. T. Pelton, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New-York:

Governor all right without reward. Will issue certificate Tuesday. This a secret. Republicans threaten if certificate is issued to ignore Democrats' claims and fill vacancy, and thus defeat action of Governor. One Elector must be paid to recognize Democrat to secure majority. Have employed three lawyers; editor of only Republican paper as one lawyer; fee, $3,000. Will take $5,000 for Republican Elector; must raise money; can't make fee contingent. Sail Saturday. Kelly and Belinger will act. Communicate with them. Must act promptly.

This was Thursday, Nov. 30, when GROVER was judicially hearing arguments on the question of the eligibility of WATTS. The certificates were to be issued on Tuesday, Dec. 5, and this model Governor authorizes the statement that he will commission "one Democrat," which was CRONIN. But PATRICK, who sends this dispatch, has the grace to add "This is a secret." He insists that one Republican Elector must be bribed. GROVER is "all right without reward." He is unselfish enough to waive his share of the corruption fund. PATRICK explains that it will take $5,000 to buy up the Republican Elector, and that $3,000 must be paid as a retaining fee to the editor of "the only Republican paper, as a lawyer." Here let us say that no bribe could move a Republican Elector. The "only Republican paper" was the Oregonian, the mercenary editor of which appeared in the mock proceedings before the Governor, and in his paper, as a defender of CRONIN'S right to a certificate. There must be no "contingent fee" in this case, says PATRICK; terms cash. Still Gramercy Park demurred. The barrel of money was running low, and this plaintive message was sent in reply:

NEW-YORK, Dec. 1.

J. H. N. Patrick:

Can't you send special messenger and convene Legislature by Tuesday and elect Electors, necessary expense would be paid. See proceedings in other States telegraphed you. Consult Governor and Senator. Answer.

The poor old man thought that the trick afterward tried in Florida would be cheaper. Let the Legislature be called together before Tuesday, Dec. 5, and legislate CRONIN into office. But, while this dispatch was going over the wires, GROVER sent the famous "Gobble" telegram, five days before his decision could be publicly announced. It reads as follows:

PORTLAND, Oregon, Dec. 1.

To Samuel J. Tilden, No. 15 Gramercy Park, N. Y.:

I shall decide every point in the case of Post Office Elector in favor of the highest Democratic Elector, and grant the certificate accordingly on morning of 6th instant.

[Confidential.] GOVERNOR.

GROVER wastes no words with PELTON, or any other agent. He informs the illustrious reformer himself that he shall decide all the points, no matter what they may be, against the Republicans. In the meantime, however, the request to convene the Legislature had been considered. In his dispatch of Thursday, Nov. 30, PATRICK had said that he should sail on Saturday, which was Dec. 2. On that day, accordingly, "K. for P."—that is to say, KELLY for PATRICK—telegraphed this precious message:

PORTLAND, Dec. 2.

W. T. Pelton, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New-York:

Impossible to convene Legislature. P. left before telegraph arrived. Can't draw the eight deposit, CHARLES DIMON, No. 115 Liberty street, to order BUSH & LADD, Salem. Must have it Monday. Can't understand "laughable" Everett House last, your telegram. K. for P.

KELLY was in trouble. The Legislature could not be convened. PATRICK, the arch-conspirator, had gone. KELLY could not draw the $8,000 which had been deposited, in the meantime, to PATRICK'S order, and he could not make out what "laughable" meant in one of the conspirators' cipher dispatches. Poor KELLY! his troubles have only just begun. Next day he telegraphed that PATRICK might be reached at Salt Lake City, about Monday following, "for three days thereabouts." In the meantime, he complains that he must borrow money on his individual responsibility, and, he begs, "in trust you can replace it." Gramercy Park replied, Dec. 3, to "go ahead," and added: "You shall be reimbursed. Do not fail. All-important." But money, money, more money was demanded by the Oregon accomplices, and on the 5th December, the day before the Electors were to meet in Salem, they again cried thus:

SALEM, Oregon, Dec. 5.

W. T. Pelton, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New-York:

Can't you deposit the eight, CHARLES DIMOND, subject the order LADD & BUSH, Salem? Can't get money here; must have it Wednesday. Telegraph me Salem. VIBE will not fail. DOCTRINAL.

"Doctrinal" might have been Bristol Bill. It was probably KELLY. The "Vier" who would not fail was undoubtedly GROVER, Governor of Oregon, though it might have been Reddy the Blacksmith, or Jerry the Sneak, or any other dead or living rascal. The much-desired "eight," the $8,000, since unearthed in the New-York accounts, was sent by way of San Francisco. We know now that LADD, the Oregon banker, arrived at the State-house, breathless, in the midst of the Electoral College preparations. This is the dispatch which showed that the long-expected cash was placed to the order of his firm, as the persistent KELLY had implored:

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 6.

Hon. James K. Kelly:

The eight deposited as directed this morning. Let no technicality prevent winning. Use your discretion.

This closed the correspondence. The plotters at one end had their money. The plotters at the other end had bagged a Tilden Elector at last. This was on the 6th of December. There was joy in Gramercy Park that night; and on the 7th the Democratic newspapers were jubilant. They lauded the patriotism of GROVER, CRONIN, and the rest of the gang, and flouted the suggestion that this business had been underhanded or corrupt. The thieves' argot used by the Democratic candidate for the Presidency has been translated into the language which honest men read and understand. TILDEN'S friends in Congress insisted upon having all election dispatches made public. Let us try to believe that they like this particular array of telegrams, and that they admire the figure which TILDEN cuts in them.

INSPECTING FORTIFICATIONS.

Since Mr. CAMERON became Secretary of War he has devoted the utmost attention to the business of his department, and, not being made exclusively of cast-iron, he has naturally experienced the effects of unremitting labor. It thus happened that when he awoke last Wednesday morning he felt that his exhausted physical system imperatively needed fortifications, and he thereupon hastened to New-York and proceeded to inspect the fortifications of the harbor, as scores of other tired Secretaries and miscellaneous statesmen have done before him.

Partisan malignity is rarely base enough to grudge a few fortifications to a wearied public servant. The more faithful and laborious a Secretary may be, the more he needs an occasional tonic, and the medical men are almost unanimously of the opinion that harbor fortifications, when taken in moderation and for purely medicinal purposes, have an excellent effect. Of course, if a Secretary were habitually addicted to fortifications to such an extent as to interfere with his duties, or to injure his health, he would deserve to be sternly rebuked; but, when he takes a few fortifications for the stomach's sake, so to speak, and on rare and proper occasions, no reasonable man will dream of finding fault with him.

A large and pleasant party of friends, including Gen. SHERMAN and Major Gen. HANCOCK, joined Mr. CAMERON on board a steam-boat on Wednesday morning, and proceeded down the bay. They landed first at Governor's Island, and inspected the fortifications at that point as carefully as if they were something entirely new. It was the opinion of one of the party that there was a trifle too much lemon in the Governor's Island fortifications, but it was unanimously agreed that they were very formidable, and very nicely sweetened. Bedloe's Island was next visited, and in addition to a comprehensive inspection of the usual fortifications, the excursionists made the acquaintance of what has lately become the specialty of the place—the "site of the French statue." Opinions seem to have differed as to the merits of this novelty. Gen. SHERMAN evidently did not like it, and when some one suggested that it might be improved by the addition of a few arches, the General derided the suggestion. As to Secretary CAMERON, he refused to express any opinion in regard to it, and remarked that his successor would doubtless have an opportunity to investigate it more at leisure and test its alleged merits. It should be remembered, however, that the dinner-hour was approaching, and that a desire for something more substantial and nutritious than the Bedloe's Island specialty may have led the party to underestimate its merits.

From Bedloe's Island the steamer made its way to Fort Hamilton, where the party landed, and sat down to an appetizing array of the best and choicest fortifications to be had in the market. Of course, if the weather had been warmer, so that the Secretary and his friends could have taken their fortifications on the piazza of the commandant's quarters, the affair would perhaps have more of the air of a holiday picnic, but as it was, there was nothing to which the most fastidious gourmand could take exception. The bastions, ravelins, casemates, and other courses were exquisitely cooked, and the sally-port was old, fruity, and delicious. Gen. SHERMAN, who has repeatedly inspected all the fortifications in the vicinity of New-York, admitted that Fort Hamilton had fairly eclipsed itself, and that the finest fortifications to be had in Paris could not be honestly pronounced in any way superior.

Refreshed, invigorated, and in the best of spirits, the fortunate party proceeded to Sandy Hook, where they partook of certain potent and palatable fortifications as a chasse-café. It is needless to assert that not a single one of the party overstepped the bounds of moderation. Even if there had been no ladies present, it is safe to say that the officers and gentlemen who accompanied the Secretary would have been careful not to overestimate their capacity for fortifications. Their moderation and self-restraint were as conspicuous as their genial delight in the delicious fortifications set before them, and only those persons who believe that fortifications in any form are sinful and injurious both to the body and the soul could have taken any exception to the manner in which the Secretary's holiday was spent.

FUNERAL OF CYRUS P. SMITH.

The funeral of the late Hon. Cyrus P. Smith took place yesterday afternoon from the First Presbyterian Church, in Henry street, Brooklyn. The church was densely crowded, and the streets in the vicinity were blocked with carriages. Among those present were Mayor Schroeder, ex-Mayors Samuel Booth, Samuel S. Powell, Francis B. Stryker, and John W. Hunter. The Aldermen, Supervisors, and other representatives of the City and County Government occupied seats in the body of the church. In other parts of the same edifice were Judges Benedict, Gilbert, Moore, Neilson, McCue, and Reynolds, Henry E. Pierrepont, Henry Sheldon, John Ingraham, Fisher How, Franklin Taylor, Henry K. Sheldon, William Van Anden, Daniel Packer, Prof. R. W. Raymond, Rev. Dr. Duryea, F. H. Lovell, Joshua M. Van Cott, Demas Barnes, D. C. Ripley, ex-District Attorney John Winslow, Jesse C. Smith, Samuel McLean, E. L. Bushnell, ex-Judge Greenwood, Gerard M. Stevens, D. P. Barnard, John Rolfe, and many other prominent citizens of New-York and Brooklyn. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Hall, Pastor, and Rev. Dr. Storrs. The remains were encased in a massive rosewood casket covered with a heavy black pall. On the coffin lid was a silver plate bearing the following inscription:

CYRUS PORTER SMITH,
Born April 6, 1800;
Died Feb. 13, 1877.

The floral tributes, in accordance with the wishes of the family, were confined to a vase of lilies and a wreath of violets. A sheaf of corn lay on the coffin. Rev. Dr. Hall, after reading the funeral service, delivered a short address on the Christian life of the deceased, who had been connected with the Church for over 50 years. The funeral oration was delivered by Rev. Dr. Storrs, who gave a sketch of the life of the deceased from his first coming to Brooklyn, at the age of 27. The deceased had been for more than half a century connected with the city, and had been twice its chief magistrate. At the conclusion of Dr. Storrs' address, the remains were placed in a plain hearse, and, followed by a long line of carriages, taken to Green-Wood Cemetery, where they were interred.

ALBANY.

THE STATE PRISONS BILL PASSED.

GOOD WORK OF THE HOUSE—THE BILL IN ITS PRESENT SHAPE—THE APPROPRIATION BILL REPORTED—THE SENATE PASSES THE COMMISSIONERS OF JURORS BILL—THE POSTMASTER SMYTHE DEAL.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Thursday, Feb. 15, 1877.

The House did splendid work this morning. After an hour's debate only the bill in relation to the office of Superintendent of State Prisons was sent through Committee of the Whole, ordered to a third reading, and, on motion of Mr. Husted, was, by unanimous consent, immediately read a third time and passed, without a single vote in the negative being recorded. The bill was favorably reported from the Ways and Means Committee yesterday morning, and was then made the special order for to-day. The debate was opened by Mr. Post, Chairman of the State Prisons Committee, who offered an amendment in substance similar to that added to the bill in relation to the office of Superintendent of Public Works, prohibiting the appointments being made for political purposes. He supported his amendment with a brief speech showing that the principle embodied in it was no new thing either in theory or practice; that the law for the government and administration passed last year had been framed especially to exclude politics and secure efficiency in the governing body, and that the happiest effects had followed therefrom. Mr. Post's amendment was adopted without dissent.

This being done, Mr. Alvord rose and offered the amendment, the presentation of which had been expected, and of the intent of which there was no doubt or dispute. The amendment provided that the Superintendent should not hold any other State or county office. Had it been adopted, it would have excluded from the office the one man upon whom public sentiment has settled as the man most fitted for it, since everybody knew that Mr. Pillsbury would not accept the nomination if he were required to sever his life-long connection with the Albany Penitentiary.

Mr. Post rose to oppose the amendment, speaking hotly and earnestly, as he always does upon any matter in which he is interested. He declared the true purpose and intent of the amendment; spoke of the excellent management of the Albany Penitentiary, and asserted that it was due to the single mind controlling it.

Mr. Alvord made an equally earnest speech in support of his amendment. He held that the intent of the constitutional amendments was the concentration of power and of responsibility, and to carry out this intent it is right to confine the one mind to the care of the State Prisons, and to those alone. Mr. Alvord expressed some doubt whether the Albany Penitentiary would have been so successful, in a financial sense, if it had not had a large number of United States prisoners in it, for whose board the United States paid the County of Albany.

Mr. Post replied that the Penitentiary had paid its way for 30 years, and it was only of late years that United States prisoners had been received there, and the amount received for them was just $1 25 per week. Nothing but the best possible management could make of this sum anything but a loss to the institution.

Mr. Husted, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, now came into the discussion, and soon placed the whole matter in its true light. He said:

MR. HUSTED'S SPEECH.

MR. CHAIRMAN: It seems to me that this is a very plain and practical question, and that when you strip it of its verbiage it can be settled in a moment. I do not think it necessary to take up the time of this House in panegyrizing Mr. Pillsbury, or entering into any sentimental views or theories, or into any inquiry as to who laid the corner-stone of the Albany Penitentiary; nor do I think the question obtains at all as to whether or not the Albany Penitentiary makes money out of men who are sent up from the various counties of the State for 60 or 90 days for drunkenness, vagrancy, or disorderly conduct. I do not think any of these questions come properly before this committee in the discussion of this bill. No gentleman knows better than the gentleman from Onondaga, [Mr. Alvord,] that it would be impossible to send misdemeanor cases to the State Prison.

Mr. Alvord—Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to recollect distinctly that I said so far as it regarded the United States criminals, and the other criminals generally sent from counties, charged against the counties instead of the State.

Mr. Husted—Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, of course, will admit that they could not be sent by Justices of the Peace of the counties to State Prison under any circumstances. Now, Sir, in so far as United States convicts are concerned, there are not enough United States convicts sent to the Albany Penitentiary, or anywhere else, to contribute a tithe toward the support of a penitentiary, and if they are not sent to the State Prisons it is the fault of the people of the State of New-York in Legislature assembled, for the United States has requested the State of New-York to pass a law enabling them to send their convicts to the State Prisons, and the State of New-York has uniformly refused to pass such a law, since the law that formerly existed in that regard was repealed.

Now, Sir, the United States convicts which are sent to the Kings County Penitentiary do not support that Penitentiary; and, although the Kings County Penitentiary has all the power which the Albany Penitentiary has, yet the Kings County Penitentiary is not self-supporting, so that that argument fails. The reason is because the manager of the Kings County Penitentiary has not that ability, has not that experience, has not that executive skill which is possessed by the manager of the Albany Penitentiary. Now, Sir, again, granted that misdemeanor cases could have been sent to the State Prisons of the State, grant that United States convicts could have been sent to the prisons of this State during the past 10 years, what would have been the result? Why, the result would have been that instead of $800,000, we should have had $2,000,000 deficiency, for the reason that the increment of the convicts would have increased the expenditures, and why? Because with the convicts that are there now the expenses run far and far behind the receipts which come from the moneys paid by the contractors for the labor of the prisoners, and why? Because in the State Prisons of this State there has never been a system of management as yet which gave to the contractor more than half of what he was entitled to receive, and for that reason, Sir, while in the Ohio State Prison the contracts are awarded at $1 30 per day for able-bodied, and 80 and 85 cents per day for lame and disabled convicts, in our State Prison the contracts are awarded at 25 and 30 and 35 cents a day, and it is hard work to let contracts even at that price, and to-day in the Sing Sing Prison there are 500 convicts, and in Auburn Prison 800 more idle men who have not struck a stroke for six months. The management of the prisons is such that contractors will not bid. They say, if we get a contract, even at 25 or 30 cents a day, these convicts won't earn 25 or 30 cents a day for us. Why, they are allowed to set up a "stint" for themselves. They go to work at 8 o'clock in the morning and at 10 o'clock in the morning, they have often completed their "stint," and they lay down their tools and neither contractor nor officers of the prison can make those men strike a single stroke after they have done two hours' work a day. That is the trouble, Sir! The difficulty is at the bottom. It is not on account of the prisons not receiving a little more money for board nor anything of that kind.

The people of this State are looking forward to the day when the prisons shall be conducted as the Controller's office is conducted, as the Attorney General's office is conducted, as the Treasurer's office is conducted, as you, gentlemen, Supervisors and Assessors, and Town Clerks, conduct your official offices, as you bankers, and farmers, and merchants conduct your private business, and when that day shall have arrived we shall hear no more the crying and the wailing and the weeping of the taxpayers over the maladministration and the inefficiency of prison management. I believe that her sickness was dangerous. The resolution was adopted by a rising vote:

Whereas, A great sorrow has cast its shadow over the household of our colleague, Mr. Strahan, of New-York, in the death of his much-esteemed wife, who departed this life in Albany this morning.

Resolved, That this House expresses its sincere regret at the great loss which our colleague has suffered, and extends to him its sincere sympathy in his sudden bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our colleague.

Resolved, That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Husted, from the Ways and Means Committee, reported the Annual Appropriation bill this morning, and it was made the special order for Tuesday next. Mr. Husted will, as Chairman, have charge of it on the floor, and will have the opportunity to show himself at his best. For the first time within memory this important bill was passed at one sitting when Mr. Sloan had charge of it last year. If Mr. Husted can do the same this year it will be a feather in his cap.

THE SENATE.

The Coroners bill and the Commissioner of Jurors bill both passed the Senate to-day by a unanimous vote, and will now be sent to the Assembly for concurrence.

The next in order of the four Woodin bills—that making the Register a salaried office, and providing that the salaries of all the subordinates shall not exceed $35,000, all fees to go into the City Treasury—was then taken up. Most of the discussion was on the question of the Register's salary. The bill as introduced provided that it should be $6,000, but Mr. Morrissey thought that was not sufficient. He moved an amendment fixing it at $10,000. Mr. Gerard moved another, making it $8,000, and this was finally adopted as a fair compromise. Discussion then arose as to the liability of the Register under this bill in case of error in making searches. Mr. Woodin contended that the same liability would exist that does under the present law, while some other Senators were of a different opinion. This afforded an opportunity for Senator Wagstaff to move to "progress" the bill, a motion that he has made with reference to every measure of reform for New-York City that has been before the Senate this session. Mr. Gerard also joined in the request that it be "progressed," and Mr. Woodin finally yielded his determination to push the bill to a third reading to-day. He said he had noticed that a resolution was passed at the conference meeting in the Mayor's office in New-York last Saturday, requesting Senators and Assemblymen from New-York not to vote for any bill affecting that City until it had received the indorsement of the Mayor. He would, therefore, consent to "progressing" this bill in order that the Senators from that City might have an opportunity to get their instructions. Messrs. Gerard and Morrissey repudiated the suggestion that they took their "instructions" from the Mayor, and the latter rehearsed the circumstances under which he came to be present at the famous "conference" in Mayor Ely's office. He also said that, in the various bills that had been introduced by the Senator from the Twenty-fifth [Mr. Woodin] he didn't notice any that touched Republican departments.

Mr. Woodin—They haven't got any that I know of.

Mr. Morrissey said he was glad to be able to get the party to which the Senator belonged to go for economy and retrenchment among Democratic officeholders, and he hoped to be able, before he got through, to reach some Republicans.

The bill was thereupon "progressed," with the understanding that it shall be taken up again next Tuesday.

The nomination of Postmaster Smythe for Superintendent of Insurance continues to be a leading subject of speculation and comment. No stone will be left unturned to procure his confirmation, and as he only needs one Republican vote beyond those he is already sure of, it is thought he will be able to effect it. There are rumors that the "bargain," when fully carried out, contemplates several other changes in State officers, among them the Superintendent of Banks, the Health Officer of New-York, and two Quarantine Commissioners, all of whom are Republicans, but are "holding over." Ordinary Republicans are unable to see how their party is going to gain anything by a division of these offices among the Democrats merely for the sake of putting half of them in the hands of Senator Conkling's friends, while Tilden takes the other half. But the greatest surprise among those who hoped better things from Gov. Robinson is that he should be willing to lend himself, at the very threshold of his administration, to such a transparent and corrupt trafficking in public offices. Still, it is hard to see how anything better could have been expected of a man who allowed Tilden to inject a pettifoging partisan plea for the Presidency into his first annual Message to the Legislature.

It is understood here that in case Smythe gets confirmed as Superintendent of Insurance, Jacob C. Cuyler, one of the proprietors of the Albany Express, is to succeed him as Postmaster.

THE INSURANCE SUPERINTENDENT.

REPUBLICAN CAUCUS ON SMYTHE'S NOMINATION LAST NIGHT—CONKLING'S MAN TO BE CONFIRMED—THE LAST MOVE OF THE INSURANCE RING—EXTRAORDINARY RUMORS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 15.—A caucus of Republicans was held this evening at the residence of Senator Hamilton Harris to consider the question of the confirmation of Postmaster Smythe as Superintendent of Insurance. No conclusion was arrived at, and no resolution was adopted binding the Senators to any course of action, but it is generally conceded that when the case comes before the Senate, on a favorable report from the committee, the nomination will be confirmed. There is no doubt of it, in fact, and the prospect is that half a dozen or more Republican Senators will vote with the Democrats, who are expected to be unanimous for the confirmation. Dispatches have been received from all parts of the State to-day urging Republican Senators to vote for the confirmation. They come from Conkling's friends in response to orders from Washington. Great anxiety is manifested by the friends of Smythe and Conkling to have the nomination confirmed to-morrow, but the next regular executive session, according to the rules of the Senate, cannot take place till next Wednesday, unless by unanimous consent. Those who wish for the confirmation to-morrow claim that there was an implied promise to hold an executive session, when Mr. Woodin, in executive session, yesterday included this in his motion. Whether this "implied promise" will be regarded as sufficiently binding to force an executive session to-morrow is not yet decided, but if Smythe is to be confirmed, as all admit, it will not make much difference whether it be done to-morrow or next week. The extraordinary haste manifested to get this nomination confirmed is one of the many incomprehensible mysteries connected with this business. All sorts of explanations are attempted, and many insist on connecting it in some way with the decision of the Electoral Commission on the Louisiana question. The prevailing opinion at first was that the whole thing originated with Conkling, and was part of a bargain or understanding with Tilden that he should be paid for services rendered. But those who ought to know say that Conkling had nothing to do with it, except to ratify the scheme after it was proposed to him, and to use his influence in carrying it out, his motive being simply to provide a fat place for one of his favorite henchmen. According to these men the whole thing was concocted by men who have for some time been known in Albany and outside of it as the "Insurance Ring." It is certain that Smith M. Weed, James W. Husted, and Senator Tobey knew that this nomination was going to be sent in as long ago as last Saturday. It is also well known that the insurance companies have long been anxious to get rid of the present Acting Superintendent, William Smyth. He is a man whom they cannot use in any contingency, neither can the "Insurance Ring." He has declined to facilitate the operations of all the outside sharks who for years past have made their living out of the insurance companies and have aided them in covering up their misdeeds. He must, therefore, be got rid of, and the ring and the companies together concocted the scheme of trotting out Postmaster Smythe as a candidate, relying on Conkling's influence to carry it through. This is the theory of those who profess to be behind the curtain and to know all about it. It does not, however, explain satisfactorily how Gov. Robinson was drawn into it. If the Mutual Life was in the plot, Robinson's acquiescence is easily accounted for, as he is well known to have drawn his sustenance from that company for nearly a quarter of a century, and is always ready to respond to any demand they may make upon him. But the strangest of the many rumors connected with the affair is that in case Hayes is declared President Smyth is to resign the position of Superintendent of Insurance as soon as the Legislature adjourns, and Smith M. Weed, Conkling's old appointee of last Winter, and confidential agent in his rascally manœuvres for the Presidency, is to be appointed in his place. Acting Superintendent Smyth is entirely dumbounded at the appointment of his namesake (he is no relation) to fill his place. He says he came up with him on the train from New-York yesterday, and he never lisped a word about such a thing, nor had he ever dreamed that he was a candidate for the place. One of the Postmaster's sons is now a clerk in the Insurance Department, appointed by the present Acting Superintendent, who thinks he has been scurvily treated by the Postmaster. He also accounts for Conkling's readiness to get him out by the fact that he removed a clerk from the department last Summer who, he understood was a Democrat, and appointed in his place a friend of Senator Sayre, of Utica. Soon after he received a curt letter from Conkling saying that the person removed was his appointee, and demanding that he be reinstated. The demand was impudently made, and promptly refused, and he supposes Conkling is now delighted at the opportunity to "get square." Mr. Smyth's paper in Owego County also took strong ground against the compromise scheme for counting the Electoral vote, which may be another grievance in the mind of the Senator.

THE SALARY BILL.

COL. RUSH C. HAWKINS BEFORE THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CITIES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 15.—The Assembly Committee on Cities this afternoon had a hearing on the bill for reducing salaries, introduced some time ago by Mr. Langbein. Col. Rush C. Hawkins appeared to advocate the bill. He had no prepared speech to make, and the discussion of the bill between the members of the committee and Mr. Hawkins, while very wide and thorough, was rather in the nature of conversation than formal argument. Mr. Hawkins said that the present bill was the old one of last year which had been in the Legislature, but it had been amended in many important particulars. Since coming to Albany he had heard much said of the constitutional provision in relation to the matter of salaries. He had discussed the question at length with some of the best lawyers in New-York, and they were unanimous in the opinion that the word "allowances" in the Constitution did not mean salaries. Mr. Hawkins had not the least doubt that the word did not mean salaries, and he cited authorities on the meaning of the word, and on its use in support of his opinion. Mr. Hawkins did not think it possible that the Legislature intended to refuse the city the right to regulate the compensation of its army of employes. If this restriction applied to the salaries of appointed or elected officers, that was one thing, but it was the multitude of employes we wanted to reach, one half of whom were paid three times as much as their services are worth. He admitted there was a doubt about the meaning of the constitutional clause, and so far as he was individually concerned he would say that sooner than saddle the City with the burden of the hundreds of law-suits which might spring from the passage of the bill in its present form he was willing to have it made prospective in its operation if the Legislature was also willing. There are 17 Commissioners who will go out of office during Mayor Ely's term. There are 28 in all in the city. We can bear the burden a little longer. Our total expenses; for City salaries in 1860 was $5,000,000 it is now $13,000,000. So much was talked about home rule—this is what home rule had done for us. It had fostered corruption in every form, until the City beat under the burden laid upon it. Home rule had been another name for robbery and extortion, and under it the whole atmosphere of the City had been made to brew corruption. Mr. Hawkins then briefly addressed himself to the charge so frequently iterated that the Legislature was principally responsible for the mischief. He asked whence come the men who pass the bills which add to our burdens, which have robbed our City and supplied the means of corruption? Not from the rural districts, not from the country towns, but from the City itself. In the secret meetings of the City politicians these measures had been concocted, and from these the elected Representatives had come up to Albany and had passed them through the State Legislature, under the claim that they were local bills, of the merits of which they alone were able to speak. He referred to the recent conference in the Mayor's office, and said that he saw there a man who raised his voice the loudest in denunciation of the mischievous interference of Albany, but who was himself the man who brought up to Albany and procured the passage of some of the worst measures which had cursed the City. Mr. Hawkins said that the evil lay with the people who elect such men. Our substance is voted away by men who don't contribute a dollar to the City in taxes. At the election in 1875 there were 129 000 voters. Of these 19,000 were tax-payers. The others were tax eaters. We are ruled by an ignorant vote, and we have to, we must look to the men from the country to protect us. We are not fit for self-government, and that is all there is to it. Mr. Hawkins then read some statistics showing the cost of various City Departments as compared with the same departments in other cities, by which it appears that New-York paid about five times as much for the same service as Boston, Philadelphia, or Baltimore. It was noticeable that the Police cost for administration alone $140,360, this large sum being required merely to pay the men in the headquarters building. Some conversation here followed in regard to the Police bill recently sent up by the Commissioners, in which an increase of salaries was provided, and it came out that the committee had unanimously determined to strike out this increase. The section which cut down the pay of the firemen and policemen was discussed, and Messrs. Corse, Langbein, and Mitchell declared unanimously that they would vote for no bill with that section in it. Mr. Hawkins sat down and struck it out on the spot. In the end it was agreed that Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Langbein should take the bill and together should amend, correct, and perfect it, and return it to-morrow morning at their early meeting. The temper of the discussion was excellent throughout, and it might almost be expected from its tone that a bill could be drawn up which would have no inconsiderable Democratic support.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE OPERA BOUFFE.

"La Périchole" was sung at the Eagle Theatre, last evening, for the first time this season. This familiar, but still popular work might be reproduced without making any demand upon critical attention but for the fact that the version represented yesterday differed somewhat from the original opera. "La Périchole," as now performed, includes a new act in which Piquillo is discovered in a dungeon, whence he escapes with the aid of his sweetheart, leaving The Viceroy a captive in his stead. The change from the old edition to the new one did not impress us as particularly felicitous. The addition to the story and score is not interesting either from a dramatic or lyric standpoint, and were it not for Mlle. Aimée's expressive singing of a rather commonplace aria, in which she paints her ardent love for Piquillo, the transactions and the tunes would have been positively tedious. The opera, in respect of its rendering, however, afforded considerable satisfaction. We prefer Mlle. Aimée's personation of La Périchole not merely to the efforts of her predecessors in this country, but to Mlle. Schneider's own création, and a portrayal in which suggestiveness, sentiment and mischief are more nicely mingled is not likely to be applauded for many a day. M. Raoult is capitally suited in Piquillo, and MM. Mezières and Duplan make abundant fun in their respective characters. Although there was no lack of applause, yesterday, a return to the time-honored version of "La Périchole" may be recommended as judicious.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mme. Essipoff plays at Steinway Hall this evening.

Seats may be secured on and after this morning for Miss Abbott's approaching début in opera, at the Academy of Music.

The preparations for the imminent "Wagner Festival" are progressing, and rehearsals for all the operas intended for production—including "Die Walküre," which will be brought out with special care and liberality in respect of scenic attire—have already begun. The opera with the performance of which the festival is to be inaugurated has not yet been fixed upon.

The general rehearsal previous to to-morrow evening's fourth Philharmonic concert may be attended at the Academy of Music this afternoon. The programme embraces Mendelssohn's overture to "The Fair Melusine," a new Serenade, for string orchestra, by R. Fuchs, a new concerto, for piano and orchestra, by Hans Von Bronsart, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Mr. S. B. Mills is to be the pianist.

A programme of English glees was interpreted to the delight of a large audience at Chickering Hall, yesterday evening. Mendelssohn, Marschner, Sullivan, Callcott, Arne, and Abt were represented by choice pieces of part-music, which were rendered with much expressiveness and delicacy of shading by Messrs Eilard, Neilsen, Baird and Aiken, Misses Beebe and Finch, and Mrs. Hills. By general desire a supplementary concert of the same nature will be given on March 15.

The tidings that a matinée representation of English opera may be attended at the Academy of Music to-morrow will, no doubt, be greeted with pleasure. Miss Kellogg and her associates, after gladdening several neighboring places with their song, will then round off the week in this City with a performance of "The Star of the North." Cathérine is one of Miss Kellogg's most brilliant personations, and the stage-costume of the opera ought in itself to be a sufficient attraction to fill the house.

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

THE EASTERN QUESTION

ROUMANIAN NEUTRALITY—THE RUSSIAN CIRCULAR—A "FEELER" FROM ST. PETERSBURG—THE NEGOTIATIONS OF TURKEY—SERVIA AND MARTENEGRO.

LONDON, Feb. 16.—A Vienna correspondent says letters from Jassy state that the Roumanian representatives abroad informed the various Governments on Feb. 3 that Roumania, not having been able to secure the protection of the powers for her neutrality, could not help concluding a convention permitting the passage of Russian troops through her territory under certain emergencies. Roumania would not grant the Turks the same privilege.

A correspondent at Brindisi reports an interview with Midhat Pasha, in the course of which the latter expressed the opinion that there would be no war.

Another Vienna correspondent calls attention to a significant letter from St. Petersburg, publishey by the Political Correspondence, and probably intended as a feeler and reminder by the Russian Government. This letter, discussing the reports that the answers to Prince Gortschakoff's circular will probably be evasive, or will recommend further delay, says delay may suit the English policy, or that of some other power; but it is incompatible with the interests of the Cabinets immediately interested in the Eastern question. Russia has to maintain a large army on the frontier, and is forced to increase it in consequence of the gradual disappearance of chances of peace. Railway traffic is interrupted. commerce has ceased, and credit is shaken. There is no export trade. Socialism is encouraged by this state of affairs.

The correspondent at Vienna of a morning paper says the communication of the Prince of Montenegro to the Porte, accepting the conditions which the Porte proposed to negotiate, is couched in the most obliging terms, although the Prince and the Porte still differ as to the place where the negotiations are to commence. The former would have no objection to transferring them to Constantinople if there was a fair chance of coming to an understanding.

A dispatch from Constantinople says the Grand Vizier renewed the request to the Prince of Montenegro, that the peace negotiations be carried on elsewhere than at Vienna. The Prince replied that he preferred Vienna, but to prove his desire for conciliation he proposed Cattaro. The Porte declined this and asked the Prince to choose Scutari or some place in Herzegovina.

The Times' dispatch from Belgrade says it is believed there that the Porte will not claim the arrears of tribute from Servia if peace is concluded. The impression is gaining ground that official Russia will take no further interest in Servian affairs. Peace would be virtually assured but for the influence of the Pan-Slavic societies and the conviction of the Cabinet that peace would result in its overthrow.

In the House of Lords yesterday afternoon the Duke of Argyll gave notice that he would, on Tuesday next, direct attention to the Government's instructions to Lord Salisbury regarding the Conference, and ask the Government what measures are contemplated for attaining the ends meditated in these instructions. This will probably lead to the expected attack of the Opposition regarding the Eastern question.

Can Europe ask the Russian Government to follow a suicidal policy, to continue to injure the country and sow the seeds of a socialist revolution with their own hands? The letter more especially refers to Austria, and asks whether she is not as much interested as Russia in preventing the recurrence of events which kept her for months in constant fear of war and internal commotion. It concludes: The waiting policy of Europe brings the alliance of the three Emperors into the foreground. Within the last few days there are symptoms indicating that the policy of Germany is closely joind to that of Russia. In these circumstances it may soon be expected that in this way will be found to get the desired guarantees in a form corresponding with the interests of both Russia and Austria.

The Times' correspondent remarks that the above letter may be taken with tolerable certainty as a semi-official hint that Russia's position is besoming more and more untenable, and that she cannot wait much longer, but must go forward or backward.

According to accounts from St. Petersburg, the statement of the Russian circular that the Czar had suspended his final resolution, awaiting the decison of the powers, was more than a phrase of diplomatic courtesy. He is as averse to war as ever. He has by no means relinquished hope that withdrawal by honor is possible, and he reckons that the powers will assist them in their own interest as well as that of Europe. Those who agree with the Czar consider that the fall of Midhat Pasha shows that war is unnecessary now.

EXTRADITION WITH ENGLAND.

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES AND ENGLAND.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—Additional correspondence in regard to the recent extradition difficulty between Great Britain and the United States is published. Among the most important dispatches is one from Secretary Fish to Minister Pierrepont, dated Aug. 5, 1876, in which the former explains that Sir Edward Thornton was mistaken in informing the British Government that he [Fish] had stated that Lawrence was arraigned or held to bail after extradition for any crime except that for which he was surrendered. Lord Derby, on Oct. 14, instructed Sir Edward to inform Mr. Fish that England as a temporary measure was prepared to surrender accused persons without asking an engagement as to the offenses for which such persons would be tried. Lord Derby at the same time declared the English Government can only continue to carry out this arrangement as long as no attempt is made to try a person thus surrendered for any other offense than that for which he is extradited." Mr. Fish replied that on indication of the readiness of Great Britain to surrender Winslow, Brent, and Gray, he would be glad to concur in this arrangement. Meanwhile both Governments reserve the right secured by article 11 to abrogate article 10 at any time, and both give notice of their continued adhesion to their respective views as to the interpretation of the treaty. Mr. Fish informed Sir Edward Thornton that, while he regretted his inability to persuade the English Government to adopt the American view, he was glad to know that, earnestly as each side had presented its own views, the manner of presentation had created no irritation and left no cause of complaint. Mr. Fish, on Dec. 14, informed Sir Edward that as soon as Brent was surrendered the American Government would consider article 10 of the Treaty of 1842 as again in force, and would likewise be ready to enter upon negotiations for a new treaty.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

PARIS, Feb. 15.—Thirty corpses, frightfully mutilated, have so far been recovered from the coal mine at Graissessac.

A terrible boiler explosion has occurred at the Barroin Steel Works in St. Etinne. Ten persons were killed or fatally injured, and many badly injured.

VERSAILLES, Feb. 15—In the Chamber of Deputies to-day the Committee on Press Laws presented a report proposing a bill to provide trial by jury for press offenses.

BERLIN, Feb. 15.—Semi-official journals declare that any serious variance which may have existed recently between Germany and France has passed off as France has discontinued her efforts to form an alliance with Russia.

THE PRESIDENCY OF MEXICO.

THREE PERSONS WHO CLAIM THE OFFICE—BUT TWO OF THEM ARE IN THIS COUNTRY, WHICH LEAVES GEN. DIAZ IN ALMOST UNDISPUTED POWER.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 15.—A dispatch from San Diego, Cal., says Col. Machorro, late in command of the Twelfth Mexican cavalry at Durango, has just arrived there, via Guaymas. Col. Machorro was at first a partisan of Lerdo, but when the latter left the country he espoused the cause of Iglesias. He says everywhere in Durango the people have pronounced for Diaz. Col. Machorro left there and went to Mazatlan and La Paz, where he found the same state of affairs. He then proceeded to Guaymas, where he found the people about to pronounce for Diaz, and he then came on to California. He states that the revolt of the Pesquieras in Sonora was caused by Gen. Mariscal. The Pesquieras with a few others have fled to Chihuahua. Col. Machorro arrived at Guaymas on the 5th inst., where he found Col. Rangel and the Admiral of the two Mexican war vessels Democratis and Mexico. They were expecting the arrival of Gen. Mariscal on the 7th, when they were to put forth a formal declaration in favor of Diaz. At La Paz, Lower California, everything was found in confusion politically. Chief Miranda had been driven out of La Paz by one J. Ibarra, who had rallied a band of outlaws and installed himself in power. Miranda had left for Guaymas in a small vessel, but had not reached that port when Col. Machorro stopped there. There is now no legitimate government in any part of the territory. Col. Machorro says the whole interior of Mexico is now for Diaz, and the entire Pacific coast, except, perhaps, Acapulco, and the fact that both the war vessels are now under Diaz's control will secure that port too. The state of affairs in the Republic is disheartening. The chiefs on either side, Lerdo and Iglesias, having fled the country, those who have fixed interests are forced to acquiesce in Diaz's rule. Officers who, like Col. Machorro, can not conscientiously join that movement can only leave the country, not wishing to prolong what could only be guerrilla warfare. Diaz being at the head of the only organized force controlling the Army, is for the present supreme, but it is not believed his grasp can be held for more than a few months. Some patriotic men of great influence are still relied upon for the future. Señor Vallarta, formerly Governor of Jalisco, and Gen. Ignacio Mejia, both very popular men, are looked to in some quarters to hereafter rally the constitutional party of the country. The general business is seriously affected, but in the interior there has been, as yet, no perceptible effect upon the masses of the people, who are about as well off as in the most peaceful times. Diaz at the latest advices had established himself in Guadalaiara, where the officer left by Gen. Ceballos in command of the forces had turned over everything to him.

WHAT EX-PRESIDENT LERDO HAS TO SAY ON THE SUBJECT — A CONVERSATION WITH A STAFF OFFICER.

The foregoing dispatch was shown to ex-President Lerdo by a TIMES reporter last evening, in his rooms at an up-town hotel. He had not received the news from any other source, and listened to a translation of the dispatch with great interest. In regard to its contents, he believed that the facts as set forth by Col. Machurro were in the main true, but he declined for the present to enter into any conversation with regard to the condition of affairs in Mexico. He thanked the reporter for having placed him in possession of the latest advices concerning the political situation in his native country in advance of their publication, and immediately called the members of his staff together to inform them of the intelligence he had received.

Subsequently one of the staff officers said to the reporter that he was not at all surprised that the Diaz Government had been so widely recognized throughout the country, as it was almost always so in cases of successful uprising. Persons throughout the country who had large interests at stake would soon find that their safety depended entirely upon the maintenance of the constitutional government and the support of law and order. On Sept. 23, 1876, Diaz had issued a call for an election to be held on the 12th of the present month, and in that call had excluded from voting all who had opposed him within the year. As he now had full military possession of the country, he had undoubtedly been elected President, thus covering himself with a thin coat of legal varnish. Under the present circumstances it would be impossible to say how long such a Government would last in Mexico, but he was convinced that it would not stand for any length of time. Law and order would eventually prevail, as his pretended election was in violation of the Constitution, and utterly at variance with the laws, not only of Mexico, but of all civilized communities. With regard to Gen. Ignacio Mejia and Señor Vallarta, who are mentioned in the dispatch from San Francisco, the officer thought there was some mistake, as the former was not in Mexico at present, but was in Havana, and the latter he had always known as a partisan of Diaz.

OBITUARY.

GEN. N. A. T. CHANGARNIER.

A dispatch from Paris announces the death of Gen. Nicholas Anne Theodule Changarnier in that city on Wednesday last. The deceased was born at Autun, Department of Saône-et-Loire, on April 26, 1793. He was educated at the Military School of St. Cyr, and in 1815 was graduated with the rank of Lieutenant, and entered, as a private, one of the companies of the Body-guard of Louis XVIII. In January of the same year he entered the Sixtieth Regiment of the Line as Lieutenant, and served with distinction in the campaign of 1823 in Spain, and was made Captain in October, 1825. In 1830 he was transferred to the First Regiment of the Royal Guard, but returning to the line, he was sent to Africa, where, by a series of brilliant and able actions, he obtained rapid promotion. He took part in the expedition of Mascara, and in 1835 distinguished himself by his bravery in the campaign against Achmet-Bey, under Marshal Clausel, and in 1837 was made a Lieutenant Colonel. His services in the expedition of the Portes-de-Fer gained him the rank of Colonel, and his successes over the Hadjoutes and Kabyles were rewarded with the cross of an officer of the Legion of Honor. After the expedition of Medea, and the actions at Mouzai and Chéliff, in 1840, he was made a Brigadier General. After three years of further brilliant services, which resulted in the submission of the tribes which sustained Abd-e-Kader, he was promoted to the rank of General of Division, on August 3, 1843. In 1847 he was placed in command of the Division of Algiers, by the Duke D'Aumale, Governor General of Algiers. After Cavaignac had been appointed General of Division and Governor of the Colony by the Provisional Government, Changarnier returned to France, and in a letter, in which he spoke of his habit of conquering, he asked the Republican Government to utilize his devotion to France. M. De Lamartine appointed him Ambassador to Berlin, but he preferred to remain in Paris, and after the threatening manifestation of April 16, to the Provisional Government, he voluntarily assumed command of the Government forces, and restored order. When Cavaignac became Minister of War, Changarnier was appointed his successor as Governor General of Algiers, and held that post for five months. Having been elected to the National Assembly from the Department of the Seine, he returned to Paris, and was placed in command of the National Guard. When Louis Napoleon became President, Changarnier was appointed commander of the regular troops, known as the Army of Paris. He prevented outbreaks on Jan. 29 and June 13, 1849, and supported Louis Napoleon for a considerable time, exciting the distrust of the Republicans. Afterward he strenuously opposed the President's measures, and was deprived of his command on Jan. 9, 1851. The Assembly, for their own safety, wished to give him command of the troops destined for their protection, but the project fell through, and Changarnier, who had declared in the Chamber that "not a battalion, nor a company, nor even a squadron could be found that would inaugurate the era of the Cæsars," could do nothing to prevent the coup d'état. He was arrested on the morning of Dec. 2, and was carried to Mazas, where he remained for some time, and was banished from France on Jan. 9, 1852. He resided abroad for some time, refusing to return under the permission that had been accorded him, and in 1855 sent a letter to the French press, in which he vehemently contradicted the statement that had been made to the effect that he had offered to arrest his colleagues, Cavaignac, Charras, Lamoriere and other Republican Generals. After the general amnesty in 1859 he returned to France, and resided on his property in the Department of Saone-et-Loire. On the outbreak of the Franco-German war Marshal Lebœuf, the Minister of War, declined to avail himself of his services, but in August the Emperor invited him to go to Metz where he remained with Bazaine, who employed him in initiatory negotiations with Prince Frederick Charles, which resulted on Oct. 27 in the capitulation of the French Army. He then remained in Germany as a prisoner of war until the conclusion of the armistice in January, 1871, after which he returned to Paris. He was elected to the National Assembly by the Departments of Gironde, Le Nord, and Somme, and took his seat for the last named. On April 5, 1849, he was made Grand officer of the Legion of Honor.

BURGLARS CAPTURED.

TWO THIEVES ARRESTED—A CLUE TO STOLEN PROPERTY DISCOVERED.

Yesterday afternoon Detectives Ferris and Von Griechten, of the Central Office, while in the vicinity of Second avenue and Ninth street, noticed two men loitering about the neighborhood. Their movements were very suspicious, and the officers arrested them and took them to Police Headquarters, where they were arraigned before Superintendent Walling, who at once recognized them as Michael Sheehan, alias "Sheeny Mike," and James Heany, two of the most adroit burglars in this City. On being searched, they were both found armed with revolvers, and also had in their possession skeleton keys, black masks, and other burglars' tools. On the person of Heany, who gave his name as James Wilson, were found small quantities of vanilla beans, which are supposed to be samples of 19 cases which were stolen in November last from the storehouse of Gomez, Rionda & Co., No. 9 Old slip. Sheehan was found to answer the description of a man who was seen in the neighborhood of the store of Messrs. Benjamin, Hahn & Co., importers of cloaks, No. 315 Broadway, which store was entered by burglars during the interval between the 3d and 5th inst., and robbed of goods valued at $3,000. These goods were taken away in a large packing trunk and a case. After the prisoners were locked up the officers proceeded to make an investigation and ascertained that Sheehan, Heany, and another man who is still at large, hired two rooms in a house on East Ninth street, near Second avenue, about three weeks ago, and that on the morning of Monday, the 5th inst., a truck and case answering the description of the receptacles in which the goods were carried off from the store of Benjamin, Hahn & Co. were brought into the rooms. They were removed about an hour before Heany and Sheehan were arrested. The detectives hunted up the expressman who had been employed to remove the goods, and learned that he had taken them to No. 137 East Thirty-third street, which was found to be the residence of "Sheeny Mike." The detectives proceeded to the house in Thirty-third street, and there found the trunk which was stolen from Benjamin, Hahn & Co. At Heany's residence, in Chrystie street, the detectives found quantities of stolen property, which were all taken to the Central Office to await identification.

"Sheeny Mike" was arrested some months ago on suspicion of having been concerned in the burglary at Horton's jewelry store in Fulton street, but was discharged for want of evidence. He is also suspected of having been one of the men who robbed the jewelry establishment of Stein Brothers, in Nassau street, and also the pawnshop of Mos Bros., in Catharine street. Heany is now under bail for having robbed Edler's kid glove store on Broadway some years ago. The prisoners are locked up at Police Head-quarters, and will be taken to the Washington Place Police Court to-day.

SALE OF PAINTINGS AT THE KURTZ GALLERY.

To-night Robert Somerville will sell at auction the collection of paintings belonging to Mr. Henry N. Smith, which has been on exhibition in the picture gallery of Kurtz on Madison square. The number of striking names of modern painters is unusual. Corot is represented by one of the pictures which are probably the most familiar to the public—a kind of blonde as well as gray painting, the subject being water and river banks, with overhanging trees. Theodore Rousseau has a peculiar "French Village," with tones running to brown. Daubigny is here in a charming landscape, dated 1871, and Diaz has a lovely landscape of a melancholy cast of feeling. There is also a "Venus and Cupid" by him, the coloring of which suggests Ziem. A Venice view with sunset by the latter is a very favorable specimen of a justly popular artist. Jules Breton shows well with a "Brittany Woman with Distaff," and there is one of Toulmouche's beautifully dressed and wonderfully painted women, beside whom the ladies of Bonnat, Baudry, and Compte-Calix appear to lack decision. Paul Marie Lenoir appears in a fresh subject called "The Salutation." An Oriental horseman, a Kurd or Tartar, has ridden his horse up some flat stone steps, and reaching from the saddle presents an Oriental woman of Parisian cast, with a veiled view. It is a piquant picture, notwithstanding the suspicion of inaccuracy, and well painted besides. There is also a crayon by Rosa Bonheur and paintings by Gérome, Koekkoek, Verboeckhoven, Bierstadt, and Coomans. The example of Merle is called "Poetical Inspiration," and in spite of great excellence, not merely of technique but of expression, is a little painful. One cannot help admiring the knowledge that suggested the shape and expression of this face, and the skill that could transfer it to canvas. Lamoulnet is here with a little landscape named "Near Bougival," which affords one that rest which is grateful after seeing Merle.

THE INTERNATIONAL RIFLE MATCH.

A letter was received from Capt. J. H. A. MacDonald, Captain of the Scottish Rifle Team, yesterday, by Mr. Schermerhorn, Secretary of the National Rifle Association, which contains the following: "It is very kind of the donors of the International trophy to consult those who competed, and the only desire we have had in considering what to recommend has been to promote the permanence and efficiency of this great match. * * * We are all very strongly of the opinion that the feature of the match is the gathering of several nationalities, without which it would lose much éclat, and this can only be insured by not holding it too often, looking at the enormous distances to be travelled and the great expense involved. * * * I suppose you will hold that there will be no attempt to supersede the separate nationalities by a British team. If such is made by any of our English friends I hope it will be understood in America that we object to the right of a British team to shoot now, after concessions have been joined by your nation, with our Scotch nation, as a separate nationality in rifle-shooting matches."

THE NORTHAMPTON BANK ROBBERS.

The requisition papers from the Governor of Massachusetts for the bodies of the three burglars arrested on Wednesday on a charge of being concerned in the Northampton Bank robbery, have been sent to Gov. Robinson, and the Governor of Pennsylvania, for their action. "Jim" Dunlap, and "Bob" Scott, the cracksmen arrested in Philadelphia, Detective Pinkerton says, are the most expert and daring burglars in the country. "Billy" Connors, the man arrested in this City, Mr. Pinkerton says, is chiefly remarkable in discovering "good places" to rob, and in afterward disposing of the booty. It is not certain that he was actually one of the gang of masked men who entered Cashier Whitelese's house at Northampton, but there is strong evidence to show that he helped to dispose of the money and securities stolen. The three men will probably be transferred to Massachusetts in a day or two. Connors, who still denies any complicity in the robbery, was visited yesterday at the Tombs by his counsel.

MR. BENNETT TO RETURN.

The Newport correspondent of the Providence Journal reports under date of 14th inst.: "The story that Mr. James Gordon Bennett is to remain abroad for an indefinite period in consequence of the recent unpleasantness, does not appear to have the least foundation. He has already made inquiry relative to certain cottages, as to whether they are to be rented or not, and the tenor of his letter leaves no doubt whatever that he will be in Newport during the season, as usual. Notwithstanding the talk of many straight-laced people, there is no doubt whatever about Mr. Bennett's presence being always welcomed here."

PROPOSALS.

PROPOSALS FOR ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Jan. 25, 1877.

Sealed proposals are invited from steel-plate engravers and plate printers, and will be received at this department until 12 o'clock M. on Wednesday, the 28th day of February, 1877, for furnishing all the postage stamps which this department may require for public and official use during a period of four years, commencing on the 1st day of May, 1877, viz:

1. Stamps for the use of the public.
2. Official stamps for the use of the executive departments.
3. Newspaper and periodical stamps.

QUALITY OF STAMPS.

The stamps must be furnished, subject to the approval of the department, from steel plates, engraved in the highest style of the art of steel engraving, and printed in such colors as may from time to time be selected by the department, in the best and most approved manner, upon paper of the best quality, suitable for the purpose and satisfactory to the department, thoroughly gummed with the best quality of adhesive gum, perforated in such manner that each separate stamp can be readily detached and used, the sheets to be well pressed, and packed so as to prevent them from adhering to each other; the same to be furnished at such reasonable dispatch as such facilities as may in each case be ordered by the department daily to fill requisitions from Postmasters and from the executive departments. The stamps must be printed on dampened presses.

DIES, ROLLS, AND PLATES.

The dies, rolls, and plates from which postage stamps are now printed, being the property of the United States, will be placed in the keeping and custody of the contractor on or before the first day of May, 1877, the same to be held and subject to the order and control of the department, as hereinafter provided; and the contractor will be required, from said dies, rolls, and plates, and from such rolls and plates as may be necessary to be reproduced from the dies, to have on hand, ready for issue on the day the contract term commences, a sufficient stock of stamps of the several denominations and kinds required, to fill the current daily requisitions from the department, without hindrance or delay.

The contractor will be further required to keep in repair all dies, rolls, and plates from which stamps may be printed, and to renew the same whenever required; and should new designs be required at any time to take the place of the present series of stamps for the use of the public, or of any of them, or for denominations of stamps not now in use, the same shall be furnished and engraved, subject to the approval of the Postmaster General, upon his request, within a reasonable time; all which shall be done and executed in the best style of steel engraving by the contractor, and at his own expense. No change will be made in the present designs of official postage stamps, or of newspaper and periodical stamps; but the contractor will be required to keep in repair, and renew when required, the dies, rolls, and plates for these stamps, the same as for the stamps for the use of the public. All dies, rolls, and plates made or used at any time in filling the contract shall immediately become the absolute property of the United States, and shall be delivered, in good working order, to the Postmaster General or his authorized agent whenever demanded.

BUILDING, PLACE OF MANUFACTURE, &c.

The stamps will be required to be manufactured in a fire-proof building, and in separate apartments, distinct from those in which any other work is done by the contractor—the whole to be subject to the approval of the department—and when finished must be placed in a fire and burglar-proof safe or vault, to be specially provided for that purpose, and constructed to the satisfaction of the department. The contractor, his employes, and agents shall conform to such regulations as the department may from time to time adopt for the security of the Government.

AGENT—OFFICE-ROOMS—INSPECTION.

A resident agent of the department will have supervision of the manufacture, storage, and issue of the stamps, who shall at all times have full and free access to the apartments, safes, and vaults where the stamps are manufactured and stored, for the purpose of inspecting the same; and the contractor shall furnish him and his clerks suitable office and desk room, for the transaction of the business of his agency, without cost to the Government. The Postmaster General and his agents may at any time cause an inspection to be made, by any agent or agents whom he may specially designate for the purpose, of the apartments, safes, and vaults used for the manufacture and storage of stamps, and of the stamps in course of manufacture or in stock.

STOCK ON HAND.

The contractor shall at all times keep on hand a stock of the several denominations and kinds of stamps, subject to the control of the Post Office Department, its regularly authorized agent, or such other agents as may be specially authorized by the Postmaster General in all stages of manufacture, sufficient to meet all orders of the department, and to provide against any and all contingencies that may be likely to occur during the existence of the contract, so that each and every order of the department may be promptly filled, and the department shall have the right to require the contractor at any time during the existence of the contract to furnish an extra quantity of stamps not exceeding a supply for three months.

PACKING.

Stamps to be transmitted by sea routes must be securely packed in hermetically sealed tin cases, wrapped in strong manila paper; others must either be packed in strong binders'-board boxes, bound on the edges and corners with muslin, and enveloped in two thicknesses of strong manila paper, or inclosed in strong canvas envelopes, as the necessity to be transmitted may require; all packages to be so inclosed as to enable the agent of the department to officially seal them.

DELIVERY.

Stamps to be transmitted by sea routes must be delivered by the contractor in separate packages, as above provided for, at the Post Office in the place where the same are manufactured, or at such other Post Office in the immediate vicinity of the place of manufacture as the Postmaster General may direct; or in such quantities at the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C. (each denomination and kind being kept separate,) as the Postmaster General may direct.

BLANKS.

In addition, the contractor will be required to furnish labels, and direct the same, for each package, in accordance with the daily lists furnished by the agent of the department, together with all other blanks required to be inclosed with the stamps; also, all blanks for daily, weekly, monthly, and quarterly returns relating to the number and denominations of stamps furnished.

REPORTS.

The contractor will be required to report weekly, under oath, the number, denomination, and kind of stamps manufactured, (finished, unfinished, and spoiled,) the number issued during the week, and the number available for issue; all spoiled stamps to be destroyed by the agent of the department in the presence of the contractor or his representative, or otherwise disposed of, as the Postmaster General may direct.

AWARD.

The contract will be awarded on the basis of the number of the several kinds of stamps issued during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, as follows:

1. Number of stamps for use of the public.698,799,090
2. Number of official stamps for use of the executive departments..... 17,082,663
3. Number of newspaper and periodical stamps..... 1,290,347

Total..... 717,772,102

Bids must be made for each kind of stamps separately, the bidders stating in their proposals the price per thousand stamps, including everything required to be done or furnished, as set forth in this advertisement; and the contract will be awarded as a whole to the lowest responsible bidder in the aggregate, the amount of a bid to be ascertained by extending the above issues at the prices bid respectively, and then aggregating the amounts of the three several items. It must be understood, however, that proposals made under this advertisement shall include all the stamps needed by the department during the contract term, without reference to the above issues, should the use of any of the above kinds of stamps be discontinued during the contract term, the contractor will not be entitled to damages on account of such discontinuance.

HEMP AND POISON DO THE WORK.

EXECUTION OF CHARLES OSCHWALD FOR THE MURDER OF OFFICER BROCK—THOMAS RYAN, HIS ACCOMPLICE, CHEATS THE GALLOWS BY TAKING POISON—THE STORY OF THE MURDER AND TRIAL—THE CONDEMNED MAN PROTESTS HIS INNOCENCE TO THE LAST.

Charles Oschwald yesterday morning suffered the extreme penalty of the law at Newark. Convicted in November last of the murder of Officer Brock, of the Newark Police force, he was, with Thomas Ryan, his companion, in the double offense of burglary and murder, sentenced to be hanged. Both men were defended by able counsel. The friends of both, accepting their protestations of innocence, urged upon their defenders the necessity of using every means possible to prevent their execution, and great exertions were made to obtain a new trial. These efforts were not successful, however, and the New-Jersey Senate having refused to pass a bill introduced for the express benefit of the prisoners, the Sheriff of Essex County proceeded on Wednesday to make the necessary preparations for the execution, and at 11:08 A. M. yesterday Charles Oschwald was executed in the presence of about 150 persons. His companion, Thomas Ryan, died about three hours before, with symptoms that led to the conclusion, after a superficial post-mortem examination, that poison had either been taken by or administered to the condemned man. The event caused a great deal of excitement in Newark, crowds of people thronging the streets in the neighborhood of the County Jail from 7 o'clock in the morning until noon.

THE STORY OF THE MURDER.

Early in the morning of Aug. 3, 1876, Officer J. Stanley Brock, of the Newark Police force, left his home at No. 120 South street, Newark, to watch some houses which he had been detailed to guard. In Murray street, near Clinton avenue, his attention was attracted by a noise in the cellar of the unoccupied house of Mr. Horace S. Bedell, on the north-east corner of Murray street and Clinton avenue. Crossing the street, he found that the bars before the cellar window had been pried off and the sash removed. Without hesitation he jumped into the cellar, groped his way to the stairway leading to the floor above, ascended it, and, finding no one on the parlor floor, kept on to the floor above. On trying the bath-room door, some one resisted. Revolver in hand, he pushed it open and was confronted by two men, one of whom commanded him to stand, and immediately afterward fired a shot at Brock, the officer at the same time returning the fire. Brock descended the stairs, staggered out into the court-yard, and fell upon the grass plot. Mr. John Fussell, who lives in Murray street, next door to the Bedell house, heard the two shots, ran to his window overlooking Mr. Bedell's yard, and saw two men coming out of the cellar. He shouted: "What are you doing there?" Both looked up, and Mr. Fussell saw their faces distinctly! As they walked toward the fence Mr. Fussell shouted to them a second time, and again saw their faces when they turned. Climbing the fences, the two men escaped to Murray street, Clinton avenue, and High street. Mr. Fussell observed that one of them carried in his hand a black bag. Officer Brock was taken first to his own house, and afterward to St. Barnabas Hospital. He died on Aug. 10. The Chief of Police at once took measures to secure the arrest of the murderers, and before night on the day of the murder enough evidence had been secured to warrant the arrest of Thomas Ryan and Charles Oschwald, the keepers of a saloon at No. 19 Springfield avenue. Before Justice Jessup, Mr. Fussell and other witnesses fully identified the two men, and they were committed for trial. Officer Brock made an ante mortem deposition, in which he said that the man who said "Stand!" was the one who fired, and that he was a smooth-faced man. He knew Thomas Ryan, but did not know Oschwald. He was sure that Thomas Ryan was not the man who shot him, but from the size and appearance of Charles Oschwald, he said, "It is my opinion that he is the man who shot me."

The trial of Oschwald and Ryan began in the Court of Oyer and Terminer on Oct. 19. For the State, Prosecutor Abeel and Attorney General Yaatts appeared. Oschwald was defended by Mr. Samuel Morrow, Jr., and Senator W. J. Magie, of Elizabeth, and Ryan's defender was Mr. W. H. Hageman, Jr. From the first the trial excited the deepest interest, the court-room being crowded each day during its continuance. John Fussell positively identified the prisoners as the men he had seen emerging from Mr. Bedell's house immediately after the shooting. Deborah Dunmore, a colored woman, also swore to having seen the two men on High street, as they came across from Clinton avenue. The prisoners were traced by other witnesses to Reuben Roe's saloon on Springfield avenue. James S. Blanchard, testified that in Ryan and Oschwald's saloon, some time before the burglary and shooting, he was asked by the two prisoners an easy way to get into Mr. Bedell's house, and he told them to get in by the cellar window. Oschwald and Ryan endeavored to prove an alibi. Oschwald, his father and brother, and a servant, also testified that he was in the house before 6 o'clock in the morning. Ryan testified that on the night preceding the murder he was in his saloon with three men, and that the party remained until 5:15 on the morning of Aug. 3. In rebuttal the State produced testimony that Charles Oschwald's father did not know where his son was on the night before the murder, and insisted that the testimony of the Oschwald family did not disprove his participation in the murder, and asserted that the testimony of the brother Frederick was perjured. Ryan's testimony was characterized as unworthy of belief. On Saturday, Nov. 4, at 3:15 in the afternoon, the case was given to the jury. On Sunday, the 5th, at 10:15, the jury rendered a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. The men were sentenced by Judge Depue on Nov. 18 to be hanged on Jan. 5. A voluminous bill of exceptions to the charge and rulings of the Judge was made out and submitted to Chancellor Runyon, on an application to carry the case to the Court of Errors and Appeals, on a motion for a new trial. The Chancellor refused. Gov. Bedle was then asked for a respite, which was granted on Dec. 27, to last until Feb. 9. Finding that the Court of Pardons would not be called by Gov. Bedle for the benefit of Oschwald and Ryan, Senator Magie introduced into the Legislature a bill making writs of error in cases of this kind writs of right, and allowing them to be carried directly to the Court of Errors without regard to the Chancellor. The bill was passed, but Gov. Bedle vetoed it, but respited the condemned men until yesterday.

THE PRISONERS' LAST NIGHT OF LIFE.

Since their sentence the prisoners had not ceased to hope until Monday night, when word was communicated to them by Sheriff Harrison that the bill for their relief had not been passed over the Governor's veto. The prisoners' counsel made new efforts to obtain from them a confession of their guilt, but until the two men asserted their innocence. On Monday, Oschwald's mother and Ryan's father and brother visited the prison, and at 6 o'clock Oschwald's brother and Ryan's brother and sisters applied for admission but were refused, as the gallows was then being erected. The Sheriff was then in charge of the prisoners, and Deputy Sheriff Davis had informed them that they were to be separated. Oschwald received the announcement without emotion, and walked from cell No. 24, which the two had occupied, to cell No. 4 on the first tier. Ryan fell back on his bed in so weak a condition that he had to be carried down to cell No. 3. Guards were placed about the prison, immediately under the walls, and a block distant in each direction, and the strictest precautions were exercised to prevent any attempt at a rescue. Oschwald ate supper early in the evening, but Ryan, who had complained of illness, could not eat. At 9 o'clock Rev. Mr. Allen, a Baptist minister, arrived and remained with them, offering spiritual consolation. Ryan grew worse during the evening, with violent pains in his stomach, vomiting, and retching, and at 10:30 o'clock it was thought he was dying. He was taken from the pallet in his cell and laid upon a cot in the corridor, and Dr. Kememan, the jail physician, administered a number of remedies. When asked by Col. Johnson, the Warden, if his moaning and tossing were not caused by remorse, Ryan said: "I can only say I am innocent. More I can't say without lying." He grew worse at 11 o'clock, becoming delirious and exclaiming in his anguish "I wish the gallows were ready now," and bursting into tears. Rallying, he called out to Oschwald, "Brace up, Charley," and afterward fell into an uneasy, broken sleep. Sheriff Harrison and Mr. Morrow, of prisoners' counsel, had a long interview with Oschwald, at the end of which he reiterated his innocence. At 11 o'clock he blew out his light and went to bed. The gallows was erected during the evening, in full sight of both prisoners. Toward daylight it was noticed by Deputy Sheriff Baldwin that Ryan's extremities were cold, and they were rubbed to restore animation. By sunrise he showed every indication of approaching death, but he asked to be moved, just before 8 o'clock, when he was taken into the corridor and sat down at the door of his cell. He drank a cup of tea, and appeared to fall asleep, but a few moments after 8 the constable in charge saw a change take place in his countenance; his jaw fell, and he died before a physician could reach him. His body was removed to the laundry of the prison half an hour afterward, when, upon an examination of the stomach, Dr. Leslie Ward and Dr. Titus found strong indications of corrosive poison.

THE HANGING OF OSCHWALD.

Oschwald manifested no surprise at the death of his fellow when informed of it. During the night he had said he hoped he [Ryan] would die before morning, so that he would not be hanged. Rev. Mr. Allen and Rev. Mr. Weed came to the cell of Oschwald soon after 8 o'clock, and from that time until the execution the sound of prayer was heard within the bars. Oschwald was shaved early in the morning, and requested the barber to remove his moustache. He then prepared himself for the execution, wearing dark pantaloons, a white shirt with black studs, and a black cravat-coat. He appeared to be entirely collected, and conversed with all who came near the door of his cell, wearing no air whatever of bravado. He said he had not slept. He bade farewell to his mother and father early in the morning. "Don't cry," he said, "it can't be helped now." The gallows stood about 50 feet away from Oschwald's cell, at the north end of the corridor, whose five windows looked out toward the east. The sun streamed in freely, except at the two windows opposite the gallows, which were screened with muslin. The gallows had been prepared for two victims, and after Ryan's death a change was made in the weights, which were reduced to about 160 pounds. Outside the prison the crowd—which was kept a block away in each direction—numbered several thousand people, and was composed in great part of children, who could see nothing whatever to gratify their curiosity. Within the prison at 10:30 there were about 150 persons, who clustered behind the rope marking the line beyond which the crowd could not go. About 20 or 30 persons climbed upon the water-trough along the eastern wall; another group stood upon a platform at the end of the room opposite the gallows, while about 30 reporters had seats on the platform before the second tier of cells. A few Under Sheriffs appeared with their staves of office, but they had no duties to perform, as the room was not half filled with spectators and all were disposed to be orderly. At 10:50 Col. Davis, Deputy Sheriff, entered Oschwald's cell, announced that the hour had come for his execution, and read the death warrant. Rev. Mr. Weed then knelt with Oschwald in prayer, and at its conclusion Oschwald kissed both his spiritual advisers, and shook hands warmly with Col. Davis, who said, "Don't go before your God with a falsehood on your lips." To which Oschwald replied: "Colonel, I die an innocent man." His arms were pinioned, the noose hung about his neck, and the black cap put on. Oschwald's face wore a pained look, but he did not quail. There was a slight stir when he came out of his cell and fell into the short procession to the gallows. The Sheriff and his first deputy led the way, the prisoner, supported by the Warden and a constable, followed, the clergymen walking close behind them. The cords about the prisoner's ankles made it somewhat difficult for him to walk, but he made his way steadily to the gallows. A chalk line had been marked on the floor upon which he was to stand, and he carefully placed his feet, as suggested, one on each side of the mark. Col. Davis adjusted the noose, connected it with the drop line, pulled the black cap over the man's face, and then stepped a pace to the rear, holding on to Oschwald's elbow. At 11:08 he nodded slightly; there was a dull noise as the treadle was moved, Oschwald rose quickly into the air, fell again to the length of the rope, and then swung about four feet above the floor from which he had been lifted. The arms were twisted slowly but strongly in their sockets, the legs were drawn up and backward a trifle, the shoulders were lifted convulsively a few times, and then all motion ceased. At 11:15 the pulsations ceased entirely, and Oschwald was pronounced dead. At 11:30 the body was lowered and taken to the laundry, where the body of Ryan already lay.

Soon after Dr. Ward and Dr. Brumley made a second examination of the body of Ryan, and found new indications of poisoning in the heart and viscera. The heart, a section of the liver, the kidneys, and a part of the intestines were removed for analysis by a chemist. It was learned that all the meals of the prisoner had been prepared out of the jail and brought to the prison by the family, and it had not occurred to the Sheriff that this privilege would be turned to the use that it now appears was made of it. Coroner Osborne issued summonses for jurors, and called an inquest to be held at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It is intimated that a searching inquiry will be made with the view of ascertaining whether Ryan was supplied with poison and voluntarily took it with intent to commit suicide, or received it in his food as it was prepared by some one else, and it was thought in Newark yesterday that perhaps another trial would grow out of the case.

During the afternoon Coroner Osborne summoned a jury who viewed Ryan's body. Pending the analysis of the stomach the inquest was adjourned to await the result.

FRAUDS UPON THE REVENUE.

AN EXTENSIVE SYSTEM OF SMUGGLING DETECTED—HOW THE CHIEF OF THE SMUGGLERS MADE A FORTUNE—TWO ARRESTS IN THIS CITY.

For several years past the Treasury officials have been aware of the existence of an extensive system of smuggling between Canada and this country, the result of which baffled their utmost efforts to discover. Last September Major William B. Moore, Supervising Special Agent, while on the frontier and in Montreal saw the evidences all around him, but could not succeed in getting to the bottom of the matter. Shortly afterward, however, he received a letter from a person in Philadelphia in whom he had confidence, saying that the writer had received a proposition to go into the smuggling business between Canada and New-York. Major Moore put the informer in communication with Major H. L. Williams, Special Agent in charge of the Philadelphia district, and directed both to report to him at Washington, where the former had facilities for obtaining letters of introduction to the chief of the smugglers. Secretary Morrill was consulted and gave the officers authority to use all the money necessary to ferret out the frauds. Major Williams and the informer proceeded to Montreal, and the latter representing himself as a would-be purchaser, they succeeded in worming themselves into the confidence of the chief, and learned all his secrets, except the names of his confederates, which he was careful not to disclose, notwithstanding all attempts to take him off his guard. His name is D. McClannaghan. He first made his appearance when a lad in Quebec, where he was employed as a stable boy. Subsequently he became an express messenger on the Grand Trunk Railway between Portland and Montreal, and did a good business passing smuggled goods on the train. He was detected and discharged in 1864 or 1865. Then, with his illegal savings—about $1,500—he went to Montreal and opened a saloon. Soon afterward he perfected and began his present system of smuggling. He managed to get into his pay the United States Inspector at Montreal, all the baggage masters of the various trains running out of that city, and certain Montreal telegraph operators. He would get from the baggage masters duplicate-numbered checks, which he would forward to his customers in this country. Then when the order arrived he would attach the other check to the package and telegraph to the customer in this style: "Pay box 7,086 S.," meaning, "I have shipped to-day box No. 7,086 by way of Springfield." The purchaser in this City could thus tell the hour of arrival, and by going to the Grand Central Depot and presenting the duplicate check could get his goods without question. All packages were sent as baggage, the railway companies being thus defrauded of the freight. McClannaghan shipped anything that was called for—silks, laces, cloth, perfumery, &c.—and he was so sure of the perfection of his arrangements that he always insured delivery. No money was asked until after the receipt of the goods. Then he required payment by check on the Bank du Peuple, Montreal, with which he did business. So successful has he been that he owns the Express Hotel and an entire block of ground in Montreal, and is estimated to be worth $250,000, all of which he has made out of his 2½ per cent. commission on his ventures.

In order to discover the other guilty parties the officers resorted to a correspondence from this City and Boston. A lot of prunella cloth was ordered from him, that being a very bulky material, and therefore easily traced, and because the duty on it is very high, amounting to 50 cents a pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem. At length, everything being in readiness, officers were sent to Rouse's Point, Island Pond, (Vt.,) Newport, (Vt.,) Ogdensburg, St. Albans—by all of which points McClannaghan shipped indifferently—Boston, and this City. Capt. Brackett's force did the work here. On Wednesday night, between 6 and 8 o'clock, a simultaneous examination of suspected baggage was made. The result elsewhere has not been reported yet, but at the Grand Central Depot a large case and several trunks of prunella cloth were captured, and Samuel Stratford, of No. 232 West Forty-first street, a relative of McClannaghan, and his New-York agent, was arrested. The officers then proceeded to Earl's Hotel and seized several more trunks of prunella cloth. Their owner, Charles B. Spencer, a large customer of McClannaghan, was taken into custody. The value of these seizures is upward of $5,000.

The prisoners were taken before Commissioner Shields last evening, and were allowed to go out on bail. A hearing is set down for Monday next at 10 A. M. A number of other arrests and seizures are to be made, and the trains are to be kept under surveillance until the business is effectually broken up.

BURGLARY ON BROADWAY.

On Wednesday night a gang of burglars visited the building No. 598 Broadway and carried off a quantity of imported laces, valued at between $1,500 and $2,000. The burglars gained access to the building by unlocking the front door on Broadway with a duplicate key. They then ascended to the second floor, which is occupied by F. Flauraud & Son, lace importers. They did not attempt to enter this place, but forced open a door at the foot of the stairs leading to the third floor, the front portion of which is occupied by William Steus, also an importer of laces. The stock of Mr. Steus was thoroughly ransacked. After having selected all that they wished to carry off, the thieves made their exit from the premises by the rear door on Crosby street. The burglary was not discovered until yesterday morning, when the porters in the employ of Flauraud & Son entered the building and found that the door at the foot of the stairway leading to Mr. Steus' establishment had been forced open. Mr. Steus has not considered it necessary to prosecute our inquiries and examinations further, as the same

UNLUCKY JERSEY CENTRAL.

THE DISSATISFIED STOCKHOLDERS.

REPORT OF THEIR COMMITTEE—IT SEVERELY CENSURES THE MANAGEMENT OF THE ROAD—LARGE LOSSES ON COAL-MINING OPERATIONS—MISSTATEMENTS IN THE ANNUAL REPORTS—MR. JOHNSTON MAKES AN EXPLANATION—THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ATTACKED.

The large back room of the bankrupt New-Jersey Central Railroad Company's office was crowded with anxious stockholders yesterday at noon. The occasion was the presentation of the report of the committee appointed to examine the books of the company at the previous meeting. Mr. Ports occupied the chair. He said that Treasurer Knox had been ordered to notify stockholders, but he had failed to do so, and this was the reason that the only notification that had been given was through the newspapers. Mr. Brookman, Chairman of the committee, then arose, and, amid profound silence, suggested that the President, Directors, and all of the employes of the company present in the building be requested to attend, and that the books be brought before the meeting.

He then read extracts from the annual reports issued by the company since 1870, over the signature and at the order of Mr. Johnston, the President, whose glowing descriptions and extravagant promises appeared extremely ludicrous in view of what followed. The reading was interspersed with sarcastic remarks, and drew smiles from the audience. Before proceeding to the report the speaker delivered a rousing address reflecting severely upon Mr. Johnston, and claiming, in explanation of the statement of floating indebtedness made at the previous meeting, that the committee had relied upon the word of the President as to the amount, and had been grossly deceived. [Sensation.] Then, standing upon a chair, Mr. Brookman read the following report, premising that the half had not been discovered, as the committee had neither the time nor the right to expend money necessary to employ experts:

Your committee not being experts, nor furnished with the means of employing them, cannot go fully into proper details, as that would be the work of months, but we can lay before you sufficient facts to enable you to form some judgment of the value of your stock in the company, and incidentally of its past management. The first that we find of the existence of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company is their balance-sheet of the date of Jan. 1, 1874, at which time the company was formed by the merger of several coal companies, their lands, improvements, over-paid royalties, personal properties, equipment, bills receivable, and $13,000,000 stock in treasury, in all amounting to $21,734,898 43, as also the liabilities, amounting to $11,327,906 37, and the capital stock issued, $10,000,000, representing, according to the books, the value of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, except a surplus, as stated, of $507,010. This merger included the merger of the Honeybrook Coal Company, whose stock in December just previous to this merger was suddenly increased from $3,500,000 to $6,000,000. The increase of those other companies included in the same merger could not be ascertained by us in the limited time allowed. With the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company thus formed, the Central Railroad of New-Jersey formed a connection, or rather took 133,535 shares, costing, as per entries in the books of the Central Railroad Company, $5,061,771 06, and by their annual statement of Jan. 1, 1874, $4,953,169 32. (Of the correctness of neither of these amounts have we been able to satisfy ourselves.) They also purchased $5,000,000 bonds of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company at 90 per cent., costing $4,500,000.

With an annual loss in mining of a large amount, and a constantly increasing loss from overpaid royalties, your companies in 1875 agreed to guarantee the payment of principal and interest of the $15,000,000 of the bonds of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Company, of which amount they have actually guaranteed $13,180,000. During the year 1874 $3,056,883 44 was added to the cost of the properties, as appeared by the books of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Company, for lands, improvements, yards, stations, and piers, and in 1875 $1,208,127 59 for similar purposes. From the formation of the company in 1874 to Jan. 1, 1877, large additions from year to year have been made in the charges for personal property and equipments without any apparent deduction for loss or depreciation, while the assets are swelled by a charge of $640,000 for interest on lands not worked.

Your present bonded debt is stated in the annual statement of Jan. 1, 1877, as $14,489,143 33. In addition to that amount there is also $1,753,000 of the company's bonds hypothecated by the company for security for loans. The floating debt is stated Jan. 1, 1877, at $6,521 451 01. The company marketed in—

1876, tons	2,381,591.02
In all three years, tons	6,836,305.18

The results of the mining operations for three years were:

Loss in 1874	$507,010 06
Loss in 1875	561,155 33
Loss in 1876	1,308,000 00
And interest on idle property charged in assets	640,000 00
Add royalties overpaid for three years	$1,367,789 61
Less those assumed at time of merger	170,459 39— 1,197,330 22
Showing an actual loss by operating for three years	$4,273,495 61
Should be also added to this estimated loss and depreciation on equipments and personal property of $353,333 33 years for three years	1,000,000 00
All amounting to	$5,273,495 61

By the annual statement of the Central Railroad Company of New-Jersey of Dec. 31, 1876, we find their floating debt stated at $3,468,254 10.

Also we find that in addition to the floating debt they had indorsed the paper of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Company to the extent of $1,141,920 73

And that they had as an asset against it a claim against the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, unsecured, of 1,811,221 81

That the bonded debt of the past year has seriously increased and, as stated, amounts to 27,394,413 00

Besides the blanket mortgage 5,000,000 00

(of which a greater part has been issued as collateral for loans obtained.) Besides being indorsed on the bonds of the

Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company for $13,180,000 00

American Dock and Improvement Company for 3,000,000 00

New-Jersey Stock and Market Company for 150,000 00

Also of interest on $2,000,000 of the stock of the Long Branch Railroad Company (of which the company own the greater part)

Also guaranteed interest on $458,300 of the South Branch Railroad Company

We see by the annual statement of Dec. 31, 1876, set down a large amount for the value of the rolling stock, but we do not find in the books any allowance made for depreciation and destruction for the past seven years, except as follows:

On engines	$6,631 36
On passenger cars	3,745 84
On freight cars	8,235 52
On coal cars	180,511 50
On boats	50,000 00

The annual inventory estimates their value at $1,552,198 16, less than the amount stated in the annual statement of the company, and from the best information we have gained, that valuation in the annual inventory is much greater than it should have been stated. We notice in the annual statement that the cost of the 133,535 shares of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Company, stated at $5,789,088 26, is $719,311 20 greater than the cost appears by the books of this company. We also find in the annual statement that the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Company's bonds are stated at $377,350 more than their cost. We also notice the Brill Farm put down at a valuation of $350,000, which requires particular explanation, as it did not cost any such sum at its first purchase. We also notice in the statement, that the New-Jersey Stock-yard and Market Company is stated as an asset of $158,808 52, but the property represented by this item is a portion of the property of the American Dock Company.

We also find by the statement that the American Dock and Improvement Company is represented by:

Stock	$3,000,000 00
Bonds	3,000,000 00
Open Account	387,425 40
Jersey City Station	1,315,850 50

All of which is virtually one property, and has been much advanced from its true cost.

On July 16, 1865, by resolution of the Directors a stock dividend of 25 per cent. was declared, and the amount thereof, to wit, $2,000,000, was charged to land account, which had no existence until that entry was made. Subsequently $1,538,039 82 of that amount was transferred to the debit of the American Dock and Improvement Company and Jersey City Station; as also $1,975,107 68 for interest; as also discount on bonds sold, $19,379. The gross receipts of the same property, as appears by the books of the company from 1865 to 1875 inclusive, amounted to $32,463,463 61, of which the American Dock and Improvement Company was not perfected until October, 1874, at which time they paid the State of New-Jersey $300,000 to perfect the title. Nearly nine years after a stock dividend of 25 per cent. on the capital of the railroad company had been made on the profit of holding this unprofitable property. The balance of $8,000,000 with interest was charged to other lands of the company on the line of the road. In the annual account of the company January, 1871, on the twelfth page is an item headed "New-Jersey Land and Improvement Company," which is in effect as follows:

"That an extra dividend to the stockholders of the Central Railroad Company of 20 per cent. on the value of the lands on the lines of the road is awarded to them pro rata, if they will pay to the Railroad Company the other 70 per cent. (By the light of the last entry to which we called your attention, you who availed yourself of the privilege of the pro rata allotment can appreciate the dividend.") [Applause and laughter.]

We have not considered it necessary to prosecute our inquiries and examinations further, as the same system seems to extend to the road-bed, interest account, and other items.

The raised and irregular charges to which we have called your attention are as follows:
American Dock and Imp. Company.	1,538,039 82
Interest on same	1,975,107 68
Discount on bonds	19,379 00
Interest charged on property raised since 1872	346,195 31
Raised value of Lehigh and Wilkesbarre bonds raised	751,811 10
Discount on bonds stated in last annual statement	300,000 00
Lehigh and Wilkesbarre bonds raised	377,350 00
Equipment charged in excess of inventory	1,552,198 16
Ferry-boats, in excess of inventory	150,000 60
New-Jersey Stock-yard and Market Company	$158,808 52
Bonds assumed	150,000 00— 308,808 52
New-Jersey and West Line bonds	407,557 55
Interest charged to Newark Branch	98,330 80
Making an apparent loss and depreciation for 10 years, including the stock dividend declared in 1865	7,824,827 94
To which should be added an estimated depreciation on equipment	2,000,000 00
Or a total of	$9,824,827 94

In order to our estimate, your true condition add to the above loss:

The cost of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre stock, which we consider as worthless as an asset of the company	$5,061,777 00
Also loss of Wilkesbarre bonds, all of which are hypothecated and loaned to the Wilkesbarre Company	4,406,000 00
And also the amount of the loan on mortgage loaned to the Wilkesbarre Company	1,142 000 00
Or a total loss or depreciation of	$20,434,605 00

In conclusion, your committee beg to state that they entered upon the discharge of their duties with a sincere desire to be just, after a careful examination of the condition of the company, to recommend the stockholders to come forward and assist it in its present necessities for the amount asked, but cannot, after the examination we have made, recommend you to do so, but have preferred to submit the facts and figures for your consideration.

JOHN N. BROOKMAN, Chairman,
CHARLES G. MILLER,
GEORGE H. POTTER.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 13, 1877.

THE LATE PRESIDENT EXPLAINS.

There was silence for a few moments, and then some one moved the thanks of the meeting to the committee. Carried. President Johnston here came forward. He said that he could hardly articulate. He said it was proper that he should say something in response to the report. A worse time could not be selected for the meeting so far as the officers were concerned. The report had not been seen by them, and no opportunity had been given them to answer it. He had applied to the Chairman to see the report, and had been answered that he would have it read at the meeting. This was hardly the place to answer it. Any explanation he had to make must be made to a small assemblage; he could not address a crowd. The committee had called on him on Tuesday, but he was obliged to be in Trenton all day and could not meet them. The policy of the company in regard to issuing its reports had been this: For the first five years no reports had been made. When he (Mr. Johnston) became President he issued a five years' report in opposition to the wishes of a great many who do not favor making reports because "it gives people too many things to take hold of." [Sarcastic laughter.] The next year and a half he had been abroad and no reports were made, but when he returned he had the omission supplied. During the past few years the road had been far from prosperous, and when at the weakest, a regular concerted attack came from the newspapers, which was successful. Then an appeal was made to the stockholders, new blood was infused into the management, and the temporary result was good, but, unfortunately, everything settled down again. When Mr. Knight made his call for $3,000,000 matters had come to a crisis. Then the Committee of Investigation was appointed, and this was the best thing that could possibly be devised to kill the concern. A Receiver became an absolute necessity.

Mr. Brookman asked if Mr. Johnston challenged the figures of the report. Mr. Johnston answered that he challenged its conclusions.

Mr. Imbrie thought the officers were less criminal than negligent. He made a motion that the books be produced, and that the President, Controller, Treasurer, and Auditor appear before the stockholders and explain from them the statements of the committee's report.

Mr. Johnston answered that the books were in the hands of the Sheriff, and in any event he would not be able to go over them. The annual statements were correct so far as he knew. Besides, the Auditor and other officers were too busy to be present. Some one asked if Mr. Johnston would undertake to give a detailed explanation if accorded a reasonable time. He answered that he could not enter into details, but he could give his views if desired. [Applause and cries of hear, hear.] Continuing, he said that the stockholders had an immense property in the best condition and in first-class order. The road has a double track, and the lower portion four tracks, and the road bed is prepared along the entire length for the accommodation of an indefinite business. The equipment is in first-class order. It undoubtedly stands on the books at a higher rate than it is worth to-day, but it was purchased when things were high. It ought to be reduced as profits accrue. If the stock-holders had put up $2,000,000 the officers knew where to get the other million, and matters could have gone on. It was well to add that the Directors had not been sellers of their stock.

A gentleman interrupted to say that Senator Frelinghuysen had disposed of 500 shares at the time the last dividend was declared. Mr. Johnston acknowledged that this was true, but said he still owned 500 shares. He continued to the effect that the officers had done everything honestly, and with the best intentions. [Applause.]

A motion was made to appoint a new committee to take into consideration the new state of affairs and recommend some way of saving what was left. This gave rise to an excited discussion, all sorts of irrelevant subjects being interpolated. Mr. Johnston moved the discharge of the first committee, and deprecated the appointment of another until they should have something to act upon. A motion was made and carried that the report be accepted. Mr. Brookman rose to a personal explanation. He warmly denounced Mr. Johnston's assertion that he had pronounced the road worthless. He had had, on the contrary, the utmost faith in the road, and it has cost him and his brother a loss of $5,000. He did not lack faith in the road, but in its management. He continued: "Last Monday I met Mr. Johnston by accident, and he commenced to give me instructions as to how I should make out my report—

Mr. Johnston (interrupting)—Mr. Brookman misunderstood me. He is too excitable. Nothing was further from my thoughts than an attempt to manage the committee.

Mr. Brookman said that the Chairman did notify Mr. Johnston that the report was ready, and appointed an hour to hear his explanation.

Mr. Johnston said that he had explained that matter already.

Mr. Brookman said he had come early to the meeting so as to give Mr. Johnston an opportunity of saying something, but the latter did not put in an appearance until 11:50. Then, turning to the ex-President, he continued: "I will now take up the report and question you in regard to each item."

Mr. Johnston hastily declined, "in self-defense," to answer any questions whatever; he couldn't do it without the books.

Mr. Brookman demanded that the Treasurer and Controller be brought before the meeting and compelled to answer questions.

Mr. Johnston replied that they were too busy.

This sort of thing was kept up for some time amid great excitement, until at length some one asked Mr. Brookman whether he had not sold out his stock last Monday. The reply came quick and sharp. "Yes I did, and furthermore I erased my name and that of my brother from the subscription list, and told the Treasurer that I would not permit any such fraud to go out to the public." "How much are you interested now?" was the next question. "As little as I can be" was the answer. "But how much?" "One solitary share." A stockholder asked if he had not sold his stock as he would a sickly cow. [Laughter.] Another retorted: "I wish he had told me, and I would have sold mine too." Col. Hope, a Director of the New-Jersey Land and Improvement Company, began to expatiate on the great value of its property. "Why don't you sell it then?" he was asked. An old gentleman named Dr. Coles angrily told Mr. Brookman that when he had sold his stocks he should have resigned from the committee, and not have come there to depreciate the property of others after having made himself secure. [Cries of "Good, good."] Dr. Coles continuing, said that he could not imagine anything more contemptible, base, or mean than Mr. Brookman's conduct. The latter retorted: "Nothing, perhaps, except the management of the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company." For a few minutes a row seemed imminent. Uncomplimentary epithets were hurled at the committee from all sides, and several persons plainly stated that they believed the assertions of the report were lies. Finally the question of a committee, to be composed of three large bondholders and three large stockholders, came up again, and was carried amid cries of "No more deadheads."

The Chairman refused to appoint the committee. His last appointments had not met the approval of the meeting, though he had been at infinite pains to select good men. Incidentally, he defended the committee, of which he had been ex officio one, and said that they could not have truthfully made any other report.

Col. Hope again eulogized the value of the company's property. [Cries of "Good, good," and "Will you guarantee it?"]

The Chairman said he, too, thought the property valuable if it was held together. Then, returning to the report, he said that the book-keeper and Controller had given all the figures as they appeared in it.

Another attack was made on Mr. Brookman, and he was accused of selling the stock short, but this he denied. After considerable more discussion, it was decided to appoint a committee consisting of Dr. Coles, Warren Ackerman, and Stephen H. Condit, to whom should be confided the appointments of the new examining committee. The meeting then adjourned.

Mr. Brookman called on all persons interested in the New-Jersey Land and Improvement Company to remain. A few did so, and an attempt was made to take some action to save that property. It was proposed to sell it, toss up for it, or divide it among the shareholders in lots, and a resolution was introduced calling upon the Directors to resign, as it was not safe in their hands. Col. Hope stated that the officers had already decided to divide the assets among the stockholders, and such a course had been delayed only by the death of Mr. Marsh. This assertion was received with incredulity, but the meeting broke up without coming to any conclusion.

LOUISIANA FOR GOV. HAYES.

ACTION OF THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

ABSOLUTE REFUSAL TO GO BEHIND THE LAWFUL ACT OF THE STATE—EVIDENCE BEYOND THE STATE CERTIFICATION EXCLUDED—A PROPOSITION TO PERMIT FURTHER ARGUMENT DECLINED BY COUNSEL ON BOTH SIDES—THE EIGHT VOTES OF LOUISIANA COUNTED FOR HAYES AND WHEELER BY EIGHT TO SEVEN—A NEW DEMOCRATIC PROJECT FOR DELAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—It was generally understood this morning that the Electoral Commission would vote on the admissibility of evidence in the Louisiana case at 4 o'clock to-day, and it was quite as generally believed that the decision rendered would virtually decide the Presidential question. For these reasons the utmost interest was manifested in the doings of the tribunal, and for two hours before the time for taking the vote the Capitol was filled by an anxious and excited crowd. During the morning the Democrats, encouraged by their leaders, continued to assert that the result would certainly be in their favor, and many of them remained in this belief until late in the evening. Why they should have cherished the hope referred to, however, they were unable to state. To all questions in this direction their only answer was, "We cannot tell why, but we know that everything is all right for Tilden." At one time it was stated that Mr. Hoar had expressed a determination to vote in favor of the Democrats, and later on Judge Bradley was selected as the Commissioner who had decided to join the ranks of Mr. Tilden's supporters. These rumors tended to increase the crowd, and at 3 o'clock it was almost impossible to get near the Supreme Court room. The halls, passage-ways, and aisles were all blocked up by those who had come to hear the verdict, and it was with the utmost difficulty that the large force of special policemen could keep clear the approaches to the chamber where the 15 Judges were deliberating. In the crowd were nearly all the distinguished members of both houses of Congress, and with extreme good humor well-known members of both parties speculated upon the probable decision of the tribunal, and expressed the belief that their side would be successful. Noticeable among the rest was William M. Evarts, who, pale, silent and thoughtful, stood near the main entrance to the court-room, listening to the animated whispers of his associate counsel, Judge Shellabarger. William T. Pelton, Mr. Tilden's nephew, pushed his way through the throng, keenly watching and listening as he went. Senators Randolph, Patterson, and Dorsey were evidently quite as anxious for a decision as were two torn and ragged colored men who stood near them, and Senator Blaine, with even more nervous haste than is usual with him, walked about as rapidly as the crowd would permit, sharply questioning all those who were likely to be possessed of trustworthy information. This was the situation at 4 o'clock; both sides were hopeful and they were both exceedingly anxious.

At the hour named a rumor began to be circulated that by a vote of 11 to 4; the Commission had decided to go behind the returns. This report spread with great rapidity and for a time was quite generally believed. As it could be traced to no trustworthy source, however, and as the doors of the court-room still remained closed, it was soon rejected as unworthy of credit, and the crowd settled back into a state of anxious expectancy. At 4:50 an attendant ran quickly out of the chamber where the Commissioners were seated, and in a moment he was surrounded by a hundred persons, who made it impossible for him to pass until he told them something of the nature of the proceedings going on inside. The only answer which he would make to their questions, however, was that he had been sent out to call in the counsel. A few moments after this another attendant came from the court-room, and amid great excitement whispered to a number of friends that by a vote of 8 to 7 the Commission had decided not to go behind the returns. Then the press gallery was thrown open, and amid an almost painful silence the result indicated was announced. Then Mr. Payne moved that counsel on either side be allowed one hour to discuss the general aspects of the case. Both Mr. Evarts and Judge Campbell, however, stated that they did not desire any further time, and after some further discussion of no importance the tribunal again went into executive session.

Now that the Democrats have given up all hope of success before the tribunal, some of them are casting about for a means to prevent a declaration of the result by the 4th of March, so as to make a new election necessary. The Oregon case is relied upon by them to delay matters, and objections to counting the South Carolina vote will be made, and perhaps others, to prolong the legal contest. Despite the protestations of the Democratic leaders that they would promptly and willingly abide and assist the promulgation of the decision of the tribunal, it is well known that the proposal of delaying announcement of the result—so that a new election would have to be held—is being carefully canvassed, and points for objection are being prepared. One proposition now pressed is that Congress shall pass an act declaring who shall be the President from the 4th of March until a new election can be held. They hold that unless some such law is passed, and the contest should be prolonged until after the 4th of March, under existing laws there is no one now in official position who would be entitled to the Presidency. The point of their argument is that, under the Constitution and existing laws, there are only four contingencies in which the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House can succeed to the Presidency, to-wit: death, resignation, removal, or inability on the part of the President elected by the people; and that none of these causes in this instance intervening, neither the President of the Senate nor the Speaker of the House, nor any other official, can assume the Presidential office unless a law is passed giving the necessary authority. Carrying out this idea, and as a sequel to the policy of delay so as to force a new election, a bill has been prepared and is in the hands of a prominent Democratic member of the House, setting forth these facts, and providing that Hamilton Fish, the present Secretary of State, shall succeed to the office of President of the United States on the 4th of March, to hold the same until a new election can be held. It is the intention of the gentleman having this bill in charge to offer it whenever the party managers direct. Mr. Fish's name is mentioned in the bill because it is thought by the framers of it that the Republicans can find no possible objection to him, and because he is less objectionable to the Democrats than any other Republican that could be named.

ARGUMENTS IN SECRET SESSION.

INTENSE INTEREST IN THE COMMISSION AS TO THE RESULT—THE QUESTION FOUND TO REST WITH JUDGE BRADLEY—HIS VOTES FULLY SUSTAINED BY HIS ARGUMENT—THE POINTS CONTENDED FOR BY THE DEMOCRATIC COMMISSIONERS AND HOW THEY WERE MET.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The Commission began its session this morning at 10 o'clock with closed doors, having under consideration the question of admitting testimony offered by the Democratic counsel in the Louisiana case. The discussion was opened by Senator Morton, who spoke about half an hour. He was followed, in the order given, by Senator Thurman, Gen. Garfield, Senator Bayard, who spoke an hour, Senator Edmunds, Mr. Hunton, Mr. Hoar, who spoke very briefly, and Justice Bradley, who spoke last and closed the debate. The discussion was earnest and warm, but courteous throughout. Toward the close of the day the interest in the Commission grew intense, as it became clear from the tone of the speeches that the vote of Justice Bradley would decide the case, and practically determine the final result of the labors of the Commission. He had given no intimation of his views, and as he did not speak till near the hour of voting, the intensity of feeling grew as the time passed on. He spoke about ten minutes, and then read from notes which he had prepared last night. His views were clearly and strongly stated, and abundantly sustained the votes which he gave.

No other members of the Commission spoke except those above named. The offers of evidence were taken up as numbered by counsel, and rejected seriatim, and the counsel having been informed, and no more time for argument being desired, the Commission again went into secret session at about 5:30, and remained till the formal decision to count the votes of Louisiana had been made, and the papers had been prepared so that a joint meeting of the two houses could be held to-morrow. The vote on every important decision was 8 to 7, the Republicans and the Democrats voting according to their party affiliations. The reasons assigned by the Commission are two. The first, as in the Florida case, states that, acting with the power of the two houses of Congress, the Commission has no power to go behind the certificate of the Governor, based on the canvass of votes; and, second, that the Commission can take no evidence, aliundi the returns, to show that an Elector was ineligible on the day of his election, it not being alleged that he was ineligible at the time of voting as an Elector. The decision on this latter point will be noticed further on.

The line of argument in the Commission was very interesting, and a brief statement will show how the questions, crudely presented by the Democratic counsel, were narrowed and made clear. The decision in the Florida case was regarded as having settled most of the points raised, but a distinction was made between the two cases, upon which the Democratic Commissioners contended the refusal to take the testimony might be reversed. In the Florida case the objections did not charge that the canvass was fraudulent, but only that the Returning Board acted from a mistaken view of the law, and exceeded its jurisdiction. In the case of Louisiana the offers of proof and the written objections charged every species of fraud, including a conspiracy to return as elected the Electors who were not really chosen in the Louisiana case, also, the legality of the Returning Board was attacked, and it was offered to be proved that the board was not a legal body, and that the canvass was not in accord with any State law. The Republican argument was generally to the effect that the differences alleged between the case in Louisiana and in Florida did not really exist. The Democrats made the point that the papers in the Louisiana case, sent to the Commission from the Vice President, did not show that the Governor's certificate was based on any canvass. In reply to this, the certificate of the Secretary of State, showing that there had been a canvass and its results, was produced as part of the Hayes returns. The case was claimed and shown by Republicans to be precisely similar to that decided when the Florida dispute was before the Commission. This was the ground on which they voted to reject extrinsic evidence. There was much discussion in the Commission as to the State laws of Louisiana, whether certain, and which of them, were repealed or in force.

The question of eligibility was considered and decided by refusing to receive the evidence offered, which was to prove that Brewster and Levisse were Federal office-holders on the 7th of November, and that Kellogg and one or two others were ineligible under the Constitution of the State. The question of eligibility was thus divided into two parts. The first was that pertaining to the disqualification of certain persons by the Constitution of a State. It was held that the grant of power to elect or determine the manner of election is granted directly to the Legislature by the Federal Constitution, and that no State Constitution can impose additional disabilities to those imposed by the Constitution of the United States. As sustaining the sound sense of this view, it was said that it would have been unreasonable to permit a disqualification which would deprive the country of the best men in the States, who might, presumably, be found among the officers of the States. This alleged ineligibility was therefore held not to exist. The other point was as to the ineligibility of Federal office-holders. The argument on which evidence was refused, in this branch of the case, was furnished by Justice Bradley. He stated that he had modified his views somewhat by reflection on this subject. He was of the opinion that the language in the Constitution that "no person shall be a Senator" &c., and that "no person shall be appointed an Elector," &c., are to be considered simply as different ways of expressing the same thing. Therefore, there is no prohibition upon a State as to the appointment of Federal officers as Electors, but such officers were disqualified from acting as Electors. If they were eligible at the time of acting as Electors, their action was valid. In the Florida case it was alleged that Humphries was an officeholder at the time he voted, and Justice Bradley said at that time his mind was not made up as to the effect of such ineligibility, and pending further consideration upon it he would vote to admit evidence as to the fact alleged. In the case of Brewster and Levisse there was no allegation that they were officeholders at the time when the Electoral College met, and therefore, the view of Justice Bradley prevailing, there was nothing left in the case which needed the introduction of evidence, because the fact alleged, if proved that they were officeholders on the 6th of November, would not have been regarded as material to the case. It will be seen that Justice Bradley was entirely consistent in his action in this and in the Florida decisions.

EFFECT ON LEADING DEMOCRATS.

THE SOUTHERNERS ACCEPT THE SITUATION IN GOOD TEMPER—A GLOOMY MEETING AT HEWITT'S RESIDENCE—THE CONTEST CONSIDERED LOST, UNLESS SOMETHING MAY BE GAINED BY DELAY—VARIOUS PROPOSITIONS MADE FOUND TO BE DISTASTEFUL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—It is curious to note the diversity of sentiment among the Democrats as to the policy which should be pursued by them, now that they have lost all hope in the Commission. Some of the Northern and Western Democrats are exceedingly distressed, and speak of the Republican members of the Commission as "perjurers," "scoundrels," and the like. They also talk loudly of attempting to break up the Commission, and of other violent schemes to prevent the announcement of the election of Mr. Hayes. A good many more, and in fact nearly all the candid thinking men of the Democratic Party, say very little, and seem to be lost in contemplation of their situation. The Southern Democrats are in much the best humor, most of them, taking a good-natured view of the situation, and they are opposed to any factious opposition tending to prevent a declaration of the results arrived at by the tribunal. One prominent Southern Democrat said that the South was in no condition or temper to run any chances by engaging in an unwarrantable opposition to the decree of the Electoral Commission, which they had helped to create for the purpose of amicably settling this question. He did not, he said, approve of the findings of the tribunal, but it was his duty to act in accordance with that decision, no matter what it might be. Another Southern Democrat said that while they wanted Tilden as President, he thought the inauguration of Gov. Hayes would bring about a new Southern policy, and it might probably be the best result for his section that could be reached to make no opposition to the decree of the Commission. Gen. Whitthorne said good-naturedly that when the Southern people played a game of chance and got beat, they never found fault with the result. They were used to losing sometimes, and they were always noted for taking it good naturedly. If he were a member of the Commission he would resign, not with a view of defeating the ultimate judgment of the Commission, but because he would not be a party to a game where he was sure to lose. Judge Niblack, of Indiana, said that Democrats should have faith; that the Commission was only making Democratic votes, and that four years hence the Democrats would have both houses of Congress and the Presidency besides. These expressions are about a fair sample of those that come from the different class of Democrats, and are heard on every hand in the excited groups gathered in the corridors of all the principal hotels. The good-natured view which the Southern Democrats take of the result is perhaps the most interesting feature of the situation. They appear to have no disposition to follow their Northern allies into any opposition tending to defeat the objects for which the Electoral Tribunal was created, and it is rather an encouraging sign to see them acting as a balance wheel for their Northern party associates.

While the events of the day, and the effect of this decision were being discussed in public places, a quiet gathering of the Democratic leaders was held at the house of Mr. Abram S. Hewitt. Several Democratic members of the Commission were present, and some of the Democratic counsel, Judge Black being omitted, because he was held responsible for the declaration attributed to him early in the contest that the Democrats had no chance. The gathering was exceedingly gloomy, and the discussion lacked spirit and interest. "Wash" McLean, Hewitt, David Dudley Field, and one or two others were in favor of the Democratic members of the Commission withdrawing, and they even went so far as to propose that a resolution be introduced into the House directing them to resign, for the reason, as they said, that the Commission had wholly failed to perform the duty for which it was created, by refusing to consider the evidence submitted in the case of the disputed States. This proposition did not meet with favor, as it would deprive them of a chance to fight the other points of objections to Oregon and South Carolina. It was then proposed that when the joint convention met some one should be designated, who would quietly state that, as there was evidently no chance for a fair count, there would be no further objection, by the Democracy, to the counting of the votes that the President of the Senate might select, and that they would appeal to the country in the near future for a vindication of their position. This was also considered unfavorably, as it would interfere with the legal contest yet to be made over Oregon, and perhaps South Carolina. A proposition to abandon further legal argument before the high Commission was also negatived, and it was decided to make a fight on Oregon and leave further developments to determine whether or not the vote of South Carolina should be contested. All the talk at Mr. Hewitt's developed the fact that there was not a chance left for the Democracy, but that they would continue to make a fight in the hope that some point might yet be found upon which they could hang an objection and make delay. The whole subject of the creation of the tribunal was talked over, and it was admitted that had Senator Whyte's amendment been supported by the Democratic Senators, requiring the Tribunal to go behind the returns and investigate the charges of fraud, the Democratic case would stand differently to-day. Without deciding what to do, the gloomy gathering dispersed with the understanding that a fight to kill time should be made on the Oregon case. In the meantime every Democrat has been notified to be in his seat to-morrow, and a caucus of the Democracy will probably be called for to-morrow.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

From 12 until 5 o'clock this afternoon there was a large crowd in front of the Supreme Court doors, the number gradually increasing to more than 500. Members of Congress occasionally mixed with the throng, awaiting impatiently the opening of the court-room. During the afternoon rumors prevailed about the Capitol as to the decision of the Commission and the state of the vote. These reports were so contradictory as to be confusing, and, therefore, did not gain credence. There was much consequent excitement. Any one supposed to have opportunities for acquiring information as to the proceedings was surrounded the moment he appeared in view, and interrogated by several persons at the same time. A more inquisitive crowd was never before, perhaps, seen at the Capitol. At 5 o'clock counsel were sent for. They had been waiting for the summons in a private room of the Supreme Court, and when advised that the Commission were prepared to receive them they entered the court-room in a body. Some time elapsed before the doors were opened to members of Congress and those who had tickets of admission, and when they were opened a frantic rush was made for the interior, which was soon uncomfortably filled.

The following are the resolutions acted upon by the Commission in their secret session and afterward reported to counsel:

Mr. Hoar submitted the following:

Ordered, That the evidence be not received.

Mr. Abbott offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That evidence be received to show that so much of the act of Louisiana establishing the Returning Board for that State is unconstitutional, and the acts of the said Returning Board are void.

This was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, and Thurman—7.

Mr. Abbott offered another substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That evidence will be received to show that the Returning Board of Louisiana, at the time of canvassing and compiling the vote of that State at the last election in that State, was not legally constituted under the law establishing it, in this: That it was composed of four persons of one political party, instead of five persons of different parties.

Rejected by the same vote.

Mr. Abbott then offered the following substitute:

Resolved, That the Commission will receive testimony on the subject of the frauds alleged in the specification of counsel for the objectors to certificates N s. 1 and 3.

Rejected by the same vote.

Mr. Abbott then offered a fourth substitute as follows:

Resolved, That testimony tending to show that the so-called returning Board of Louisiana had no jurisdiction to canvass the votes for President and Vice President is admissible.

Rejected by the same vote.

Mr. Abbott offered a fifth, which was rejected by the same vote, which was as follows:

Resolved, That evidence is admissible that the statements and affidavits purporting to have been made and forwarded to said Returning Board in pursuance of the provisions of Section 26, of the Election Law of 1872, alleging riot, tumult, intimidation and violence, at or near certain polls and in certain parishes were false and fabricated and forged by certain disreputable persons under the direction and knowledge of said Returning Board; that said Returning Board, knowing the said statements and affidavits to be false and forged, and that none of such statements and affidavits were made in the manner or form or within the time required by law, did knowingly, willfully and fraudulently fail and refuse to canvass or compile more than 10,000 votes cast, as is shown by the Commissioners of Election.

Mr. Hunton offered a sixth substitute as follows:

Resolved, That evidence be received to prove that the votes cast and given at the said election on the 7th of November last, as shown by the return made by the Commissioners of Election for said polls and voting places in said State, have never been compiled nor canvassed, and that the said Returning Board never even pretended to compile or canvass the returns made by the said Commissioners of Election, but that said Returning Board only pretended to canvass the returns made by the State Supervisors of Registration.

Rejected by the same vote.

A seventh substitute was offered by Mr. Bayard, as follows:

Resolved, That no person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, is eligible to be appointed an Elector, and that this Commission will receive evidence tending to prove said ineligibility as offered by counsel for objectors to certificates numbers one and three.

Rejected by the same vote.

Mr. Justice Field offered the eighth and last substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Commission, evidence is admissible upon the several matters which the counsel for objectors to certificates numbers one and three offered to prove.

This was also rejected by the same vote, and the question on the original order submitted by Mr. Hoar called up, namely: "That the evidence offered be not received."

Mr. Payne moved to strike out the word "not." Rejected by the same vote.

The question on the original order was then taken, and it was adopted by the following vote:

After the conclusion had been reached by the Commission, counsel were admitted, and the above resolutions were read by the Secretary. As soon as the final vote had been taken Mr. Justice Field moved that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the proceedings of the Commission, and it was adopted unanimously.

Mr. Hoar inquired of the Chair whether any of the time to which counsel were entitled under the order of the Commission remained, or whether it had been exhausted.

The Court replied that the time for objectors to Nos. 1 and 3 was exhausted. On the part of objectors to certificate No. 2 he believed 10 minutes remained, but the time had been substantially exhausted.

Mr. Payne moved that one hour be given each side for the respective counsel to sum up the case.

Mr. Garfield said that the order had been already made that each side should have four and a half hours, and that the time should be used as they chose on the interlocutory question. He considered he ought to stand on the order and should vote against the motion. Counsel themselves had not yet asked it.

Justice Clifford inquired if they were satisfied to rest their case.

Mr. Evarts said they were satisfied with the case as it stood.

Justice Clifford asked if opposing counsel also agreed to it.

Judge Campbell said they had nothing to add, under the circumstances.

Commissioner Abbott—I understand you, Judge Campbell, to say that the Commission having ruled out all the evidence you offered, you have nothing further to urge?

Judge Campbell—Yes, Sir.

Justice Clifford said the motion was then withdrawn.

Commissioner Morton moved that three members of the Commission be appointed to prepare a report in the Louisiana case, and that a recess of one hour be taken.

Commissioner Strong said that the question that had been passed upon was the question of the admissibility of evidence, and he thought they now ought to go into the merits of the case.

Then, on motion of Commissioner Hoar, the Commission, at 5:30 o'clock, went into secret session for consultation.

Commissioner Payne moved that one hour be allowed each side by the Commission in which to make arguments.

Commissioner Garfield said that the order pursued yesterday, giving four and a half hours to each side to argue the whole question, was interrupted by the offer of testimony, and it was then agreed that two additional hours should be given to that question. After that agreement was entered into, it was also agreed that counsel might draw on their final time and use it on that interlocutory question if they chose, and they used it up and discussed the whole question together with the interlocutory question. The counsel have not asked for additional time, and if they had I should consider that we ought to stand by our order. I shall therefore vote against the motion of Commissioner Payne.

Commissioner Morton said that unless counsel desired it he should vote against the proposition. He would not invite counsel to argue the question further.

Mr. Evarts said that his side had argued the whole question fully, and covered the whole merits of the case. They had so considered it during the time allowed them.

The motion was withdrawn.

Mr. Hoar then moved that the Commission go into secret session for the purpose of consultation on the main question.

This was adopted, and the crowd was directed to leave the room.

THE VOTE ON COUNTING LOUISIANA FOR HAYES.

Immediately after the doors were closed, Senator Morton offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the persons named as Electors in certificate No. 1 were the lawful Electors of the State of Louisiana, and that their votes are the votes provided by the Constitution of the United States, and should be counted for President and Vice President.

This resolution was adopted by a vote of 8 to 7, as follows:

Justices Miller and Bradley and Representative Hoar were then appointed a committee to draft a report of the decision, with a brief statement of the reasons therefor, to be signed by the members agreeing therein, and to be transmitted to the joint session of the two houses, as required by the Electoral act. A recess of about one hour was then taken to afford time for drafting a report, which, upon the reassembling of the Commission, was presented, and after being read was signed by Messrs. Miller, Strong, Bradley, Edmunds, Morton, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, and Hoar.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION.

The report is to the following effect:

The Electoral Commission having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the Electoral votes of the State of Louisiana, and certain papers accompanying same and the objections thereto, report that it has duly considered the same and has decided and does hereby decide that the votes of William Pitt Kellogg, O. H. Brewster, A. B. Levisse, Oscar Joffrion, Peter Joseph, J. H. Birch, L. A. Sheldon, and Morris Marks, named in the certificate of William Pitt Kellogg, Governor of said State, (which votes are certified by said persons as appears by the certificates submitted to the Commission as aforesaid and marked No. 1 by said Commission and herewith returned,) are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely, eight votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and eight votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New-York, for Vice President. The Commission also decides and reports that the eight persons first above named were duly appointed Electors in and by the said State of Louisiana.

The ground of this decision, stated briefly, is substantially as follows:

That it is not competent to go into evidence aliunde as to the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two houses, to prove election of persons than those regularly certified by the Governor of the State of Louisiana, in and according to the determination and declaration of their appointment; in other words, to go behind the certificate of the Governor so far as it is founded upon the action of the Returning Board.

The report will also state that the Commission could not receive any evidence to show that any Elector was ineligible on the 7th of November, the day of the election, on the ground that it was not essential to show that an Elector was eligible on that day, so long as he was eligible when he cast his vote in the Electoral College; and the fact appears that the alleged ineligible Electors, Brewster and Levisse, were chosen to fill vacancies caused by their own absence from the College, and there was no allegation of ineligibility at the time they cast their votes.

The Commission remained in session until 9 o'clock, when, on motion of Mr. Edmunds, an adjournment to 4 P. M. to-morrow was ordered.

The Secretary of the Commission will to-morrow morning deliver to the President pro tem. of the Senate the formal decision above described, together with all the certificates and accompanying papers on the Louisiana case which were referred to the Commission, and the Secretary will also deliver to the Speaker of the House a formal notification, signed by the President of the Commission, that their decision had been communicated to the President pro tem. of the Senate. Upon the reassembling of the two houses in joint session the decision will be read and entered upon their respective journals, and thereupon, in accordance with the Electoral act, the vote of Louisiana must be immediately counted for Hayes and Wheeler, unless, upon objection being made in meeting by at least five Senators and five members of the House of Representatives, the two houses shall separately concur in ordering otherwise.

THE NEXT DISPUTED STATE.

THE OREGON CASE PRACTICALLY DECIDED BY PREVIOUS DECISIONS—THE ELIGIBILITY OF AN ELECTOR WHEN HE CASTS HIS VOTE ALONE TO BE CONSIDERED—GROVER'S CERTIFICATE TO CRONIN NOT BASED ON THE CANVASS OF THE VOTES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The Oregon case, which will be the next to go before the Commission, is practically decided by the decision in the Louisiana contest. Watts, though a Postmaster on the day of the November election, was eligible for appointment, and was eligible to act if he was out of office before the Electors met on the 6th of December. The certificate of Grover was not in accordance with the canvass of the votes, as the papers with the certificates will fully show. Watts was legally chosen one of the Electors, and the discharge of his office of Elector was legal, and the three votes must be counted for Hayes. The Democrats will not probably make any claim to Cronin's vote unless the policy of delay should prevail among them, and this could be used as a means of delay. The disclosure of the "true inwardness" of the Oregon fraud has disgusted a great many Democrats, and, coming just at this time, has helped to moderate the excitement over the Louisiana decision, for they see that their wild outcry of fraud is met with a fraud substantially and clearly proved.

THE CABINET ON LOUISIANA.

PROBABLE EARLY RECOGNITION OF THE PACKARD GOVERNMENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—At the Cabinet meeting held to-day the Louisiana case was discussed at considerable length, and it is understood that it was decided to officially and fully recognise the Packard government. It is believed, however, that this recognition will not occur until after the Presidential count has been made.

GOV. HAYES CONGRATULATED.

GREAT REJOICING IN COLUMBUS—MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY PAYING THEIR RESPECTS TO THE NEXT PRESIDENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Feb. 16.—There is great rejoicing here to-night over the decision of the Electoral Commission in the Louisiana case. Even some Democratic members of the General Assembly seemed quite pleased when the news came, and expressed themselves gratified that at any rate the end of the Presidential controversy was about to be reached. On all hands the decision as to Louisiana is regarded as substantially conclusive of the whole matter, and the inauguration of Hayes and Wheeler is now anticipated, by Democrats and Republicans alike, as a foregone conclusion. The feeling among business men here, regardless of party, is overwhelmingly in favor of a speedy termination of the count by Congress, and against any attempt, by filibustering or otherwise, to prolong the Presidential controversy. If the Democrats in Washington imagine they have anything to gain by such a course, they are, so far as Ohio is concerned, the victims of a gross delusion.

Gov. Hayes was at the executive office chatting with Adjutant Gen. Wykoff this evening when the decision in the Louisiana case was announced to him, and received the news with his usual tranquillity. In a few minutes the office was crowded with the members of the General Assembly and others who rushed in to congratulate him over the favorable turn of affairs.

DAVID DUDLEY FIELD'S FRANTIC EFFORTS.

PROMINENT GENTLEMEN OF THIS CITY SUMMONED TO WASHINGTON—THE BANK ACCOUNTS OF THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE TO BE LOOKED INTO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—David Dudley Field's Committee has subpœnaed Gen. Chester A. Arthur, Gen. George H. Sharpe, Mr. Phillips, Private Secretary to the Collector of Customs, and Alderman Pinckney, of New-York. All the gentlemen named, except Gen. Arthur, arrived here to-night. He is confined to his home by sickness, but expresses his willingness to come on if necessary. The gentlemen are not aware what they will be called upon to testify to, and they state that they are not in possession of any information which would be calculated to please Mr. Field or aid the cause of his master, the defeated candidate for the Presidency. In addition to the witnesses named, Mr. Field and his associates, who seem to have a mania for investigation, have called upon Messrs. Chandler and McCormick, the Chairman and Secretary of the Republican National Committee, to produce their bank accounts and all accounts relating to receipts and disbursements of money for election purposes. The distinguished Mr. Field might have spared himself this trouble. He will not be able to offset the Oregon infamy.

TILDEN'S ATTEMPTS AT BRIBERY.

MORE LIGHT ON THE SUBJECT—FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN OREGON AND TILDEN'S NEW-YORK MANAGER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The Senate Committee investigating the Oregon Electoral affairs, of which Senator Mitchell is Chairman, continued the translation of cipher telegrams to-day as follows:

Hon. James K. Kelly, Portland, Oregon:

Mr. Shaw, of Detroit, who furnished the key by which these translations were made, was before the committee and testified that in a few instances it was impossible to translate certain words in the dispatches by the key. He further stated that all the translations thus far were made word by word and from the cipher dispatches as found in the printed testimony relative to the Oregon case.

Senator Kelly stated in regard to his indorsement of the cipher dispatch sent by J. H. N. Patrick on the 28th of November to Col. William T. Pelton, that he was totally unaware of its containing a proposition for the purchase of a Republican Elector. He says Patrick came to him and stated he had prepared a cipher telegram to the Secretary of the National Democratic Committee, asking the latter to place $10,000 to his credit for the purpose of paying lawyers' fees and other necessary expenses connected with the anticipated litigation concerning the issuance of the Governor's certificates. Patrick requested him to indorse this telegram because he [Mr. Kelly] was known to the National Democratic Committee, and it was desirable to secure prompt action. Senator Kelly said he could not, of course, read the cipher, and, accepting Patrick's statement of its meaning, indorsed it without hesitation upon the foregoing assurance as to its contents. The Senator also states that after Patrick left Oregon he [Senator Kelly] earnestly endeavored to get money sent from New-York to pay the fees of the lawyers who had been retained, and as it did not come in time, he himself raised $3,200 on his own note, $3,000 of which he paid to Hill, Thompson, and Durham, the lawyers above referred to, and the remaining $200 were devoted to paying the expenses of bringing Laswell, one of the Democratic Electors, to Salem, as it was then thought that he had obtained a higher vote than Cronin. The Senator says that so far as he knows no person ever approached the Republican Electors with any corrupt proposition.

W. L. Stocking, editor of the Detroit Post, testified that Mr. Shaw came to him some days since and exhibited a translation of the "Gobble" dispatch. Mr. Shaw also explained the translation to witness, and, after satisfying himself that the translation was correct, witness published the cipher dispatch and Mr. Shaw's translation of it in his paper; he communicated with the Chairman of the National Republican Committee relative to the discovery of the key of the cipher in which the "Gobble" dispatch was written, and he and Mr. Shaw were soon after subpœnaed to appear before this committee.

Mr. McClennan, a Treasury expert, was called, and testified that he had translated several of the cipher dispatches relating to the Oregon case according to Shaw's rule, and in the main they agreed with the translations made before the committee.

John W. Ellis, President of the Third National Bank of New-York, voluntarily appeared before the Senate Committee this morning and asked to be allowed to testify before them. He stated to the Chairman that the name of his bank having been used in connection with the Oregon case, he desired expressly to repudiate all political affinities on the part of the bank for either of the political parties, and further said that the bank has no political connections. Whatever part was taken by Mr. Jordan, the Cashier, relative to remitting money to Oregon, was done on his [Jordan's] individual responsibility, and the transaction was in no way connected with the bank. Mr. Ellis stated further that three-fourths of the capital stock of the bank is owned by the firm of Winslow, Lanier & Co., of which he is a member. All the members of this firm are Republicans, but especially avoid mingling politics with their business. Mr. Tilden's connection with the bank is the same as that of any other Director and depositor. Any connection that Mr. Jordan may have had with the Democratic Party during the late campaign is a private matter of his own.

CHARGED WITH CONCEALING ASSETS.

PITTSFIELD, Feb. 16.—United States Marshal Williams this morning arrested Washington M. Root and son, formerly partners under the firm name of W. M. Root & Son, on a complaint charging them with concealing their assets from the assignees and refusing to exhibit their account books. They failed in 1875, owing $150,000, and the assignees have ever since been trying to settle the estate.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THE COMMISSION AND CONGRESS REVIEWED.

MESSRS. EVARTS AND O'CONOR CONTRASTED—HISTORIC FIGURES IN THE AUDIENCE—SCENES IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES — DEMOCRATIC TURBULENCE—WHERE THE WIRES ARE PULLED—WARS AND RUMORS OF WARS—AN UNFORTUNATE BUFFALO.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Feb. 13, 1877.

I have attended a few of the open sessions of the Commission in the Supreme Court room. The first time that I took the seat kindly assigned me in the reporters' gallery, I was for some moments oppressed and half-bewildered by the associations of the place. The last time I had sat there was one morning in the Winter of 1852, a quarter of a century ago. It was on a memorable though somewhat melodramatic occasion—the reception by the Senate of Louis Kossuth. The galleries were packed with spectators. Even the floor was crowded. The French Minister and his Countess stood near me, back of the reporters. As the hour of 1 drew near, every heart beat "Lo the conquered hero comes!" and just as the clock struck the central doors flew open, and he stood on the threshold in his handsome Hungarian uniform, with the plumed hat which has become historical—a slight man, not tall, but with a noble, high-born head, and a certain air of power, which hardly harmonized with the sad, appealing, almost wistful look of his wonderful eyes. He came to us for "aid and comfort," but as a more than princely mendicant. In him Magyar nationality took to the great street-corners of the world, and stretched out her hands to the nations hurrying by. Of all that august chamber—for it was still august, though the great triad, Calhoun, Clay, and Webster, had gone forth from it forever—of all the great men who rose to receive the eloquent exile, and all the big men who kept their seats, how many now survive? And where, Oh where are the issues of that day, over which great men contended and conspired?

"Dead as the bulrushes round little Moses,
On the old banks of the Nile."

I heard the great argument of Mr. Evarts. You know how strong it was, legally and logically. I could not always follow his long, swinging sentences, but I could admire his own absolute understanding and control of them. He reminded me of the Roman Prince, Piombino, whom I once saw driving ten-in-hand, and not at all embarrassed by multitudinous ribbons. The tone of his argument and his manner in speaking were singularly calm, dispassionate, and impersonal. Mr. O'Conor, in his reply, began coolly and courteously enough, in a silvery voice, swinging his spectacles in an easy, careless way, and benignly blarneying the Judges; but the bitter partisan finally revealed himself without the slightest judicial disguise. The speech ended in insult and invective. The soft, smoothly-gliding thing had a sting in its tail. I also heard the younger advocate of the Democratic side, Mr. Merrick, whom they hail as a second "Daniel come to judgment." He speaks also as a partisan, earnestly, if not violently, driving things home with his fist, emphasizing with his head, and punctuating with his goatee. Just back of him stood Mr. Black—the great prophet Jeremiah—a tall, stern-looking personage, with wary eyes ambushed under a heavy ledge of white eyebrows. Near him stood a man who for some years past has been far too much of a political recluse, even while biased as a juryman who doesn't take the papers, or a Supreme Court Judge, in short, for a mere woman, like myself. He plainly told the recalcitrant compromisers that they had no right to rebel, having by their vote for the Commission brought misfortune upon themselves; that as they had made their bed, so they must lie. His plain talk hardly seemed to do much good, however. Walker, the silver-haired Adonis of the House, (whom, by the way, your compositor makes me call plain "John," but whose full-flowered name is Gilbert Carlton Walker,) followed in the same old way, kicking against the pricks, as lustily as Field or Springer. One of the Democratic brethren who spoke that day is an unconscious humorist, or a Joey Bagstock for slyness, for he dwelt pathetically on "magnanimity betrayed," on "Democratic faith in human honesty" having been basely taken advantage of. Such things are simply delicious, coming from either political party, wise as they both are in the wisdom of this world; from Democrats, wily and wary, if not wicked, or from Republicans who have erred from over-confidence, rather than over-faith, and who have too often shown "an unbounded stomach" for honors and emoluments. The session was, taken altogether, rather violent, and many of the speeches were full of bitterness and menace, and yet it closed with that curious piece of parliamentary pleasantry, a burlesque account of an Electoral College of eight John Smiths returning Peter Cooper and Sam Cary, and swearing by the "Holy Bull-dozers." The reading of this paper, so witty and so pertinent, was rather unreasonably opposed by Mr. Hoar, who is an economist of time, and who adores the proprieties; but he is classical, and should remember that dulce est desipere in loco, which means, as he will find by consulting Webster's Dictionary, (back part, big edition,) "it is pleasant to play the fool on the proper occasion." The very fact that the thing was read and that the most gloomy and belligerent Democrats laughed uproariously—the rigid Randall joining in—proves that their righteous ire, their solemn prophesies, their fierce threats, and ferocious demonstrations are essentially affected and unreal. Farce may deepen into tragedy, but tragedy never degenerates into farce. Indeed, we are getting to be less frightened as the strife is prolonged and the plot seems to thicken. We are catching a few glimpses behind the scenes, which reveal to us the fact that right here, and not in the cold North, or the hot South, the moral and æsthetic East, or the manly and executive West, the motive power of this agitation is furnished, the machinery is worked. One afternoon lately we went to see an exhibition of the Royal Marionettes by a clear daylight, which was unfavorable to illusions. The curious manikins sung and danced, made love, followed the bounds, fought bravely, conspired and declaimed—marvelously like moral agents and independent electors and legislators; but we knew that an invisible "old party" spoke through them, and worked them, by too visible springs, pulleys, and wires. At last a fearful mad bull came forth, butting and to butt; but, though he raged and ramped and tossed the elastic clown repeatedly on his horns, not the smallest child in the audience cried out with fear; for all knew, bless you! that he was propelled and withdrawn—that his head went down and his tail went up in obedience to the cords and pulleys, before, behind, below, and above him; knew he was neither a moral nor an immoral agent—that, in short, he was not a real bull, and that there was no real danger.

But in case the Democratic majority now on the rampage in the House be not inflated caoutchouc, but a true Taurus, implacable as any bull of the Vatican, and mad as Guy of Warwick's "Dun Cow"—in case it succeeds in stampeding the minority, tramples the Commission under its hoofs, and tosses the Constitution on its horns, and goes forth from the Capitol on the 4th of March triumphant and irrefrible, it will then have to encounter its real adversary—not a faction, not a party, not a partisan tribunal, but the people, a tremendous out-door congress and court. If it does not tame down into a well-behaved bucolic animal, it will find its wild course obstructed and finished by the grand onward sweep of the Republic, with its immense train of human interests, its freight of human lives useful and dear to the world, its treasure-chests of national glories, liberties, and hopes. I remember to have heard how once a buffalo herd conspired against the Pacific Railroad. They stationed themselves on a slight eminence, from which they were to charge down on the express train under full headway, their leader first engaging the locomotive. The affair duly came off—in part. There was a great preliminary tossing of earth, a brief bellow, a collision, and something went on—and it was not the buffalo.

Our poor city has been and still is full of the wildest rumors. For instance, soon after the establishment of the Provisional Tribunal, which, strange to say, was considered as a Democratic triumph, it was reported that the General of the Army had capitulated. After ordering away all the troops whose presence here is a menace and an offense to the Democratic majority in the House, he surrendered, it was said, to the young commander, "Citizen Marat," who magnanimously returned to the old hero the sword which he waved about his pear-shaped head when he set out on that almost forgotten, not to say apocryphal, march to the sea. It was also said that all the officers of the evacuating force were allowed to retain their side-arms, and the soldiers to take their knapsacks and two days' rations of carrion.

We have no end of rumors concerning the Louisiana culprits. They say the sergeant at Arms has given an order to a hardware establishment for a set of thumb-screws, a "boot," and a rack, after the model of the "Scavenger's Daughter" in the old Tower of London. Mr. Clark Mills has also a commission for an "iron virgin" like that of Nuremburg. All will go into operation as soon as manufactured, but in the meantime the Committee on the Powers and Privileges of the House have borrowed a whipping-post and whip from Democratic Delaware, which are to be tried in the case of wicked old Wells. The pious Pickett is to apply the lash, and the moral Maddox is to rub in the brine. It is affirmed that the Senate indignantly rejected the proposition to turn the shaft of their order into an oubliette, bluntly telling the House to keep their own side.

We are all feeling much for the prisoners of State, Wells and Anderson. They are great sinners, doubtless, since even Satan, in the shape of more than one witness, rebukes their sin—but they are not well and are no longer young. They are said to be heavily ironed and imprisoned in that dismal cell in the crypt, prepared for the body of Washington, and in which the bier of Lincoln has been preserved. Here they are exposed to the visits of Thompsons and Tombs lawyers, rats and reporters. The only reading allowed them is the Police Gazette and the Congressional Record, and they are kept on the shinniest sort of diet, that their physical strength may be reduced, and take with it their moral courage. It is not supposed that they will hold out long under the double "question"—David Dudley Field and the "Scavenger's Daughter."

GRACE GREENWOOD.

THE WRECK IN CHESAPEAKE BAY.

TWENTY-SEVEN LIVES LOST IN THE RECENT GALE—DREADFUL SUFFERINGS OF A RESCUED CREW.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CRISFIELD, Feb. 16.—The names of those who perished by the wrecking of the Coulbourn on Monday in Chesapeake Bay, are Capt. Thomas Saulsbury, William Fox, mate; Edward Tigner, John R. Small, Samuel Fletcher, and Levin Jones, seamen. The name of the other man was not ascertained. They are all from the eastern shore of Virginia, and leave families. When the rescuing party left here yesterday they found the vessel swamped at Fox Island, with the man Fox lashed to the rigging, frozen stiff. The crew rescued from the Delmay, which was in company with the Coulbourn, say that the storm came upon them unexpectedly, and with unprecedented fury. The vessel, after being stripped of rigging, was washed upon the shore of the island named, where the crew lodged, suffering agonies until rescued. Two oyster pungies and another schooner are also lost, with their respective crews, aggregating 20 souls. Rescuing parties are out far from port in search of the bodies.

SINGULAR SUICIDE OF A MARYLANDER.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 16.—Albert Wallet, a prominent citizen of Maryland, residing near Princess Ann, committed suicide on Tuesday morning. He had become frenzied with drink, and upon arriving at his home he went to the stables, cut the throat of his favorite horse, set fire to the buildings, and perished in the flames.

WASHINGTON.

A SCRAP OF WAR HISTORY.

GEN. SCHOFIELD'S DEFENSE OF A GENTLEMAN WHO WAS ONCE HIS SUBORDINATE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—Major Gen. Schofield, now in charge of the Military Academy at West Point, has written a letter to Gen. Thomas Ewing for the purpose of vindicating the military order issued by Gen. Ewing in 1863, depopulating a part of the western border of Missouri. Gen. Schofield says, in substance, that he took command of the Department of the Missouri in May, 1863, and assigned Gen. Ewing to the command of the "District of the Border;" that a savage guerilla warfare had raged there for two years which had nearly depopulated the farming districts on the Missouri side, and that all the farmers who remained, whether they sympathized with the guerrillas or not, were mere furnishers of supplies for those outlaws. Civilization and humanity alike demanded a prompt suppression of this border war. There were only two methods of stopping it. One was to largely increase the military force in the district, which was found impracticable because of the necessity of sending reinforcements to Grant's army at Vicksburg. The other was to remove from the Missouri border the few remaining farmers whose crops and stores furnished the guerrillas their subsistence. The fiendish massacre at Lawrence, in August, 1863, by Quantrell and his band, made immediate action absolutely imperative. He says it is wholly a mistake to charge that the order was issued in revenge for that massacre, as its issuance was contemplated and discussed some time before the massacre occurred. He says the order was an act of wisdom, courage, and humanity, by which hundreds of innocent lives were saved, and a barbarous and disgraceful warfare brought to a summary close. Not a life was sacrificed nor any great discomfort inflicted in executing it. The necessities of all the poor people were provided for, and none were permitted to suffer.

Gen. Schofield adds that when the order was issued he went to the border, and after personal observation approved it, and then sent it with his approval to President Lincoln, and that humane President never uttered a word of dissent as to the wisdom, justice, or humanity of that policy. He says he does not write to vindicate his own conduct or to shift responsibility, but that it is only justice to Gen. Ewing, who has been censured for issuing the order, to say that the responsibility for its execution belongs to President Lincoln, to himself, and to Gen. Ewing in proportion to their respective rank and authority.

SENTENCE OF A TREASURY CLERK.

F. T. WINSLOW SENTENCED TO THE ALBANY PENITENTIARY FOR 18 MONTHS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—In the Criminal Court to-day Ferdinand T. Winslow, indicted for the larceny of a package containing $11,990 from the office of the United States Treasurer on the 5th of December last, was arraigned and entered a plea of guilty. After several papers had been introduced to show that Winslow was a victim of the opium habit, his counsel, Mr. Riddle, referred to letters of various friends of the accused, and in conclusion said they went far towards raising the question as to whether or not the unfortunate man should not be confined to a lunatic asylum rather than a penitentiary, and he appealed to the court to inflict the lowest sentence under the law.

Judge MacArthur said that this was one of the cases which perplex the court, and reminds one of the case of Prof. Webster. Here is a man of culture, as is seen by the autobiographical sketch read, and one cannot but admire some of the traits of character there made apparent. Here are some circumstances in the case which make a strong appeal for leniency. The circumstances showed that this act was minutely planned and carried out, and if there was nothing else to influence the court, would feel to inflict the severest punishment. On the other hand he had pleaded guilty, and made restitution of the greater portion of the money. It was a sad sight to see a man such as he had been before the bar of justice, and it was perplexing to the court to fix the sentence. He would not under the circumstances inflict the lowest punishment nor the highest, fifty years in the penitentiary, and a fine not exceeding $500;) and would fix the time of imprisonment at 18 months in the Albany Penitentiary from noon to-day.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The House Judiciary Committee to-day completed their consideration of the bill to compel the Union Pacific Railroad Company to pro rate with the Burlington and Missouri Pacific Railroad, and authorized Mr. McCrary to report it for passage, with an amendment requiring the Burlington and Missouri Company to pro rate with all connecting roads.

Poore, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Springfield, Dakota; J. W. Haverstick, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Los Angeles, Cal.; R. C. Kerr, to be Land Register at Jackson, Miss., and Mary J. Martin, to be Postmaster at Burlington, N. J.

The following were the balances in the Treasury at the close of business to-day: Currency, $10,693,120; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $37,130,000; coin, including $53,771,800 in coin certificates, $88,600,343; outstanding legal tenders, $364,984,812.

Chief Brooks received a telegram this afternoon that officers in the Secret Service arrested to-day in Philadelphia the following notorious counterfeiters: Harry Rogers, Larry Keene, Charles Miller, and Joe Gordon. They were taken before United States Commissioner Aubrey H. Smith for hearing. They dealt largely in counterfeit Ohio National Bank bills. Rogers, Keene, and Gordon have been for a long time engaged in this business. Rogers has been tried twice in the United States Court at Philadelphia, but in some way managed to escape conviction. The Secret Service officers say the evidence against them is now overwhelming.

The Senate Sub-committee investigating the late elections in Mississippi this afternoon examined D. C. Kearns, who testified that in Jefferson County a prominent Democrat told him that the Democrats had employed Negroes to the ballot boxes, and intended to take out Republican tickets and put in Democratic tickets. At witness' own voting place he knows that 386 Republican tickets were voted, but only 91 came out of the box. Witness voted for Tilden and Hendricks and the Democratic candidate for Congress.

Secretary Morrill continues to improve steadily. He is now entirely out of danger, and it is expected that he will soon be fully restored to his usual good health.

The Senate Committee on Territories have had a long meeting devoted to the consideration of Senator Spencer's bill to create a new Territory out of the Black Hills country, which it is proposed to call Lincoln Territory. Senator Spencer made an argument in advocacy of the measure, as did also Dr. Meyer, of Deadwood City. Black Hills, who has been chosen Delegate to Congress, contingent upon the establishment of the Territory. Delegate Kidder, of Dakota Territory, opposed the bill. The committee decided to lay the matter over till the next session of Congress, for the reason that the bill ratifying the treaty made last Summer with the Sioux Indians had not yet been passed by the House, and because legislation being so far behind now it would be impossible to secure the final action of the Senate this session.

Mr. Honore, colored, Secretary of State of Louisiana, has arrived with certain papers in obedience to a subpœna from the Senate Committee of Privileges and Elections. These are supposed to be papers called for by the House Louisiana Committee and for the refusal of which the members of the Returning Board are held in contempt.

THE ARMY TO BE REDUCED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The House Committee on Military Affairs to-day voted to recommend the passage of a bill offered by Mr. Banning, of Ohio, providing that there should be no new enlistments in the Army until the forces of enlisted men shall have been reduced to 20,000, and requiring the Secretary of War to reduce the number of cavalry regiments to eight, and the number of infantry regiments to sixteen. The bill provides that the officers of the discontinued regiments may be assigned to vacancies thereafter occurring in accordance with their dates of commission, or may, on their own application, be at once honorably discharged with one year's pay for each eight years' service. It also provides that a board of five officers shall be constituted by the President to vacate the commissions of any and all officers who may be found inefficient, or otherwise unworthy of continuance in service. The bill was earnestly opposed by Gen. MacDougall and the other Republican members of the Committee. It is not at all likely to be enacted by the two houses of this Congress.

CHINA AND JAPAN MAILS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 16.—At a special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce to-day a resolution was adopted petitioning Congress to provide a semi-monthly mail between San Francisco, China and Japan, to be carried on steamers flying the American flag. The chamber also adopted a resolution to appoint a committee to co-operate with the United States Signal Service.

STEAM-SHIPS AND RAILWAYS.

THE QUESTION OF FREIGHT RATES—BOSTON OBJECTS TO NEW-YORK RECEIVING A LARGE SHARE OF BUSINESS.

BOSTON, Feb. 16.—A special meeting of the Board of Trade, called at the solicitation of the various lines of steamers plying between this port and Europe, was held to-day to consider the recent action of the different lines of railroads in establishing a fixed rate from Chicago to all shipping ports, thereby depriving any steam line from naming any lower rate of freight than that agreed upon, to the great injury of Boston. Resolutions were adopted protesting against unwarrantable interference on the part of railway managers with the rights of steamship companies, in refusing to allow them to fix their rates of through freights subject to the railway tariff to the sea-board; that such an important measure, and one which so seriously affects the steam lines of this port, which actually threatens the withdrawal of all the lines, demands the serious attention of the merchants of Boston, and immediate steps should be taken to secure to these lines the privileges which they have enjoyed in the past in fixing their own through rates; that the necessity was recognized of a through line of railway to the West, to be controlled in the interest of the State and her chief seaport; that this action on the part of the railway companies is designed to deprive this port of advantages hitherto enjoyed and to restore to New-York a large share of the business which has been gained by this port during late years, and which is steadily increasing; that as the Boston and Albany Railroad is a partner in these through lines, the managers of said road be requested to prevent the continuance of the said arrangement and agreement by all the means in its power.

A committee of six was appointed to confer with the Directors of the Boston and Albany Railroad upon the subject of grievances of steam-ship agents.

THE STATEN ISLAND MYSTERY.

The circumstances attending the death of the young woman whose body was found in the old quarantine grounds at Tompkinsville, Staten Island, are still unknown to the general public. Coroner Dempsey and other officials intimate, however, that they have information which will probably lead to a solution of the mystery. A large number of witnesses have been summoned to attend the inquest to be held to-night. Police Capt. Blake and the Coroner spent yesterday in this City and Brooklyn, and refused last night to state what was the result of their inquiries. Visitors still continue to view the body of the deceased, which has not yet been identified. A woman who is said to bear a strong likeness to the deceased called at Coroner Dempsey's office last evening. She said that from the description published she believed the deceased was her sister, who left her last month and went to Poughkeepsie with a man to whom she was not married. She stated her sister was once married, but had for years been a trifle "fast." She had not time to go to the alms-house, which is five miles from New-Brighton, to look upon the body, but returned to New-York, saying she would come back to the Island this morning.

TWO BOSTON GIRLS' NOTIONS.

From the Boston Transcript.

Scene—incoming suburban horse car.

First Young Lady, (aged 15, with eye-glasses and an armful of books, to second young lady, similarly equipped)—What are you reading now?

Second Young Lady—Irving's "Bracebridge Hall." It is very good, although the style is defective, and there is a lack of incident.

First Young Lady—Ye-s? I haven't read it yet. At our school we're reading Scott. I think he is greatly overrated. His plots are not artistic, and then the interest is n't always sufficiently kept up.

Second Young Lady—Ye-s!

A FAMILY OF OLD FOLKS.

The Fall River (Mass.) News says: "Mrs. Deborah Pierce, who died in this city on the 11th inst., at the advanced age of 89 years 10 months and 11 days, left a sister in Freetown, the wife of Mr. Seth Chace, in her eighty-seventh year, and also a brother in his eighty-sixth year, and three brothers in Falmouth—Ennis Hathaway in his eighty-fourth year, Thomas Hatnaway in his eighty-third, and Avery Hathaway in his eighty-first year, making a total of upward of 350 years, a result seldom attained by one family in this or any other country."

THE DEMOCRATIC ASSASSIN.

GOV. PACKARD'S ATTEMPTED MURDER.

EXAMINATION OF WELDON IN NEW-ORLEANS—A PLEA OF GUILTY TO THE CHARGE OF ASSAULTING GOV. PACKARD WITH A DEADLY WEAPON—SOME PARTICULARS OF WELDON'S ANTECEDENTS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 16.—This afternoon Recorder Stals, accompanied by several reporters and Police officers, proceeded to a room in the old St. Louis Hotel or State-house, where the wounded Weldon lies, and formally arraigned him on the charge of assaulting with a deadly weapon Stephen B. Packard, Governor of the State of Louisiana, with intent to murder. To the formal question, "Are you guilty or not guilty of this charge?" the prisoner replied in firm voice, "Guilty." An order of commitment was then made out, directing Chief of Police Loan to retain him in custody until further orders.

Mr. Smythe, the attending physician, was present during the examination and stated that he could not at present give an opinion as to the probable result of Weldon's injuries.

Philip Stern, a one-legged German peddler, made the following affidavit: I live at No. 134 Ninth street, in this city, and sell dry goods; yesterday, Thursday, Feb. 15, 1877, between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock in the forenoon, I went into a beer saloon on Toulouse street, near the State-house; there was a gentleman sitting in the saloon who had on a white necktie; I asked this gentleman if he wanted to buy any Russia leather pocket-books or any pocket-knives; he said no, but if I had any good pistols he would buy; I said no, I had got no pistols; he told me to take a seat, and began to talk politics; he asked me if I was a Republican; I told him that was my business; he said, "Well, I am a hard-shell Democrat;" he asked me if I knew Packard; I told him no, except that he ran for Governor; he said to me, "I will fix him, —— rascal, I have particular business with him to-day;" there was a one-armed man who was drinking with the man with the white necktie; the man with the white necktie asked the one-armed man if he knew Packard; the one-armed man said "Yes;" the man with the white necktie asked the one-armed man if he would go along with him, as he had particular business with Packard; I told the one-armed man and also the owner of the bar, "I think that must be a very mean man; I do not know what to say of him," meaning the man with the white necktie; then I left; I noticed nothing in the manner of the man with the white necktie to make me think he was crazy; I would know him again if I saw him.

Stern was taken up to the room where Weldon is, and confronted with him. He at once said: "That is the man I saw and talked to in the bar-room yesterday, and who was then wearing a white necktie."

Hearing this statement the prisoner turned his head with difficulty upon the pillow, and looking intently at Stern, attention to the man I was talking to in the bar-room yesterday!" Stern replied: "Yes, and I am sorry for you. You are in a bad way, but it's your own fault." With an impatient turn of his head, Weldon replied: "It is done, now;" and closed his eyes.

The State authorities confidently declare that at the proper time they will be able to prove Weldon's connection with a band of assassins.

The Evening Times has the following: "At 1 o'clock a Times reporter was admitted to the room of Weldon. He seems very comfortably fixed. He occupies an improvised cot, and apparently has every attention paid to him. He says that while coming over here on the cars he conceived the idea of killing Packard, thinking that it would be a popular act. He asked Mr. Drury about letters which were taken from his person. He remembered about them. Among the letters there were a number from a lady in Mobile, evidently a sweetheart. He is not very clear in his mind yet, and does not talk coherently or connectedly. He acts much like a man who has been under the influence of strong drugs. He said to a policeman who was in his room on Friday morning, that he was sorry for what he had done, and that he had been drinking poisoned liquor of some kind before he came to the State-house.

Mr. George Drury was with him quite a long time on Friday morning trying to get some kind of a statement from him. Mr. Drury says that he does not appear to remember well, and that his mind appears clouded. He remembered the name of the man Joseph Huttel, who accompanied him to the State-house, and remarked that it seemed curious that man Huttel should have allowed him to use his, [Huttel's,] name when asking admission to Packard's office. It seems he did use Huttel's name, although published reports have it that he gave the name of Hutton. Mr. Drury asked him about the third man at the door, and he replied: "Why, he pushed me in the door, did he not?" Mr. Drury says that he got some points from him which he wishes to investigate, and if they prove to be as stated by Weldon, he will be induced to believe that Weldon attempted the assassination while under the influence of strong drink, or a drug of some kind.

With reference to the wound of Weldon, Dr. Smythe says that the ball entered about two inches above the elbow, and came out about three inches below. It is a flesh wound, and, while it is serious, it is not considered by any means dangerous. Dr. Smythe says that he is satisfied that Weldon was under the influence of absinthe and bad whisky when he attempted to assassinate Mr. Packard on Thursday.

MOBILE, Feb. 16.—William H. Weldon, who at tempted to kill Gov. Packard, was sent to Mobile last October, recommended by the house of Claflin & Co., to take service with P. H. Pepper & Co., the wealthy dry goods house here. He was engaged by Mr. Pepper, and remained in his employ for about 10 days ago. After quitting his situation he took to drinking, probably on that account, coupled with a little love matter, and did some wild things, last Sunday informing one of his acquaintances that he was going to kill himself, and that he had already secured a room at Mandech's restaurant for that purpose. The last seen of Weldon at Pepper & Co.'s was on the 13th inst., at 11 A. M., when he called in and received a settlement of his account. He then said to the Cashier, "good-bye," and on being asked if he was going to remain here, he replied that he had something else on hand and was about to leave the city. All those who knew him here say that his resolution, if resolution it was, must have been taken over the drinking table, and with those who happened to be with him at the time. While here, he told his friends that his father was a Lutheran minister in Philadelphia. He was never known to take any part or interest in politics on one side or the other. One of Weldon's acquaintances is willing to swear that Weldon has not been in a condition of responsibility for more than a week, and he can prove this fact by other respectable parties.

CHARGE OF A JUDGE TO THE GRAND JURY.

Judge Whitaker, of the Superior Criminal Court, to-day delivered the following charge to the Grand Jury: "It is notorious that yesterday a prominent citizen was shot, with intent of murder, at the St. Louis Hotel, and also that the efforts of the Police authorities to investigate the matter have been frustrated. These matters, in my opinion, require the attention of the Grand Jury. The protection of the laws should be accorded to every one, and officers of the law be permitted to insure that protection. In your investigation of this matter the court will accord you every assistance in its power, while, at the same time, it would take no hasty action calculated to further complicate the condition of affairs ordinarily referred to as the status quo."

WELDON'S FATHER ALMOST HEART-BROKEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 16.—It has been definitely ascertained here that the relatives of William H. Weldon, who attempted the life of Gov. Packard in New-Orleans yesterday, reside at No. 913 Holly street, in this city, near the Centennial grounds. The father is Rev. Charles F. Weldon; not, however, the clergyman of that name, who is Pastor of St. Peter's German Lutheran Church. While in this city young Weldon was employed in Sharpless' dry goods store, at Eighth and Chestnut streets. In November last he left this city for Mobile, where he engaged in the dry goods store of Patrick Pepper. The father states that he received information that his son left Mobile on the 13th inst. He telegraphed this afternoon to his son, telling him to make a full and free confession to Gov. Packard, and at the same time requesting the Governor to apprise him of what would be done. A special to the Philadelphia Press from Bethlehem states that young Weldon was educated at the home school of Mr. Charles H. Schwartz there. It is believed that Huttle and Sage also come from the same place. Rev. Mr. Weldon is almost heart-broken at the actions of his son, and states that he cannot comprehend what would induce him to commit such an act, as he was always very quiet at home, and took no part in politics.

RELIC OF THE FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS BANK.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 16.—In the United States Court to-day Judge Giles dissolved the injunction granted last November on the complaint of the Commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, restraining the assigns of Col. S. T. Suit from receiving, and various insurance companies from paying to such assigns the amounts of several insurance policies on the residence of Col. Suit, which was burned in October last in Prince George's County. The complainants allege that on a deed of trust executed by Col. Suit to secure the payment of money borrowed from the Freedmen's Bank in Washington in 1873, it was stipulated that the property should be kept insured for $30,000 for the benefit of the debt, and the policies assigned to the Trustee; that since the fire the policies have been assigned to other parties to the exclusion of complainants. The decision of Judge Giles in effect is that the deed of trust to the Freedmen's Bank did not establish such an equitable lien on the insurance fund as to give the bank a superior right over the other creditors of Col. Suit.

BROTHERHOOD OF ENGINEERS.

THE STRIKERS ON THE BOSTON AND MAINE RAILROAD STILL DEFIANT—ASSISTANCE PROMISED FROM OTHER ROADS—THE PROPOSED REDUCTION IN WAGES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Feb. 16.—The strike on the Boston and Maine Railroad continues, both sides standing firm. Trains were run with more regularity to-day than at any time since the strike, and a good deal of freight was moved. Chief Arthur, of the Brotherhood, received dispatches to-day from Jersey City announcing the forwarding of funds from the engineers of the New-Jersey, Erie, and Pennsylvania Railroads, and in reply he sent the following dispatch:

BOSTON, Feb. 15, 1877.

W. J. Wood, Locomotive Engineer, Erie Railway, Jersey City:

All right. Men firm and determined. Railroad management of the country are giving aid and comfort to the enemy. Warn them.

P. M. ARTHUR.

The State Railroad Commissioners held a meeting to-day in regard to the strike, and heard President White, Superintendent Furber, and other officials of the road. President White stated that the reduction of 10 per cent. on salaries was made as a matter of economy. The visits of the committee of engineers and of Mr. Arthur in January last were referred to. When Mr. Arthur insisted that the pay of the engineers should be restored Mr. White replied that he did not want to lose his men, but he could not restore their pay. Mr. Arthur then said that, if the pay was not restored, he would not be responsible for their acts. If he ordered them not to strike, they would not. The men were then receiving $3 50 per day, and 25 cents per day as a reward of merit, payable at the end of three months. The engineers were given then choice of the $3 15 and 25 cents per day at the end of three months, or $3 37, payable monthly. The $3 15 and 25 cents was accepted, and this was the last he had heard from them until the present trouble arose. Director Osgood and Superintendent Furber corroborated Mr. White.

THE NEWARK MURDERER'S DEATH.

A CONFESSION OF SUICIDE FOUND IN RYAN'S CELL—THE CONFESSION IN THE HANDS OF THE CORONER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEWARK, Feb. 16.—A confession of the suicide of Thomas Ryan, one of the convicted murderers of Officer Brock, whose sudden death last Thursday morning caused such excitement here, was found this morning by the jail authorities in the bedding in the cell lately occupied by Ryan. The contents are not yet made public. The confession is in the hands of the Coroner, who will present it in evidence at the inquest to-morrow afternoon.

The funerals of the murderers Oschwald and Ryan will take place to-day from the respective residences of their parents at Newark, N. J. When Judge Depue heard of the suspicious circumstances surrounding Ryan's death he directed that the body should not be permitted to go out of the custody of the authorities until after the inquest. Subsequently Under Sheriff Davis gave an undertaker a written order to prepare the remains for interment, and this being mistaken for a permit for removal the body was taken to Ryan's father's house. The mistake was discovered very soon afterward and Col. Davis had the corpse brought back. The stomach has been given to Prof. Chandler, who will make a chemical analysis of it. The inquest will be held on Tuesday next. The physicians who attended Ryan state that he had all the symptoms of poisoning by arsenic.

LITTLE HELL GATE.

A CONFERENCE AT POLICE HEAD-QUARTERS—THE PROJECT OF FILLING THE CHANNEL WITH STREET REFUSE DISCUSSED—ADOPTION OF RESOLUTIONS RECOMMENDING THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE WORK.

The project of filling the channel known as Little Hell Gate with street refuse was discussed yesterday afternoon at an informal conference held in the office of Gen. Smith, at Police Head-quarters. Those who participated in the proceedings, which were conducted in privacy, were the full Board of Police Commissioners: Hon. Salem H. Wales, President of the Dock Department; Gen. John Newton, Prof. Chandler—President of the Board of Health—and Mr. Ambrose W. Snow, President of the Pilot Commission. On motion of President Smith, of the Police Board, Mr. Wales was chosen Chairman of the conference and Prof. Chandler Secretary. Gen. Smith announced that the object of the meeting was to consider the proposition of filling the Little Hell Gate channel with the ashes and garbage of the City, which is at present carried out to sea at an enormous expenditure to the Street-cleaning Department. The Police Board, he said, had come to the conclusion that the street refuse of the next two years could be conveniently deposited below high-water mark in Little Hell Gate, and that the adoption of the plan of depositing the refuse in that channel would save the City over $10,000 per annum. Gen. Newton spoke fully of the scheme, and President Wales was of the opinion that the process of filling the channel would not interfere with the plans of the Dock Department for the improvement of the water-front of the City. In consideration of the large pecuniary saving to the City, the health authorities regarded the street refuse as highly commendable. Prof. Chandler stated that the plan had the entire approval of the Board of Health, providing the deposits of refuse did not reach above high-water mark, and personally he was confident that it would not be detrimental to the public health. Mr. Snow spoke in opposition to the plan, and expressed himself in favor of sending the refuse to sea. In answer to a question of the Chairman, Commissioner Wheeler, of the Police Board, said that the transportation of the stuff out to sea would require the constant employment of five barges or scows. On motion of Gen. Smith, the following resolutions were adopted, Mr. Snow being the only member of the conference voting in the negative:

Resolved, That the project of filling up Little Hell Gate is entirely feasible, not detrimental to commerce, navigation, or health, and is of great value to the City of New-York, and that bills should be at once prepared authorizing the work.

Resolved, That the sunken meadows, being private property, cannot properly be considered by this conference.

Resolved, That the channel known as the Bronx Kills, being necessary to commerce, cannot properly be closed without detriment to the interests of the City.

Gen. Smith was of the opinion that, in addition to a decrease of $100,000 annually in the expenditure of the Street-cleaning Bureau, the use of the channel as a dumping ground would result in the making of 32 acres of ground. The conference will meet again at 2 P. M. on Monday next.

RAILROAD STOCKHOLDERS TO BE SUED.

Peckham and Tremain, for money due for services, has obtained an order from Judge Westbrook authorizing him to sue the several shareholders for amounts proportionate to the shares held by them, large sums being due

OFFENBACH IN AMERICA.

OFFENBACH IN AMERICA. Notes of a Traveling Musician. By JACQUES OFFENBACH. With a Biographical Preface by ALBERT WOLFF. Translated from Advance Sheets of the original Paris Edition. New-York: G. W. CARLETON & Co. 1877.

Here is a little book that might readily have its title inverted and go by the name of "A Biographical Sketch by Albert Wolff, with Appendix of Offenbach's Impressions of the United States." It may be that Offenbach's friends felt that these flimsy impressions were too light to venture out alone in the world; that, after all, they would only be read by people who wanted to know more about the composer, and very probably it was foreseen that even such people would be disgusted to find so little about the musical genius himself. Hence the biographical letter by the celebrated musical critic of Paris assumes the first place in the book. It is a peculiar introduction, addressed in the form of a letter to Mme. Herminie Offenbach; but it succeeds in accomplishing several things in no unskilful manner. In the first place, M. Wolff would seem to be a little reluctant to appear at all. He is profusely apologetic, probably because as a musical critic he cannot heartily and unreservedly approve of all of Offenbach's music, and yet stands in the shoes of a eulogist. But he extricates himself with the happy faculty of a writer of Paris from this false position, and manages to impress the reader with a feeling that whatever harsh things may be said of Offenbach, whatever assaults may be made on the morality of his music, not only is the man himself a harmless and genial artist, but his early life and the family of Cologne which begot him are something better than merely respectable, that both life and family have known the quickening influences of pecuniary want and of toil. Albert Wolff, it appears, is himself a native of Cologne and a family friend of the Offenbachs. He sketches picturesquely the figures of the father, mother, and music-teacher of Jacques, and such family scenes of higher life as Cologne used—perhaps still is able—to afford. With all that, a fastidious reader would be likely to detect in this introduction a certain hint of the common. The tone is not quite respectful; along with every good intention on the writer's part, sometimes it smacks of patronage. But this may arise simply from the position in which the writer finds himself, where he may be expected to play the panegyrist. Be that as it may, the introduction is plainly a kind of apology for the appearance of Offenbach in print.

Offenbach's part may be understood by hearing one of his lightest and most indifferent pieces of music. Probably no writer has ever yet put such superficial impressions upon paper, and moreover, few visitors of this country appear to have come less in contact with Americans. We have amusing chapters on waiters, evidently Frenchmen, and the wildest generalizations on some occurrence that probably has happened to no one else. His pathos on leaving France is inimitable.

"While the ship was steaming away my eyes were riveted upon that little group, in the midst of which stood my dear child. The sun shining brightly on the brass buttons of his college uniform enabled me for a long time to make out the exact spot where he stood, and which my heart would otherwise have guessed."

On arriving in New-York Bay he gives a sketch of the vicissitudes of the quarantine under the popular hatred that drove it from one place to another. Theatres and hotels then come in for hasty notice. On the subject of art M. Offenbach is ready with advice, just as all foreigners are. But in his case we are treated to it good-humoredly. Speaking of actors he says:

"The same observation applies also to other branches of art, and neither music, painting, nor sculpture find in America a soil which favors their development. You may assert that there are painters and sculptors. I agree with you, and I know myself several of eminent talent—Bierstadt, Hunt, Ball, Church, Vinnie Ream."

It is amusing to fancy the feelings of Mr. Hunt should he see himself classed with Vinnie Ream. Offenbach goes on to advise that municipal governments and associations of private persons should take the place of the General Government, as that of France, in supporting the various arts. It shows the unthinking generosity of M. Offenbach's mind that he insists on American museums and conservatories of art to be supplied at first by European teachers of the highest order. A longer head would have hesitated to encourage Americans in that species of protection to home arts, but would rather have insisted on a course more nearly akin to free trade, namely, that artists of all kinds should go to Europe, as they do now, for their instruction. M. Offenbach remarks, as usual, upon the sobriety and sedateness of Americans, but in order to get an artistic contrast he has eagerly swallowed a number of the astonishing stories which lie in wait for the gullible in all seaport and inland towns of the United States. He gravely retails one of those jocose yarns, such as are always spinning in the columns of the Danbury News, in order to show that on one day of the year, the Fourth of July, the American citizen, irrespective of age or sex, becomes a kind of dangerous maniac. Like M. Molinari, another hasty but by no means silly visitor, he is amused and astonished by our advertising processes. Thus, he is naturally amazed at our business quickness when he learns as follows:

"A poor horse falls from fatigue after dragging fifty passengers all day long; at once a boy springs forward and sticks a bill on his nose—Gargling Oil—Good for Man and Beast."

Another old story, that some wag must be chuckling to find so successful with the innocent Offenbach, is to the effect that all Americans have, near the waist and beneath the skirts of their coats, a rather marked protuberance. "This is caused by the revolver which they generally carry in that locality, in a pocket specially made for the purpose."

M. Offenbach gives quick sketches of our leading dailies and personal notices of persons prominent or notorious. His geniality is not proof against professional hatred when he reaches Theodore Thomas, who, it is well known, has no patience with the caracoles of Offenbach's genius. He insinuates that Thomas plays a great deal of the music of Ambroise Thomas in order that people shall mistake the pieces for productions of his own, on account of the similar name. One can hardly call this stiletto work; it is a vicious thrust with a rapier. It is a pity that the jovial Offenbach should give way to such an exhibition of spite. But the book is so silly that it will be forgotten before the boys in the street stop whistling the secrest of Offenbach's tunes.

KISMET. No Name Series. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1877.

The title of the last novel in the No Name Series shows the knowledge of the editors in choosing what will catch the eye and rouse a desire to see the interior of the book. The short Arabic word, which expresses resignation to whatsoever is fated, has a piquant effect to the eye and not a little promise of the Orient. And it is the Orient into which we plunge—not only the Orient, but the familiar scenes of Egypt, for the novel spins itself out on the historic bosom of the Nile. Its apogee—that is, the offer of marriage—occurs with the arrival of a party of travelers at the highest point of tourist navigation above the cataracts, and the Mediterranean sees the final wind-up of the snarl.

From its setting only one might argue for the story an assured success. The author has evidently been over the ground with the keenest of observing eyes; it is not unlikely that he (or she!) has made copious "Nile Notes" to assist the memory, although it is almost possible for a clever person to take a half score or so of Travels on the Nile and get such detailed descriptions of the scenery that the trouble of going there will not be necessary. However, there is an off-hand manner of alluding to unimportant things on the trip that show pretty conclusively that the writer has made one of a dahabiyeh party.

Bell Hamlyn is something of a type of many American girls who have been allowed to grow up instead of being educated, and, when in foreign countries, treat the proprieties of the land with that frank contempt which is the continual marvel of foreigners. She is a heroine to the author herself, (for we may as well consider the anonymous writer of Kismet a woman,) but she is also the grown-up enfant terrible whose ignorance and audacity is the confusion of the male members of her party. When the story opens she is secretly engaged to a young painter in Venice. Her father objects to him, but evidently has nothing but a blessing for Arthur Livingston, a New-Yorker of 35, drifting about Europe, a strictly moral man, with a "back history." Bell Hamlyn being really, whatever the author may intend, an ingrained flirt, attacks the indifference of this gentleman with an exaggerated indifference that is the sweetest flattery. The dahabiyehs of the parties to which the two belong are going up the Nile together, and having moved near a town, Bell proceeds to investigate the same by night, under the protection of some Arab sailors. Arthur Livingston meets her and insists on going with her as an escort. In the dark town a gate open and the people going in. Presently a dancing girl nears them on the same errand. Bell is in ecstasies:

"'Don't you remember the Nile Notes of a Howadji? It must mean that. Fantasia! are they the Ghawazee, Rishmond?' she asked, turning to the nearest sailor.

'Ghawazee! aowa, aowa, ya sitt!' and they all laughed. The girl clashed her castanets together, and the bystanders pointed to that illuminated garden gate.

'What fun!' cried Bell, eagerly; 'they are Ghawazee girls, Mr. Livingston, dancing girls, don't you know? Was it not clever of me to find it out? Look! There are some more people going in. Do, let us go quickly, before the places are all taken!'

'Miss Hamlyn! for Heaven's sake think what you are about,' said Livingston in a shocked voice; then breaking off with a laugh, 'But of course you are joking? Of course you would not think of going in there?'

'Not think of it! why of course I am going,' said Bell, coolly."

After a little tussle Livingston gives in after the weakest fashion imaginable, but does get her out again before the dancing has gone far. She is amazingly pretty, and her character fits well to hundreds of American girls one sees in Europe. Unfortunately, she does not inspire one with a high idea of them. One does not envy Livingston her possession in the end, notwithstanding her pale face and dim, dull, dazed phases of feeling when she finds that not only has she made him wildly in love with her, but that she herself has been winged. Sternly setting her pale face against his love, and tacitly acknowledging her crime, she awaits an interview with the wretched young painter, who, supposing himself her affianced, hurries from Venice to join her in Cairo. The interview results in his rushing off to Palestine with a dim, dazed face. Whereupon Livingston steps aboard the same packet with Bell, and, having made the necessary reapproaches, once more folds her to his breast in the solitude of night and the privacy afforded by the rail over the rudder and behind the Captain's cabin. Apparently the chief cause of Bell's savage treatment of Livingston is her jealousy of a former flame whose previous existence and blighting death that ingenuous person has revealed. She also wishes heroically to fulfill her engagement with the young painter if he insists. We do not doubt that moral readers will thoroughly enjoy this book. Perhaps it may also serve to mend the manners of American girls when in countries that do not possess the American code of morals, but the lesson is hardly reinforced by the sight of penalties. To be sure, Bell's concealed engagement with one man, while flirting with another, brings her to grief, but it is a grief of a kind no properly-constituted young woman does not enjoy better than bonbons, the lacerated heart business mixed with triumphant grief at having several men raving round about her eyes. Who knows? It may cause the American girl on the Nile to make a system of pushing into all the improper localities she can find.

HARPERS' PUBLICATIONS.

—Harper's Monthly.—From year to year this the most popular and oldest of our magazines goes on accumulating facts and fiction of every description, and every six months the Messrs. Harper bind one more solid volume to add to the long list already on the shelf. Volume 52 contains the six months from December, 1875, to May, 1876. Volume 53 ends with the November number of last year. Only a month more and volume 54 will be ready, if anything more condensed and more entertaining than its predecessor. It would be no mean criterion of the reading public in the United States, should some of the many foreigners now studying our country examine carefully the history of publications by Messrs. Harper & Brothers, and criticise the material which is laid before such a host of readers every month of the year. No publication could be more justly taken as a standard, for none can boast so extensive a circulation, and probably no one of its rivals could so readily afford to take liberties with the tastes of its readers without losing their good will. But the Harper is in the position popularly supposed to be coveted by the Jesuit; it has the advantage of having assisted at the earliest training of the infant, and men who are now well on in years, and very readily disposed to scoff at the more popular forms of literature, are often found to retain a sneaking fondness for Harper for the sake of early associations. Such individuals may be known at once by their weighty denunciations of the "short story" in the magazine, while on the sly they read the whole publication from beginning to end. In volume 52 we find "The Fine Arts in America treated, from a historical standpoint, by S. S. Conant. Small vignette portraits of American painters, from Copley to Kensett, accompany this sketch. Constance Fenimore Woolson has a sprightly paper on "Two Southern Rivers," besides several pieces of prose fiction. James Parton's "Caricature in the United States" will be found in this volume, headed by a portrait of the redoubtable Thomas Nast. Rebecca Harding Davis tells about "Old Philadelphia," with the aid of numerous illustrations. The poets are R. H. Stoddard, Paul H. Hayne, Celia Thaxter, Saxe, Harney, and a cloud of comrades. But perhaps the chief attraction in volume 52 is the latest novel by George Eliot, about which every one is talking, and about which the talking will probably continue until she favors the world with a successor to "Daniel Deronda.' This novel of many heroes is concluded in volume 53, which seems to contain even more well-known names than the former. T. B. Aldrich and Bayard Taylor, Dinah Mulock-Craik and Edgar Fawcett, have verses of various intents and purposes. Mrs. Mulock-Craik has an ambitious little play in verse, with illustrations, being something founded on a Shetland legend. Here is also Miss Thackeray's "Past Fields", and papers from Mrs. Mary Treat, famous for her researches in the line followed by Darwin, that of carnivorous plants. The illustrations to Harper show a marked improvement during the past year.

—Harper's Weekly.—The year 1876 completes the twentieth volume of Harper's Weekly. A noticeable feature of last year was the increased importance given to political cartoons, chiefly by Thomas Nast. These are almost always good when comic; when serious, or rather when not satirical, they are apt to be of very mediocre ability. Indeed, Mr. Nast appears to be clever in inverse ratio to the size of his cartoons. His best hits have been made with little pictures, unless one may except the double-page picture called "Hold the Fort." This has been much reproduced, and is probably familiar to everyone. As to the art shown by the drawings of Nast, apart from the wittiness of the ideas they embody, very little can be said. He seems to have a confirmed habit of giving his figures clumsy and elephantine extremities, but whether this arises from a radical lack of grace in his pencil, or because he thinks it comic, or again, because he is in too great a hurry to perfect his work, would be hazardous to determine. His clumsiness is effectual enough; perhaps better art would not assist him in any degree with the public. In Harper's Weekly one is sure to find something more than clever cartoons and fine reprints of popular pictures, the leading articles of Mr. George W. Curtis. He is one of our public men whose opinion we can always afford to treat with respect, because we know that he is above the wiles and tricks of politicians. Even when he runs a hobby too far for most men's taste, or counsels moderation when moderation seems to smack of weakness, we must still accept his opinion as honest.

—Harper's Bazar.—The bound volume of Harper's Bazar for 1876 is now ready. It forms the seventh of the series, and contains a perfect arsenal of those singular diagrams on white paper, and those statuesque ladies in fine clothes that appear to afford the feminine mind an exquisite satisfaction. Now that Charles Blanc has written a weighty book on the art of adorning one's self, it behooves us to treat weekly repositories of modes and fashion with due respect, and not to smile derisively at samplers and lace patterns, outlines for bibs and tuckers, and such affairs as the Bazar has to show. Short stories and numerous illustrations, some of them very handsome reproductions of fine pictures in England, are added for the sake of variation and amusement. The comic department is very full, the mantle of the illustrated comedy which used to grace the end of Harper's Monthly having fallen upon Harper's Bazar. Thomas Nast has furnished a good many full-page cartoons to last year's Bazar.

LITERARY NOTES.

Charles Kingsley has a kind word to his memory in Fraser's Magazine for February, and Blackwood of the same date gives the Tory's impressions of the great Chartist reformer and broad churchman.

—A bright, humorous, and genial book is The Life of a Scotch Probationer, being the memoir of Thomas Davidson, with his poems and letters, by Rev. James Brown, of Paisley, Scotland. Its publishers are Macmillan & Co.

—The January Edinburgh Review has the honor of having reached a second edition, and the number of the Quarterly Review for the same month has an article entitled "A French Critic on Milton," which has made a literary sensation in England.

The Contemporary Review returns to the subject of intemperance, so ably discussed by Francis Peek in the December number, and the February issue contains a paper by Dr. John Charles Buckvill on "The Duty of the State to Habitual Drunkenness."

—The Tupper family are said to be literary, like Mr. Tupper himself, and one of his two daughters will contribute a fairy story to St. Nicholas at an early day. His other daughter has the gift of verse, but it is to be hoped that she has not her father's facility of manufacturing it to order.

—Harper & Brothers seem to be enamored of Asia. On the heels of Capt. Burnaby, with his Ride to Khiva, comes Arthur Arnold's Through Persia by Caravan. It has been highly spoken of in the London press, and cannot fail in any case to interest a public looking out just now for information.

—Right Hon. Robert Lowe, M. P., discusses the question in the February Fortnightly Review, "Shall we Create a New University?" and Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, M. P., who has made himself prominent in the work of the English Social Science Congress, has an article on "The Organization of Teaching."

—Is there any limit to Edgar Fawcett's literary activity? Only a few weeks ago he published a novel, Ellen Story; there is hardly a magazine which does not contain some bright poem from his pen, and in the line of short articles on literary and general subjects he does good work—writes in a correct and vigorous style.

—Rev. Dr. G. C. Lorimer's Great Conflict, soon to be published by Lee & Shepard, is a discourse concerning Baptists and religious liberty. It is the outgrowth of a sermon which the reverend gentleman delivered in Chicago last year, and presents various aspects of questions which are agitating all religious denominations.

—James Cotter Morison reviews Leslie Stephen's History of English Thought in the February number of Macmillan's Magazine, and Rev. John Hunt, who has treated the same subject in three large volumes from a religious point of view, has an article upon Mr. Stephen's book in the February number of the Contemporary Review.

—Hurd & Houghton have recently published the fifth volume of Bigelow's Life and Accident Insurance Cases and Dr. McClelland's work on Civil Malpractice, announced some months ago. The latter is designed for both the medical and legal professions, and has been generally commended by members of both to whom the plan has been submitted.

—The March number of Harper's Monthly will contain a poem by Philip Bourke Marston, of London. The Editor's Drawer will also have a few lines by the popular English novelist, William Black. In the same number there are to be some stanzas by Barry Cornwall, never before printed, which were addressed to the lady who afterward became his wife. Mr. C. P. Cranch is also one of the poetical contributors to the March Harper.

—The Winthrop family survives the death of Theodore Winthrop through literature of a less ambitious form than his. A sister of the dead soldier and author writes for the magazines under the name of Laura Winthrop Johnson, and the March St. Nicholas will have a specimen of her powers in the line of children's stories. "Extract from the Journal of a Blue-coat Girl" is the title of her contribution.

—The literary firm that goes under the name of Erckmann-Chatrian is to have one of its best love stories published in English dress. The story is known as L'ami Fritz, and the translation, which appears this week with the imprint of Scribner, Armstrong & Co., is called Friend Fritz. Erckmann and Chatrian are adepts in the art of naïve writing; in their artfully artless pages one hears the quiet, slow-moving, slow-thinking peasant or burgher conversing.

"Transcendentalism in England, New-England, and India" is a very suggestive subject in the hands of "Henry Holbeach," who seldom troubles the magazines in these days, in the February Contemporary Review. The departure of Mr. Knowles from the editorial management is hardly perceptible in this number, and a new department has been added in the shape of short essays and notices, something like the excellent "monthly gossip" in Lippincott's Magazine.

— Those who are interested in the industrial growth of Philadelphia and in the condition of its working people will find in Mr. Lorin Blodget's Industries of Philadelphia, as shown by the manufacturing census of 1870, compared with 1860, and estimates for 1875 and 1876, a vast amount of valuable material, which was prepared for the use of the guests at the International Exhibition, and which may now be had through Mr. Collins, printer, No. 705 Jayne street, Philadelphia.

—The February number of the Penn Monthly, published in Philadelphia, contains the second lecture by Christopher Dresser, Ph. D., on "Art Museums." These were delivered under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art. His knowledge of the foundation and working of the Art Museum at South Kensington makes his lecture important to those interested in the fostering of art in this country.

—The announcement of a poem from Bret Harte will always awaken some interest, although it cannot be denied that he disappoints his audience now and then. The next Scribner will have some lines by him written on the late Gen. W. F. Bartlett, which, we trust, will be up to the mark. Mr. Harte has the good will of the people; they are only waiting for something of a high order of art to applaud.

—New novels which will reach the market during the present month from the presses of the Messrs. Harper are The Golden Butterfly, by the author of Ready-Money Mortiboy, which introduces American characters and customs; Miss Nancy's Pilgrimage, by Virginia W. Johnson, author of The Catskill Fairies; and Nora's Love Test, a novel by Mary Cecil Hay, author of Old Myddelton's Money. These are all from writers who have made their hit and formed an audience of their own.

—Rev. James M. Macdonald's Life and Writings of Saint John has been edited by Very Rev. J. S. Howson, D. D., Dean of Chester. The editor was one of the writers of Conybeare and Howson's St. Paul, and the present volume is intended to be uniform with that. Dean Howson contributes an introduction. It forms a handsome volume octavo, with a long list of full-page illustrations and maps, engraved expressly for the purpose. Scribner, Armstrong & Co., the publishers in the United States, promise to have it ready by the beginning of next month.

—The question which every notice of Mr. Mackenzie Wallace's Russia in the English journals leads an American to ask is, how soon will Henry Holt & Co. give us their reprint of this work. The Examiner says that this work "marks an epoch in the writing of books of travel," and "introduces the scientific method into this department of letters." The Times says that it is undoubtedly the best book written on modern Russia by a foreigner, and one of the best books ever written on that country by either foreigner or native."

There is an important article by the editor of the Academy on "American Efforts After International Copyright," in the February Fortnightly Review, in which the various groups of American opinion on this subject will be brought into one view, and a detailed account given of the various measures which have been proposed in the United States for the solution of this question. In their place in this article will be inserted some documents, existing only in manuscript or otherwise inaccessible shape in the library of Congress, and believed to be known to few persons even in this country.

—Dr. John W. Draper has received the most flattering testimonials from men of science belonging to other nations, and his word may be considered, if not law, at any rate a matter of consequence. He has begun to publish in Harper's Monthly a series of papers giving a popular exposition of some scientific experiments. The first paper will treat of red-hot bodies and illustrate the experiments on which were based Dr. Draper's memoir On the Production of Light by Heat, published in 1847, and anticipating by thirteen years the results obtained by Kirchoff in a memoir that was at that time (1860) regarded as the origin of spectral analysis.

—"Life in South Africa," by Lady Barker, which has formed a very pleasant feature in Lippincott's Magazine, is now collected into a volume and published in octavo by J. B. Lippincott & Co. Lady Barker is not a novice in describing foreign and out-of-the-way places. She has published Station Life in New-Zealand and appears to have reduced the writing of an agreeable, chatty, and withal instructive letter to a science. Her residence is in Natal, on the east coast, where the Zulu Kafirs have lately been showing fight against the Dutch Boers. The English appear to realise and prepare for danger far better than the Dutch. Lady Barker gives an interesting sketch of a volunteer camp of cavalry established annually by the English residents.

—The wrongs of Ireland form a theme on which many hot-headed writers have vented their indignation, and in the same category, but with a difference, stands a thick volume from the publishing house of Lippincott in Philadelphia. Thomas C. Amory writes a historical sketch—called Transfer of Erin; or, The Acquisition of Ireland by England—on the period between the arrival of Strongbow from Wales and the death of Queen Elizabeth. The biased judgment of a list of English historians has spurred Mr. Amory to this task, but Froude arouses his especial ire. People who have put implicit trust in English annalists will do well to consult these pages before they consider the question settled. The book will be found to be earnest, but by no means violent, in tone.

—The Childhood of the English Nation, by Ella S. Armitage, is a little book whose object is to give a clear idea of the history of Great Britain from the Saxon Conquest to the middle of the twelfth century. The best authorities have been used in its compilation. Schmid, (Gesetze der Angelsachsen,) Michelet, Guizot, and many others are given in the appendix, but the preface acknowledges especially the assistance of Stubbs and Freeman. The endeavor has been to bring the actual life and customs of the composite English population before the reader, and to that end some parts of history are lightly treated. Much space is given to affairs of the Church, and the author defends that course in her preface. It is careful work, written in a style by no means dull. The publishers are G. P. Putnam's Sons.

—The Great West and the Pacific Coast, an octavo volume of 500 pages, prepared by Gen. James F. Rusling, of the United States Army, and giving the story of 15,000 miles of travel and adventure through Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, California, Nevada, Arizona, Mexico, and Central America, will be published as a subscription book by Sheldon & Co., early in March, and, while it covers some of the ground which Col. Dodge has gone over in his Plains of the Great West, will be found to be a fresh, independent, more extensive, and in all respects as important a contribution to our knowledge of unexplored America. The book will discuss our Indian policy and the Mormon and Chinese questions, and its information will be brought down to January, 1877. Mr. Arthur Lumley is preparing the illustrations from photographs taken on the spot.

—The February Art Journal (D. Appleton & Co.) has a second illustrated paper on "Scenery of the Pacific Railway," which renews the impressions we have gathered heretofore from pictures by Thomas Moran. The frontispiece is a full page engraving by S. Smith of "Jepthah's Daughter," by Julius Schrader, while the body of the magazine contains Murillo's "Spanish Flower Girl," engraved by P. Lightfoot. Several cuts adorn an article on Edward J. Poynter, of the Royal Academy, and the valuable papers on "Traditions of Christian Art," by Rev. E. L. Cutts, are continued. The piece of sculpture this month is a statue of Dr. Priestly, by J. F. Williamson, engraved by G. Stodart. A series on Norway by R. T. Pritchett, F. S. A., is begun, and the ninth paper on the Centennial Exhibition occupies several pages with large woodcuts of remarkable objects of decorative art there exposed.

—Still another specimen of book-making comes from the Riverside Press, which will please literary people for its finish and tone, and for its observance of the points on which the lovers of good books always insist. The work is The Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold, D. D., and the publishers this time are Scribner, Armstrong & Co. The plates are those formerly owned by J. R. Osgood & Co., but the transformation is such that few would recognise their old favorite in its new dress; and yet this new edition, corresponding in every feature with Crabb Robinson's Diary, Reminiscences, and Correspondence, is so unique in its binding, lettering, page-margin, gilt-top, rough edges, flexible back, good paper, and general make-up, that hereafter for some time old editions of this work can be bought for a trifle at the second-hand book-stores, into which they have been crowded by this fresh and incomparable edition. We are glad to see that the publishers find that it pays to bring out the standard works in this sober, sensible style of the good old times.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

VARIOUS TOPICS DISCUSSED.

HAS THE NEGRO ANY RIGHTS?

Much has been written, much said, about that disturbed portion of our commonwealth called the South. Of this some has been lamentably true, a part maliciously false, and many of the deductions illogical and unjust. It would seem as if the spirit of anarchy and unrest had taken up its abode in this unhappy part of our land. Instead of submission to law, observance of human rights, industrious and honest efforts to redeem the land from the blight which war cast upon it, we find and experience a total disregard of all law, however just, humane, and protective; we experience a brutal overriding of all the rights of citizenship inflicted upon any who differ from the former lords of the soil.

We see a loathing of labor, a persistent and ill-concealed purpose to live upon the earnings of others, (without their consent,) on the part of the men whose life, liberty, and property were so lately forfeited to the Government, which generously afforded protection to the very ones who attempted to overthrow or destroy, and who now, by similar means, attempt to rule it.

Certainly, the position in which these men voluntarily place themselves to-day cannot be attributable to the Government that has so leniently overlooked their past misdeeds, and which has in a great measure failed to protect those to whom the ideas of these men at the South seemed repugnant and unchristian. Neither can their acts be laid (as before) to the charge of Northern bigots and fanatics, whom they say were the ones who stirred up the cauldron into which the witches seem to have cast all their disturbing elements, for the reason that the cry for help comes not from those in whose hands lie power and strength. The remonstrance against the evils deplored is filed, not by those who perpetrate the wrongs, but, on the contrary, the appeal comes from men and women, white and black alike, whose lives are endangered and often taken, and whose liberties are threatened with extinction. And the plea made for justice is by the victims of injustice. The North and West have all of these elements of disorder and breeders of misrule, which the South flippantly claim excite and disturb their peace and prosperity; and yet no such effect is produced among the Northern and Western States. Why is it that a few "carpet-baggers," (as they derisively call them,) can go into that portion of our country and at once exert such a mighty influence that it becomes needful for the entire white population to arm, destroy, and murder to counteract it, when the North and West get on peaceably with a large proportion of their population made up from this very element? It would seem that there must be some subtile chemical antagonism between the spirit of free speech, industry, and progression which accompanies the Northern man South, and the influences he comes in contact with when he gets there, that the formula adopted by Southern alchemists cannot reconcile.

The men who appeal to arms to strengthen and maintain their decaying power admit, by this act, their moral weakness, and their inability to command the respect and adherence of the voters they would coerce! They virtually say to the despised "carpet-bagger," your theories, your teachings, meet with an acceptance at the hands of the voters of the South which requires us, in self-defense, (although "we hold our title-deeds from God Almighty,") to either thrust you out of our midst, compel your silence, or intimidate the milder portion of our population into our views. This must be humiliating in the extreme to these haughty souls who have so long only expressed wishes to have them complied with; at the same time, it should encourage Northern men who went South entertaining the idea that this was really one nation and that the Government extended its protection alike over all parts thereof. But, says the South, these men come here to rob and plunder us, and filch from us in our prostrate condition the little that war and misfortune did not destroy. I do not deny that this is measurably true, nor do I seek to justify it; but men who have for over a century stolen the labor of others, and made such laws that they could do this with impunity, should avoid counter charges against any who may be putting in practice the principles upon the application of which they so long thrived and fattened. But the secret of the trouble lies just here: Under the old slave system the "nigger" was robbed, while under the present system, in this "turn about" of affairs, the white man is compelled to contribute of his former stealings to satisfy the spirit of corruption that stalks abroad over the whole land unrebuked.

"It is your bull that has gored my ox." I do not wish or intend to justify one act of wrong-doing on the part of any living man, be he "carpet-bagger," or other higher outgrowth of civilization, "a South Carolinian."

Neither do I propose in speaking of facts to disguise them. The truth has long been veiled. The motives actuating those who professed to have this much abused spirit in charge have been various, and to them no doubt sufficient. It may be that the "carpet-bagger" has been wronged, and from this standpoint it may be well to inquire whether the law-abiding Northern man ("carpet-bagger") who has never even been charged with bull-dosing, murder, or arson, may not constitute as desirable an element in a well-regulated community as men who, although "to the manor born" have been charged with all these, and who would be convicted, too, if the courts having jurisdiction could exercise their functions without being overslaughed by armed men either in or out of court.

The situation of affairs is simply this: Any Republican who goes into that part of our land south of Mason and Dixon's line to live, and exercises that freedom in speech and action which the Constitution and laws are supposed to guarantee him, becomes at once the object, not only of suspicion and ostracism, but he becomes also the victim of all the malice and hatred of those who have never been taught any other line of conduct. He lives only because these men do not see fit to kill him, not because the law protects him, since the law is used only to endanger his rights not to secure them, and just in proportion to his influence, among those who at this time are the special objects of the "love and affection" of the Democrats of the South, is his danger.

This, and similar ideas, put forth from the stump, by Democratic orators, during the late campaign, that "such and such men ought to be burned at the stake," were sown in good ground, budded, blossomed, and bore a plentiful harvest, as those who planted the seed intended they should. The protection which citizens in the South are to-day receiving is of that nature that it leaves them to be killed, even at this hour, and renders it possible for responsible men to write letters North stating trouble still exists on the runs about Eutaw's bridge and Edenton. The whites have killed eight or ten colored men since the election; they are so outrageous they kill females as well as males. It seems that we can't get any redress for the outrageous acts they carry on there." Now, who are the men and women that are murdered? They are black men and women. Who are their murderers? They are white Democrats.

Let the same outrages be perpetrated upon a like number of whites and such a hue and cry would be raised by the indignant North that it would startle Kings across the seas.

A more divine patience and forbearance has been vouchsafed to these despairing colored people than has been exercised by the "noble Hampton" and his confrères. A word from him or them, it is said, would have precipitated bloodshed in one State, and yet bloodshed by them has failed to wring one remedatory act from those who are virtually outcasts because the Government does not take strong, high ground in their behalf. Is it true (as these people fear) that their cause was buried in the grave of the lamented Sumner? Can it be that the words of the proclamation, which spoke them into existence as men, only made them such that they might be stranded on the beach, and fritter their lives away in futile attempts to escape the tide, because no hand is strong and true enough to draw them out of its reach.

Not long ago there was a disturbance at one of the ship-houses on the Hudson River, caused by some element of discord which had crept into a large body of men employed to fill the houses. The position taken by the leading New-York dailies in the matter was strong on the side of order. It was proposed to put down this disorderly uprising by the strong arm of the law, at once, although it merely threatened the peace and security of property in a village. The intervention of the military was invoked (if necessary) to thrust back into line this array of violent, lawless men, and all because the interests of a corporation were involved and the peace and quiet of a country village broken in upon. The vicarous strokes of the pens of city editors denouncing the conduct of men who only threatened to endanger property, not life, gave rise to the inquiry, Why is it that the cries of ejectment of our people at the South calling for protection must fall on deaf ears, while the first note of alarm from a community exposed for a day to the violence of a handful of men meets with such ready response? One appeal for help came from a part of the great body politic; the other also is from a part of the same body, whose claims have always been ignored, and yet who for a century extracted from the soil the rice, cotton, and sugar which the nation exported, and from which vast sums were annually realized.

It would seem that the least the Government could do would be to protect such a valuable ally, however humble or black. Let the authorities be as quick and ready, as sympathic and eager to right the wrongs of the lowest and humblest of its citizens, and let the same prompt and energetic measures characterize its action toward the remotest portion of its territory that marked the notice of the incipient lawlessness in this country town, and the problem which vexes us is well nigh solved. In this course lies a great part of the remedy for that evil, which, like "Banquo's ghost," will not down.

Just so long as justice is withheld from one man in this nation by the Government, and just so long as other men are permitted to commit acts of injustice, and so long as the Government, which we, as a people, maintain for the sole purpose of protecting us, fails to perform its duty in this respect, we shall have outbreaks, oppressions and wrongs, together with unbridled efforts to disrupt the Republic.

A QUESTION FOR THE REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE.

Article XIV. of the constitution of the General Committee of the Republican Party of this City is as follows:

"No person shall be eligible for any office, nor for delegate to the Central Committee, nor to any convention, who directly or indirectly holds any office (other than that of notary public) under Democratic authority; and all offices, the power of appointment to which is vested in any Democrat, or in any board or body a majority of whose members are Democrats, or in any board or body whose members are appointed by any Democrat, shall be considered as held under Democratic authority. All votes cast for any person holding such an office shall be null and void, and the person or persons other than such officeholder receiving the highest number of votes shall be deemed and returned as elected. Any credentials given to any person not eligible under this constitution shall be null and void."

In a former communication of mine to THE TIMES I predicted that a well-organized attempt would be made to have the above article sponged off the constitutional slate of our General or Central Committee. This article, as I said in the letter referred to was engrafted on the constitution at a time when the Republican Party of this City was utterly demoralized by the sales and deliveries made of the whole and parts of it by the corrupt leaders it then had. Every election day would find us being thrown with well-directed skill as bones at a hungry dog. Tammany never yelped at this mode of party delivery so long as the bones fell in the crib. Although the adoption of the fourteenth article did not entirely rid the party of the covert machinations of corrupt men, yet it threw down from their high pedestals men to whom we were wont to look up. The machinery became repaired, its parts became oiled, it is now in better working order. Citizens of integrity have become more united to us since this article has been in force. It would be unwise, impolitic, and inexpedient to blot it out now. You cannot place this article before an honest citizen, whether he be Democrat or Republican, but he will pronounce it conducive to party purity—and party purity means better government. God knows that this City, burdened as it is by party schemes, cries out for a better government! Shall the Republican Party deny it or obstruct the desired end? Roscoe Conkling was certainly the champion of the ideas it is now proposed to abrogate. Has he changed his opinion of Tammany Hall since 1871, or have his opponents become Republicans in 1877? The power, the influence Mr. Conkling exerts in this State cannot be denied or overestimated. He has bound to him party men, adept in all the varied schools of political strategy; but when his friends seek to open up our councils to men who are nurtured at the breast of Tammany Hall, he must certainly know that the young men of this State are not prepared to accept actions which to say the least are equivocal, as attempts made in good faith to advance the high standard of Republicanism. I have in my possession a letter from Mr. Conkling, written at a time when he was warm in the good work of party purification, wherein he says in substance that he understands the needs of the young men in the Republican Party in New-York, and he is with them heart and soul in the fight against Tammany corruption. Mr. Conkling is a partisan, but he is an earnest man, and I still believe him too good a Republican to countenance this attempt to again create a Tammany-Republican element in our local politics. Still, let us look at the facts.

Last Friday evening the Republican Association of the Twentieth Assembly District held a regular meeting, ex-Judge Ditzenhoefer presiding. Hon. William A. Darling, Hon. J. A. Emlebart, Willard Bullard, and many other warm friends of Mr. Conkling were present. The report of a certain committee was received and adopted regretting the delegates from the Twentieth Assembly District to the Central Committee to urge the repeal of article XIV. of the constitution, as before quoted. The Central Committee will meet soon, and the delegates from my district will bring the matter up, and so it will come either before the several associations of the City, or be killed. The intention is to bring it before the associations and have the article repealed quietly, and this time of the year has been chosen as the best and most opportune, because local politics are now lulled in an unsuspecting repose. The Republican Party of this City, mean less the Central Committee, is not strong enough to wipe out the idea that Republicanism can exist here, despite the threats, the curses, or cajolings of Tammany. The Republicans of the Twentieth Assembly District are not in favor of the repeal of article XIV. The report of the committee as aforesaid was accepted by a bare majority, and adopted because the members present were unaware of the true inwardness of the matter. There was no debate upon the merits. The snap judgment was complete. Why were the friends of Mr. Conkling silent? Hon. Alonzo B. Cornell lives in the Twentieth Assembly District. Is he for or against the idea of Tammany Republicanism? The students of Cornell University swear by Mr. Cornell, and believe he is too open a man to connive at low bargains such as is proposed. Shall they have cause for their faith?

Gentlemen of the Central Committee, are you for or against the proposed repeal?

Now that the Democrats are discussing once more the feasibility of delaying the final decision of the Commission or the final action of both houses upon that decision, till after March 4, it is reassuring to fall back upon the pledge of the great and good FERNANDO WOOD that the majority in the House is "ready in good faith to carry out, in all respects, the Electoral Commission law, and the result that may be reached in pursuance of it." Unless it be DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, there is no much greater man among the Democratic Congressmen than Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, and it would be hard to say which of the two has best deserved his eminence in the party. If TWEED's lawyer would only add his assurance of Democratic good faith to that of the ex-Mayor of New-York, the country would breathe freely.

The Democratic members of the Electoral Commission undertook yesterday to show that there was not a single point in Judge TRUMBULL'S wild offers of proof as to which they had independence enough to vote with the remaining Commissioners. One after another, each of the propositions of the Democratic counsel was brought up in the Commission, and a resolution submitted to receive proof regarding it. Each resolution was voted down, eight to seven. The spectacle of the seven Democratic partisans, including two Judges, clinging thus defiantly to their prejudices, will be agonizing to the World, which, above all things, is anxious for the good name of the Supreme Court.

Six Republican Senators are understood to have voted with the Democrats for the confirmation of JOHN F. SMYTHE as Insurance Superintendent. There names are HARRIS, TOBEY, VEDDER, MCCARTHY, COLEMAN, and EMERSON. The time will probably come when it will be necessary to recall this scandalous piece of political jobbery, and when the Republican Senators who have carried it through may not find it quite agreeable to shoulder the responsibility for the act. The nomination fixes the position of Gov. ROBINSON as the tool of a set of unscrupulous tricksters, and will remain as indelible a stain on his administration as HOFFMAN'S signature of the Erie Classification act did on the record of the Ring Governor. After that, Mr. ROBINSON can do very little to disappoint public expectation, since no one will be disappointed to see him act as the consistent ally of rascality and fraud. The determined stand against the confirmation taken by the majority of Republican Senators will prevent its formal announcement till Wednesday next, and, in the interval, no possible excuse should be left for the rest of the Senate to misapprehend the tone of public sentiment about this scandalous job.

We fear that our brilliant contemporary the Sun is in some danger of forgetting its character as a newspaper in its desire to earn the reward of blind partisanship. It failed to publish the deciphered Oregon telegrams received through the Associated Press on Thursday morning, and it had, apparently, not found out yesterday how infamous were the transactions to which these dispatches allude. Now that the inauguration of Gov. HAYES is all but assured, we expect to find the Sun assume once more an attitude of fair-minded and independent criticism. When President HAYES sets about the task of reforming the evils which have grown up under the Administration of President GRANT, he will need all the moral support which can be given by the honest men of both parties. The Sun will, no doubt, be as frank in giving him credit for such a work as it has been bitter and unsparing in its condemnation of the abuses which call for correction. Let it leave Senator CONKLING to take care of the legacy of "Grantism," and the World to rattle among the dry bones of the Tilden campaign. For men and newspapers of a progressive spirit there is other work to do.

Mr. SAMUEL J. TILDEN has reason to be thankful for the Statute of Limitations. He successfully adopted it as a plea in the suit brought against him by the Pottier & Stymus Manufacturing Company, and it has served him in equally good stead in the suit brought against him by HENRY H. BOODY. The great Reformer was accused of some very sharp practice in this latter action, and had he desired an opportunity of vindicating himself, would no doubt have waived the plea in question and defended the suit on its merits. But Mr. TILDEN was probably right in the assumption that he might as well take the surest method of saving his money, of which he has still some remaining, leaving his character, of which he has next to none, to take care of itself.

THE LOUISIANA DECISION.

Probably few intelligent persons, who had taken the trouble to master the essential facts in the cases of Florida and Louisiana, expected any different decision in the latter from that made in the former. The Commission, in declaring its want of power to receive evidence as to the numerous remote issues on which the Democrats made offers of proof in the Louisiana case, only follows out the principle which it laid down for its guidance in the Florida case. In both instances it made a wise, just, and faithful construction of its powers, and one for which the country has great reason to be thankful. Had it decided that the powers with which it was invested extended to the overhauling of the whole machinery of the State Governments, and possibly to reversing the declarations of the agents appointed by the State to determine who were its Electors, it would have opened the door wide to incalculable mischief. The Commission was appointed to ascertain the powers of Congress in the counting of the Electoral votes. That was the end and aim of its existence. Except for that purpose, there was no motive in creating it. The two houses differed as to the extent and as to the distribution of those powers, and since each house was under the strongest temptation to insist on its own interpretation, it was deemed impossible for them to reach any practical issue of the Presidential dispute. Therefore the Commission was set up to decide the question which the two branches of the national Legislature appeared unable to decide, the chief of which was, what can Congress do in counting the Electoral vote?

Under these circumstances its decisions must have the greatest weight, and must be morally binding on both the parties, so far as they were concerned in calling the Commission into being. If the Commission had concluded that as the representative of Congress it could go behind the evidence furnished by the regularly established instruments in the State, and could examine into the manner in which those instruments performed their duty, no future Congress would have been strong enough to reject that theory of Congressional power. No State would have been safe from ruinous meddling. There would have been no conclusion of this particular dispute, and no end to future disputes. Whenever a party having a majority in the two houses found itself defeated by a close vote in a few States, it would set to work immediately to make a case for Congressional revision. There would be no lack of devices by which this could be done. In Florida the Democrats wanted the election overturned because an inferior court, in a private suit, had held that its results were not those ascertained by the State Canvassers. In Louisiana they wanted the election reversed without even the intervention of a court, and solely because the defeated party did not construe the law in the same way as the Returning Board. With such precedents in the way of pretexts for interfering with the ascertained results of an election, it is easy to see how readily a defeated party in a close contest could confuse and break up the results of a Presidential canvass. All that would be needed to have "chaos come again" every time parties were nearly divided as to the Presidency, would be for this Commission to have held that Congress could review a State's action in appointing Electors.

Happily, we have so far escaped such a misfortune, and we are now apparently so near the end of the agitation over the Presidential election that we may fairly expect to escape it altogether. It is hardly within the bounds of probability that the Commission will find any cause for changing the result of the action of the Electoral College of Oregon. The course by which the Democrats undertook in that case to set up a rival college was so irregular, so factious, and so wanting in even the color of legality that it is difficult to imagine the Commission giving any sanction to it. Nor is it easy to see any flaw in the course of the regular college, judged by the precedents already set up. The laws of Oregon give a clear right to the acting members of the Electoral College to fill a vacancy in their number, and the Commission has already accepted similar action by the Louisiana College in the cases of LEVISEE and BREWSTER. Whether or not a vacancy arose by the ineligibility of the Elector WATTS is the only point which can claim the attention of the Commission. On that point it must be held either that a vacancy was created which the remaining Electors could and did fill, or else that the ineligibility of WATTS caused the election of CRONIN. The latter is a doctrine which cannot for a moment be held by the Commission. It is at best but a barely plausible theory, sustained by some not very closely pertinent English cases, and by a few isolated American ones, and opposed by far the greater number of important American cases. On the Oregon case, therefore, it is reasonable to expect the Commission to decide that it has no authority to reverse the decision of the majority of the Electoral College, or that, if it has such power, the decision of the college is correct.

It is not necessary to anticipate the comments of the Democrats on the Louisiana decision, which practically throws them out of court. Doubtless they will revile the Commission as partisan; but that will be of little consequence. The country will see, if the Democrats do not, that the reason why the Commission divided on party lines was that the Democrats refused to cross the party lines. We shall also, no doubt, see a good deal of blustering as to the immediate future. But that will probably die out. If it does not, it can have but one result—it must drive the decent men out of the Democratic Party, and consign the organization to hopeless ruin.

THE CROWNING DISGRACE.

Many charitably-disposed persons have been slow to believe that TILDEN'S agents attempted to corrupt Republican Electors in Florida, South Carolina, and Louisiana. The evidence in all these cases was damaging. In South Carolina it rested on the word of one witness—the Elector sought to be bought. In crimes of this sort there must be secrecy, and the Democratic banker who tried to bribe the negro Elector was not so indiscreet as to allow any witness to his negotiation except the person to whom the advance was made. In Florida, on the other hand, the most that can be proved is that Democratic agents were busily hovering about all the approaches to the Returning Board and Electors, loudly, but cautiously, talking about the amount of money that they were willing to spend to secure a vote for TILDEN. If investigation had been pushed in these cases with one-half the energy which the Democrats have displayed in their inquisitions, attempts at bribery would undoubtedly have been clearly proved. As it is, the Democratic plotters have narrowly escaped being exposed. Enough has been brought to light, however, to show what sort of tools these desperate conspirators work with. Such men as the rascals brought to the surface in the Louisiana investigation are fit companions and agents for those who attempted to buy Electoral votes wherever they were supposed to be for sale. LITTLEFIELD, MADDOX, PICKETT, MULHERIN, are fitting exponents of the present principles and practice of Democracy.

The boldness and lack of conscience displayed in the Oregon business amply justify all the suspicions which were entertained concerning the reputed attempts in other States. The persons chiefly damaged by these shameful exposures are lost if they have no ready and satisfactory explanation. Mr. KELLY is a Senator of the United States. He is presumed to be a man of honor. Nevertheless, he is shown to be the formal and deliberate indorser of a proposition to bribe an Elector. PATRICK distinctly informed PELTON that one Republican Elector "must be purchased" to act with the Democrat whom GROVER was to commission. And Hon. JAMES K. KELLY, United States Senator, as distinctly indorsed and approved this. KELLY swore before the Senate Committee that he knew nothing of any money being unlawfully used in connection with this case, yet here are dispatches signed by him, sent to him, and continually referring to him, in which money and the corrupt use of it are constantly alluded to. Unless Senator KELLY is the victim of a chain of singularly perverse circumstances, he has added perjury to attempted bribery. But it may be added that he declares that he did not know what he indorsed.

Gov. GROVER knew of the bribery, but we have the admission of one of the gang to another that he was willing to violate his oath of office without fee or reward. Possibly, it was no crime for him, while he was pretending to hear arguments on the alleged ineligibility of WATTS, to telegraph to TILDEN that he should decide in favor of the Democrats "on every point." But it was a shameful thing to do. And it now appears that the reason for the delay which occurred in the issuing of the certificates was owing to the delay in the transmission of the corruption fund. The Gramercy Park people were reluctant to risk the money demanded. When it was finally sent, it was placed here to PATRICK'S order. By that time PATRICK had left Portland on his way back. That deposit of $8,000, as was shown in the Senate investigation, was returned. It was necessary to send another telegraphic transfer, and by the time all this was done, the day for assembling the Electors had arrived. The certificates were withheld by GROVER until Tuesday, Dec. 5. The money did not come. He kept them back until Wednesday, Dec. 6, when the money at last arrived, and banker LADD rushed up to the State-house with the good news. The certificates were then issued. Yet GROVER swore that he knew of no corrupt use of money, and that he did not inform anybody in advance of what his decision in the electoral contest would be. As a matter of fact, he withheld the certificates until the corruption fund was in hand, and he telegraphed his decision to TILDEN five days before he announced it in Oregon.

TILDEN has not yet been put on the stand. He at least has had no opportunity to perjure himself. But these dispatches show that he was in active daily correspondence with bribers and conspirators. If he is not an idiot — and Mr. TILDEN'S acuteness has never been impugned—he knew precisely what was going on. The welcome news of GROVER'S intention to decide against the Republicans was sent to him in the cipher of the conspirators. All the other infamous messages relating to the proposed purchase of an Elector, and urging the immediate transfer of money, were sent to his house, directed to his nephew and constant companion. It makes no difference whether TILDEN or TILDEN'S nephew received these dispatches and answered them. For all practical purposes they were TILDEN'S own private business. The plotters in Oregon knew that they were treating with him; and GROVER, when he had something "important and secret" to say, sent it to TILDEN'S own personal address. Nobody wants to hear what Senator KERNAN thinks about Gov. TILDEN'S complicity in this frightful business. It is time to hear from Gov. TILDEN.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

"We are a nation of bankrupts," said a prominent member of the Toronto Board of Trade, the other day, referring to the record of failures recently published by one of our mercantile agencies. The statement is much too sweeping, so far as the general population of Canada are concerned. But there can be no doubt that it is almost literally true, judging of it by the large percentage of failures among the trading and manufacturing classes, and by the depression and embarrassment from which they suffer. Apart from the prevalence of bankruptcies, one of the effects of this condition of affairs is seen in the falling off in the Customs revenue. For the first time since the formation of the Confederation there is a deficit in the Treasury; it amounts nearly to two millions, and the prostration of commerce is the only assigned cause. The same circumstance explains the renewed earnestness of the movement in favor of a reciprocity treaty with the United States. As long as the Provinces were reasonably prosperous reciprocity was rarely heard of. The politicians were in the habit of adducing the prosperity as proof that the Dominion could get on very well under the existing trade relations with this country. Without pausing to consider the peculiar nature of the influences that were at work, they acted on the presumption that reciprocity might be dispensed with. The first pinch of hard times opened their eyes to the mistake. And having discovered that business interests grow worse instead of better, and that they are really in a much more unsound condition than the business of the United States, they recognize the supreme importance of some arrangement that shall secure to their producers freer access to the American markets, and at the same time attract to themselves American capital and enterprise.

The desire freely expressed by the Canadians is one which we must naturally reciprocate. We have plenty of disciples of the Chinese philosophy, who would convert the St. Lawrence and the chain of lakes into an impassable barrier to Canadian trade. They are not unwilling to cultivate Canadian custom for their wares, but they would doggedly exclude nearly all that our northern neighbors have to sell. The influence of this class of monopolists is happily not great. The common sense of the country acknowledges the expediency of maintaining the closest and most cordial trade relations with a people akin to ourselves, and whose industrial energy and growth are ordinarily quite equal to our own. They can supply advantageously many commodities of which this country stands in constant need, and they furnish a market of which our manufacturers would gladly avail themselves. The freest possible interchange is desirable for both. As an abstract question, therefore, there should be little difficulty in framing a system of reciprocity. It is not a question that awakens a very lively interest on this side of the border, outside the circles immediately concerned, simply because its merits are imperfectly understood. And the interest it does excite never reaches a practical point, because the Canadians, however eager in their advocacy of reciprocity, are not able to acquiesce in conditions that are essential to the equity and thoroughness of the arrangement.

The only solid ground for a reciprocity treaty is absolute freedom of trade as between the two countries. It involves concessions by each which are withheld from others. Any arrangement which the United States may make with Canada presupposes an exceptional relief from the burdens of the present tariff; just as it implies, on the part of Canada, some exceptional abrogation of duties for the benefit of Americans. On this basis the argument for reciprocity is unanswerable; on any other, it is not worth listening to. The misfortune for Canada is that, as a dependency of Great Britain, it is not allowed to make the United States the most favored nation in commercial matters. The terms it offers to American manufacturers it must also offer to British manufacturers, and the exigencies of its own revenue system are scarcely less imperative than the obligations arising out of its allegiance to the parent country. It is evident, then, that Canada is not in a condition to resume negotiations for reciprocity in the only manner that could promise a hope of success. Fettered as the Canadians are by their connection with Great Britain, their first object should be the conclusion of some understanding with the imperial power that shall leave them at liberty to consult their own interests in trade matters. Let this liberty be obtained, and a genuine reciprocity treaty will soon follow. As things now are, all talk about it must end in disappointment.

CONTRACT LABOR IN THE PRISONS.

One of the grievances of the "Labor Association" which met recently in Albany had more character than many of their complaints—and that was the resolution against the mode in which contract labor is carried on in the prisons of this State. When a body of the representatives of the laboring class can find no worse grievance than a proposition to give tax-payers a control over the expenditure of public moneys, they show they have not the first correct idea of the real burdens which rest upon labor, for in this very City the weight which especially lies upon the working classes is the heavy taxation (appearing in rent) resting upon the employers of labor. This taxation arises mainly from the waste of the public property by those whose constituents have little or no property. For a popular leader to uphold this system, is simply to attempt to continue the present depression of productive interests and stagnation of business. But the matter of prison labor, though often exaggerated as an evil by the leaders of working men, is quite another thing. If any of our readers will imagine themselves, in these hard times, just keeping their families above water by unremitting hard work at some peculiar branch of industry—say the manufacture of cuffs and collars—where only a limited amount of labor could be employed, and then suddenly finding all their business cut off, and their children exposed to starvation by a contract made at lower rates with a gang of vagabonds, thieves, and murderers, through an employer who could drive them out of the field, they will understand the feelings of the artisans and laborers about prison contracts. There is now before the Legislature a bill absolutely forbidding the manufacture of cuffs and collars in any prison of the State, and no doubt there will soon be other bills forbidding other branches of manufacture in these institutions.

The matter is a delicate one, and requires careful handling. Our prisons cost us last year some $500,000 over their earnings, and this sum fell ultimately in taxes on the laboring classes. Moreover, a prison without labor will only educate a fresh class of thieves and offenders against person and property. But there are unquestionably serious moral objections to the contract system in prisons. A successful contractor soon comes to govern the penitentiary; everything yields to his business; the offenders become mere implements for him to make his profits with. The moral atmosphere which should characterize the place gives way to the bustle of money-making for certain officials. Some of the worst frauds and abuses disclosed by the recent State Prison Commission had to do with contractors and prison officers. It is evident that such bargains offer endless temptations to corruption and dishonesty.

And yet, on the other hand, not every prison officer or superintendent has business ability sufficient to carry on a manufacture within the prison walls successfully. The most conspicuous instance of successful prison management without contracts is that of the Allegheny County Prison and Work-house, near Pittsburg, under Mr. CORDIER. This prison, till within the past year, has not only supported itself, (and with prisoners on short terms,) but has turned over considerable sums to the county each year. But this is entirely owing to the business skill of the Superintendent. In our own State it is, perhaps, unfortunate that the Superintendent of its prisons has been the most successful operator of contracts in the Union. Yet we are confident that Mr. PILLSBURY will consider in his plans for the various penitentiaries the just grievances of the working classes, and the objections to the contract system. The best plan would probably be to select such branches of industry as would compete the least with important industrial interests, and then rigidly prevent the selling price of the articles being put below the market price. Wherever a Superintendent had a marked business talent, he could be intrusted to carry on his own industry; but in all cases, whether under contract or without, the prisoners should be allowed a fixed share in the earnings, and the privilege of extra pay for extra labor. It is for the interest of the State that each convict should continue to partly support his family or should have money to keep himself from poverty and temptation when he is discharged. Moreover, the most fruitful cause of crime is the want of habit of continuous labor. Industry under wages, however small, creates this. Even if industrial work in prisons carried no profit, it would repay the State to continue it. Mr. PILLSBURY also should see to it that in no prison does the contractor rule. The first thing in the prison is discipline, then reform. Business is needful, but order and moral influences come first. We doubt, however, if the Legislature can help the difficulty much by legislation. Common sense, honesty, and a broad view of the case with the Superintendent, are the best reliance.

WOMEN IN THE PULPIT.

The dismissal of Rev. Miss PHŒBE HANAFORD by her congregation is a matter of general notoriety. In her case the experiment of a female Pastor has proved a failure. So far as can be learned the only charge brought against Miss HANAFORD was the charge that she was not a man. This she attempted neither to palliate nor deny, and she was therefore deprived of her pastorate in order that her place might be filled by a man.

Those enthusiastic reformers who advocate the admission of women to the ministry have uniformly looked at only one side of the matter. They insist that inasmuch as a woman can write and deliver a sermon at least as well as a majority of male ministers, there can be no valid argument against a female ministry. They fail, however, to perceive the inevitable effect which female Pastors must have upon their congregations. If the order of nature is reversed in the pulpit, it will also be reversed in the congregation. Nature will maintain the just balance of the sexes in ecclesiastical affairs, and she will not permit a pretty woman to be substituted for an ascetic clergyman without striving to produce corresponding changes among the flock.

When the experiment was first tried in a rural New-England town some twenty years ago, it was clamorously asserted that it had brilliantly succeeded. In a short time, however, acute observers noticed that the young men of the congregation were undergoing a curious change. They became abnormally regular in their attendance at meeting, and although they showed a stern determination to occupy the front seats, they also manifested a winning modesty of manner previously unknown in the history of their sex. They would sit with upturned eyes gazing at their Pastor and drinking in her eloquence with every token of earnest admiration. Sometimes they would be affected to tears, and would hide their eyes with perfumed handkerchiefs. In casual conversation they always mentioned the minister as "our dear Pastor," and constantly quoted her as authority upon all questions of morals and manners. A little later and the price of worsted began to rise. The cause of this was soon known. Every one of the thirty-four young men were engaged in working slippers for their Pastor. As this was a duty to which they were unaccustomed, they naturally spoiled an immense quantity of worsted, and mislaid or broke innumerable needles. Before the Pastor had been six months in the pulpit she had received thirty-four pairs of slippers, nine-tenths of which were embroidered with a cross, while the remainder bore, in letters of white floss-silk, the legend, "Bless my Pastor."

After the slippers should have come, in regular ecclesiastical order, the usual smoking caps, but it was obvious that the latter would have been grossly inappropriate gifts to a female Pastor. Much ingenuity was displayed in providing substitutes. One young man knit out of scarlet worsted a "cloud" for the pastoral head, and another braided with his own hands a magnificent "switch" of back hair, the material for which he purchased from a professional hair-dresser. The majority of the young men, however, expressed their pious devotion in embroidered handkerchiefs and lace collars, although it is rumored that an ill-advised widower, who was perhaps the most outspoken of the Pastor's admirers, sent her a—that is to say, a garment made by his own hands out of the best quality of steel and modeled upon one formerly the property of his deceased wife. It is further asserted that his present was promptly returned to him, and that he therefore left town in a depressed state of mind, carrying his blighted hoops with him.

As the Pastor did not wear a gown or surplice, the young men, after they had overwhelmed her with slippers and handkerchiefs, were at a loss what to do next. They finally hit upon the happy thought of making a magnificent overskirt of red cashmere, embroidered with blue, and ornamented with alternate yellow silk dogs and green silk horse-shoes in the angle of each scallop. One of the young men surreptitiously helped himself to a pattern from his sister's wardrobe, and produced it, under a strict vow of secrecy, to his admiring associates at their next Dorcas tea-party. Great difficulty was experienced in cutting out the garment, but by carefully ripping the pattern apart, and making a fac simile of each piece, the new overskirt was made ready for sewing. The unconquerable tendency of some of the young men to sew exclusively with white cotton led to frequent disputes and delays; but at last the garment was accurately sewed together with black silk. Determined to improve upon the original pattern, they put half a dozen pockets in the skirt, and attached a buckle and strap to the waistband, together with six metal suspender-buttons. Then the garment, nicely perfumed and neatly folded, was sent to the parsonage, with a note written in a fine Italian hand, and breathing the earnest affection of thirty-four pious and innocent hearts.

What was the surprise of those young men to learn on the following Sunday that the Pastor would no longer conduct the Bible-class of which they were the sole members. They called upon her to beg a few moments' conversation upon the true meaning of EZEKIEL'S wheels, but were told that the Pastor was busy, and that she begged to refer them to Deacon Smith. They felt that something was wrong, but they could not imagine what the matter really was. In the course of the next fortnight, however, the Pastor suddenly brought home a husband from some distant town, who, being of an excitable and withal worldly nature, soon allowed it to become known that he felt perfect confidence in his ability to thrash the irreverent rascals who had insulted his wife by sending her a preposterous red p—tt—t.

After that, the young men lost all interest in religious things, and returned with great unanimity to their wallowing at the billiard-table, and it was generally felt that the experiment of a female Pastor had not succeeded. But the fault was not in the Pastor's sermon, nor in any lack of piety or discretion on her part. The failure of the experiment was the natural result of the attempt to reverse the proper sex of the pulpit. As soon as the female minister usurped manly functions, the young men of her flock developed feminine tendencies. Such will, doubtless, be the inevitable consequence of the presence of women in the pulpit, and it is surprising that no reformer can perceive what a powerful argument against a female ministry this state of things constitutes.

UNION SOLDIERS IN THE SOUTH.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The special committee of the House to investigate the employment of United States troops in the South during the late election, Representative Wood, Chairman, met this morning at 11 o'clock. Gov. M. L. Stearns, of Florida, testified that troops were regularly stationed at Pensacola, St. Augustine, and Key West, during election times; detachments of troops were stationed at other points during the month of November; about the 13th of November 200 soldiers came to Tallahassee from Atlanta under command of Gen. Ruger, on account of the political excitement at that time; there were demonstration of violence, such as tearing up the railroad track, cutting wires, and burning bridges; could not say that organized bands did it, but it looked like a concerted action; the acts were done secretly at night; the extra troops were sent to Florida by the Secretary of War; witness did not make any formal requisition for troops, but did send a dispatch to Secretary Chandler at New-York mentioning the advisability of having troops in Florida; had previously received a dispatch from Secretary Chandler, but it had no relation to troops; leading men had asked him to make a requisition for troops; the troops took no action until inauguration day, when they were stationed on the Capitol grounds at Gov. Drew's request; there was no time when witness could not quell any disturbance with his own Militia, and he gave no intimation to the authorities here to the contrary.

The sub-committee investigating the garrisoning of Petersburg, Va., by United States troops on or about Nov. 7, 1876, continued its labors to-day and examined J. H. Van Anken, editor of a Republican newspaper in Peterabrg, Va., who stated that he saw at the election in 1875 a gang of Baltimore "roughs" reconnoitring around the polls. The election resulted in a Democratic victory, which was brought about by the action of partisan judges. He saw no acts of personal violence himself. Witness related sundry acts of violence which took place at the municipal election in May, 1876, but acknowledged that he, in person, saw none of them committed. Prior to the election in last November, a large number of both Republicans and Democrats were apprehensive of a disturbance on election day, and thought troops necessary to secure a fair election. The election was a quiet and peaceable one, owing to the fact that the authority of the United States was exerted; did not know of anyone who was prevented by intimidation either from speaking in public or from voting in any of these elections; it was not so much the presence of the 24 infantrymen and two officers that controlled the election, but the power that was behind them.

AN AMERICAN'S JEALOUSY.

HAVANA, Feb. 10.—On Wednesday, the 7th inst., at midnight, Mr. John M. Burns, a contractor for machinery, well known in the United States, entered the sleeping-room of Mr. James Henry Rush, of Boston, and awakening him began a quarrel about Rush's attentions to an elderly lady, who keeps the boarding-house where they both reside. Burns accusing Rush of attempting to supplant him in the lady's affections. Burns, who says he was deeply intoxicated, shot Rush in the breast, causing a very dangerous wound, and though the ball has been extracted he lies in a precarious condition. Rush, who is highly esteemed by his acquaintences, is the sole support of an aged mother and two sisters in Boston. Burns has hitherto borne the reputation of a quiet, honorable man. He is confined in jail.

A BANK CASHIER ARRESTED.

FISHKILL, Feb. 16.—Alexander Barlow, the alleged defaulting Cashier of the Fishkill Bank, was arrested last night by a United States Marshal, and his bail fixed at $50,000, which he has secured.

ALBANY.

AN INSURANCE DEBATE.

MR. PURDY'S SPEECH ON HIS RESOLUTIONS—AN ABLE EFFORT—THE MATTER TO BE FURTHER CONSIDERED—BUSINESS OF HOUSE AND SENATE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Feb. 16, 1877.

The Assembly was treated to a great, but agreeable surprise this morning, in a speech of much force, pith, and real eloquence from Mr. Purdy. Only business of a routine character had been transacted until within a few minutes of 1 o'clock, when the order of resolutions was reached. Westchester being called, Mr. Purdy rose and called up the resolutions offered by him some time ago, calling for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the subject of life insurance, and report to the House by bill or otherwise. When he began to speak on these resolutions, the House, from much experience in this regard, paid little attention to him; but in a few minutes it became apparent that at last Mr. Purdy had something to say which was worth listening to; and from that moment until he resumed his seat, he held the House attentive and sympathetic, though he spoke for nearly three-quarters of an hour. He had prepared his speech in the form of distinct charges of wrong-doing, inefficiency, and fraud against insurance companies; each of these he read from his notes, and then went on to illustrate and prove his charges, speaking extemporaneously. He advanced, it is true, very little that was new to those who are at all familiar with the system of life insurance; but the force and energy with which the speaker presented his facts made a deep impression on his audience. He went over the whole ground of the business of securing the surrender of policies, showed the gross injustice of allowing the companies to pocket all the money which a man may have paid year after year, and then, by poverty, be unable to continue his payments; the downright fraud in the matter of companies contesting the liability to pay a policy after a man's death on the ground that he had made some misrepresentation as to his physical condition ten or fifteen years before; then went to the subject of the abuses in the management of the companies, the enormous salaries, percentages, and fees paid to the officers of these companies; the quartering of the President's and chief officers' families and relatives on the companies they preside over; the method in which the life companies and the fire companies work into each other's hands in the matter of lending on mortgages; the practice of one insolvent company borrowing moneys and bonds of another company to present a show of solvency to the State Examiner; the methods by which proxies were forced by the hundred from embarrassed policy holders to be used by the chief officers of the concern in the perpetuation of their power; the business of making bogus mortgages, and the enormous amount of mortgages held by some companies on city property, which, in the case of a fire such as they had in Boston or Chicago, would be rendered almost valueless; and he wound up with an eloquent peroration on the necessity of extending legal protection to the hundreds of thousands of policy-holders who were now at the mercy of a few controlling Presidents and Directors of insurance companies. As respected the appointment of a special committee, Mr. Purdy said that the House had selected as its presiding officer a gentleman of private and public character so pure that every one would have entire confidence in the appointments he would make; but it the House thought that its standing Committee on Insurance could do this work in addition to its other duties, it might be left to that committee. In that case, the committee should be clothed with power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and examine witnesses, so that it might be enabled to go to the bottom of the matter.

Mr. Alvord acknowledged the eloquence and force with which Mr. Purdy had presented his views; but said that from first to last his speech showed the utter impossibility of any special committee being able to prosecute such an investigation as was proposed, within the time the committee would have to act. Thirty days would not be sufficient to thoroughly examine the affairs of one large company alone. What was wanted was the framing of a bill to correct defects in the present law, to provide safeguards to policy-holders, to check the evils and abuses which now prevailed in the insurance business. A committee could draw up such a bill as this within 30 days, but it could not go into the business of investigating insurance corporations. He (Mr. Alvord) would go as far as the gentleman from Westchester in this way, and with that gentleman's consent would offer a resolution to that effect.

Mr. Purdy was understood to say that the matter rested with the House. For his part he only desired that the best and most practicable course in the interests of policy-holders should be adopted.

Mr. Graham, Chairman of the Insurance Committee, made a few remarks, indicating the desire of himself and his associates to treat so important a subject with care and deliberation. He thought that the House was at the moment too much under the influence of the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Westchester to act as calmly as the subject demanded.

It was then urged that the further consideration of the resolutions should be postponed until to-morrow morning. It is hardly probable that a special committee will be appointed, at least to go into the business of investigation. There is a strong prejudice against this among the members, but it is not unlikely that the Insurance Committee will be appointed as a special committee, with the requisite powers to draw up a bill as Mr. Alvord suggested.

Mr. Husted asserts most emphatically, and desires it stated, that he had no knowledge, nor had heard the slightest intimation of the Governor's intention to nominate Mr. John F. Smythe for Insurance Superintendent, until last Wednesday morning. At that time a member of the House came over to his (Mr. Husted's) seat, and referred to the coming nomination, supposing that Mr. Husted was aware of it. Mr. Husted declares with emphasis that this was the first intimation he had of the matter. It was an entire surprise, and not altogether a pleasant one to him.

The House this morning adopted a resolution to adjourn from next Wednesday to the following Tuesday, and also to hold evening sessions on Tuesdays and Thursdays after the 1st of March. The House will continue at work as usual until next Wednesday. The Sub committee of the Whole, or "Grinding Committee," will be put to work in a few days to work off the small local bills from the calendar.

BUSINESS IN THE SENATE.

The Senate Committee on Public Health reported favorably Mr. Wagstaff's bill authorizing Boards of Health of incorporated cities to apply to the health authorities of adjacent towns or counties for the abatement of nuisances which injuriously affect the health of their municipalities, and in case of refusal to apply to the Supreme Court of the judicial district in which the nuisance may be located for investigation and redress. This is a very necessary and perfectly fair bill, but the Senators representing Kings County, who appear to take delight in smiting the orders of the Greenpoint nuisance, took the alarm, and Senator Jacobs moved to recommit the bill to the Judiciary Committee under the plea that some great constitutional question was involved. His colleague, Kennaday, was also very much alarmed for the safety of the great constitutional principles, and backed up the motion to recommit. Mr. Wagstaff and Mr. Gerard opposed the motion, and characterized it as a filibustering attempt to delay the bill with a view to kill it. Gerard denied that there was, or could be, any legal or constitutional objections to the bill. It was not a local but a general bill, applying to all the municipalities in the State, and was intended solely to protect the public health. Nevertheless, the Senate voted to reconsider, and the stink-pots of Greenpoint won the first victory.

On motion, the Senate reconsidered the vote by which it refused to concur in the Assembly amendment to the Prison Commission bill prohibiting the Superintendent from making any appointments on political grounds. Senators Schoonmaker, Bradley, and Kennaday, Democrats, and Senator Cole, Republican, opposed the Assembly amendment as useless, impracticable, and foolish, but in view of the fact that the Assembly was likely to insist on it, and thus delay the passage of the bill, a majority of the Senate voted to concur, and the bill was immediately sent to the Governor for his signature, and the name of Mr. Pillsbury, of the Albany Penitentiary, was returned as the nominee of the Governor for the First Superintendent of State Prisons under the bill. The Senate soon after went into Executive Session, where the nomination was confirmed without opposition.

Among the new bills introduced in the Senate were two by Mr. Woodin relating to the City of New-York—one embracing all municipalities in the State, providing for a general reduction of 10 per cent. on salaries.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE.

THE NOMINATION OF JOHN F. SMYTHE—HE IS CONFIRMED BUT NOT COMMISSIONED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 16.—Another executive session of the Senate was held to-day, pursuant to the understanding had at the caucus in Senator Harris' residence last evening. The interchange of opinion at the caucus had disclosed the fact that there were more than enough Republican Senators ready to vote with the Democrats to confirm the nomination of Postmaster Smythe as Superintendent of Insurance to secure his confirmation, and that it would be useless to try to prevent it. The instructions sent from Washington by Senator Conkling, combined with the more solid arguments said to have been brought to bear by the "Insurance Ring," placed the confirmation beyond a doubt, and it was apparent this morning that all efforts on the part of the opponents of the nomination to prevent or even to delay the confirmation would be fruitless. Senators Woodin, Robertson, and others exhausted all their arguments and appeals at the caucus last evening, but they found that the thing had been "fixed," and that no considerations of decency, or respect for public opinion, or regard for the rights of swindled policy-holders would avail to thwart the scheme of the "Insurance Ring," headed by Lucius Robinson, to install one of its creatures in the office of Insurance Superintendent. The first name that was taken up in executive session was that of Mr. Pillsbury, for Superintendent of State Prisons, which was confirmed without opposition. The Committee on Insurance then reported favorably the name of John F. Smythe for State Superintendent of Insurance. The Canal Committee, to whom was referred the nomination of Judge Sturges, of Otsego, for Canal Appraiser, being called on to report refused to make a report. A motion was then made to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the nomination, and refer it to the Senate. This was a test vote, and was carried by a clear majority, three Republicans, Messrs. Sprague, Moore, and Wagner, being absent, and two or three others voting with the Democrats. A motion was then made that the nomination of Smythe be confirmed, which was carried, as was also a subsequent motion to confirm Sturges. The vote was taken viva voce in both cases, and without calling the roll; but those Republican Senators understood to have been in favor of Smythe's confirmation are Hafris, Tobey, Vedder, McCarty, Coleman, and Emerson. The Democrats are understood to have been unanimous in favor of the confirmation; as all events they make no opposition to it, though Senator Bixby submitted a remonstrance, signed by a large number of policy-holders in the "Continental," "Security," and "National Life" Companies, against any change in the Superintendent of the Insurance Department at the present time. Messrs. Bixby and Hammond voted with some of the Republicans to postpone action till next week. The only thing left for the opponents of this corrupt political trade to do was to avail themselves of that provision of the Senate rules which prohibits the confirmation of any nominee from being transmitted to the Governor until the next regular executive session after the confirmation is made, provided any one objects. The object of the rule is to enable the Senate to avail themselves of any disclosures that may be made relative to the character of the nominee, or the circumstances of his nomination, so that they may reconsider their action if good reasons are found for so doing. It is seldom that this rule is enforced; indeed, this is said to be the first time any Senator has availed himself of it for years; but the extraordinary features of this nomination for Insurance Superintendent, the indecent haste with which the action of the Senate upon it was urged, and the suspicious character of the men and the circumstances surrounding it, fully warranted the course adopted. Mr. Woodin insisted upon his rights under the rule, and peremptorily refused to give his consent that the nomination either of Smythe or of Sturges should be transmitted to the Governor until the next regular executive session. This cannot be held till Wednesday of next week. It is hoped that, within this time, the people will express their indignation at this corrupt bargain and sale of one of the most important offices in the State, in a way that will force every decent man in the Senate to reconsider his action.

NEW-YORK CITY LEGISLATION.

JOINT MEETING OF THE COMMITTEE ON CITIES CALLED FOR NEXT TUESDAY AFTERNOON — OFFICIALS INVITED TO BE PRESENT—RADICAL CHANGES PROPOSED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 16.—The joint meeting of the Committee on Cities of the Assembly and Senate, to consider New-York legislation, is called for Tuesday afternoon next. Senator Woodin is Chairman and Mr. Fish Secretary. Correspondence has already begun in preparation for the meeting. A number of officials and gentlemen from New-York have been invited to attend, including Mayor Ely, Controller Kelly, Corporation Counsel Whitney, Police Commissioner Smith, Commissioner Campbell, Mr. Green, Mr. D. B. Eaton, Mr. John H. Strahan, and Mr. Rush Hawkins. There is a growing feeling here that the outcome of the conference will be some very radical measures in relation to city government, one of them being the reducing of all the commissions to single heads, the reduction of salaries to apply to the new men appointed. The meeting will be held in the Senate chamber.

AMUSEMENTS.

MME. ESSIPOFF'S CONCERTS.

Mme. Essipoff played at Steinway Hall, yesterday evening, the programme she interpreted including excerpts from Bach's suite in D major, Liszt's Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 2, a "song without words" and a scherzo by Mendelssohn, a waltz by Henselt, and Weber's "Perpetual Motion" rondo. The delicious quality of the pianist's tone was most to be admired in the Mendelssohnian selections, and the waltz by Henselt was exquisitely rendered, both as to color and rhythm. The Rhapsodie Hongroise was just a trifle less effective than the tenth number of the series as given by the same artist, for Mme. Essipoff's delivery is not of the thunderous kind required to endow so wild and fanciful a composition with its fullest impressiveness. Nor could we accept the lady's performance of the "Perpetuum Mobile" as fitted to do justice to that curious piece. Mme. Essipoff interpreted it with marvelous brilliancy, but at such a pace that some passages of it lost all shape; it was a clear case, so to speak, of playing against time. M. Vivien contributed several violin solos to the programme; he doubled, in fact, the task originally assigned him, on account of the absence, through indisposition, of Mlle. Palma.

GENERAL MENTION.

The New-York Aquarium still invites inspection.

Mr. Heller's Wonder Theatre can be visited twice to-day.

"La Péricholе" will be sung at the Eagle Theatre this afternoon.

Mme. Essipoff is to give a matinée concert to-day at Steinway Hall.

"Wild Oats" will be the attraction at to-day's matinée at Wallack's Theatre.

"Fifth Avenue" will be acted afternoon and evening, to-day, at Booth's Theatre.

"Around the World in Eighty Days" is to be matinée attraction at Niblo's, to-day.

"Our Boarding House" is to have two representations at the Park Theatre to-day.

A matinée representation of "Lemons" may be attended at the Fifth Avenue Theatre to-day.

A matinée representation of "The Star of the North" may be enjoyed, with Miss Kellogg as Catterina, at the Academy of Music to-day.

The general rehearsal, preparatory to this evening's Philharmonic concert, occurred at the Academy yesterday. A detailed reference to the programme—one of considerable interest in point of novelty—is withheld, as usual, until after the concert.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE RUSSIAN MEMORANDUM.

WAR THOUGHT TO BE NEEDLESS — THE POWERS AND GORTSCHAKOFF'S CIRCULAR—ENGLAND'S POSITION NOT YET ANNOUNCED.

LONDON, Feb. 16.—A Vienna correspondent says it is the opinion of persons at St. Petersburg, who agree with the Czar, that war is needless, because the fall of Midhat Pasha marks the commencement of a state of anarchy, which will eventually compel Europe to interfere. It is said that Gen. Ignatieff, who has arrived at St. Petersburg and conferred with the Czar and Prince Gortscakoff, supports this view. The idea among the peace party seems to be that the powers, in answering the Russian circular, might enable Russia to withdraw and await the result of the Turkish efforts at reform by publicly recognizing the sacrifices which she has made on behalf of the Eastern Christians.

A dispatch from Berlin says: "It is stated that negotiations between the powers about answering Prince Gortschakoff's circular are concluded. It is expected that the replies will be sent next week. The powers have agreed that the answers shall not be identical, but similar in sense. They will decline to participate in any measures of coercion against the Porte, and also decline constituting Russia their mandatory; but some of them appear to have intimated their willingness to observe a benevolent neutrality as long as Russia fulfills her assurance to pursue no selfish ends; to leave the territorial arrangements of the Balkan peninsula unchanged, and the balance of power in Europe unimpaired."

In the House of Commons this afternoon, Hon. Robert Bourke, Under Secretary for the Foreign Department, in reply to a question by Sir Charles Dilke, Bart., (Radical) member for Chelsea, said the Government intends answering Prince Gortschakoff's circular, but the time of answering depends upon the course of events. The effect of the change of Government at Constantinople, and the results of the negotiations between the Porte and Servia and Montenegro, must be awaited. It is also desirable, before expressing our views, to know those of the other powers.

THE DEBATE IN PARLIAMENT.

TREATY ENGAGEMENTS—A DECLARATION BY THE SECRETARY OF WAR—MR. GLADSTONE'S ARGUMENT—HIS DEMAND OF THE GOVERNMENT.

LONDON, Feb. 16.—In the House of Commons this afternoon, Mr. Gladstone asked the Government's opinion regarding treaty engagements. Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Secretary of State for War, replied that the Government did not consider itself free from the obligations of the treaties of 1856 and 1871. He could not agree that Turkey be left in the cold, yet saddled with all the obligations of those treaties. If Turkey was bound by them, he openly, loudly, and peremptorily declared the rest of Europe must also be bound by them. We do not at present, he said, intend to use material coercive measures against Turkey, nor draw the sword for her.

Mr. Gladstone cited the dispatch of Lord Derby to Sir Henry Elliott, dated Sept. 5, 1876, in which the former declared that English sympathy was completely alienated from Turkey by the atrocities committed, and her Majesty's Government, even in the event of Russian attack, would find it practically impossible to protect Turkey. War between Russia and Turkey would thus place England in a humiliating position, as it would bring her sympathies into direct opposition to her treaty engagements. He argued that England's treaty engagements did not bind her to support Turkey in any circumstances. He particularly urged that the guaranteeing powers were completely freed from their obligations, if Turkey on her part had not fulfilled the expectations of reform which she held out at the time the treaty was signed. He wished to know whether the Government now considered themselves absolved from the obligations which Lord Derby had asserted were binding upon them in his September dispatch.

Mr. Gathorne Hardy, after replying that the Government did not consider themselves free from the obligations of the treaties of 1856 and 1871, said he was surprised that Mr. Gladstone had not complained of misgovernment in Turkey when the Treaty of Paris was revised in 1871, and he had no right to say the present Cabinet ought to fulfill obligations which his Cabinet neglected in 1871. Mr. Hardy demonstrated that none of the contracting powers had a right under the treaty to act without consulting the others. He wanted to know whether the bad conduct of a party to the treaty toward its own subjects was sufficient cause for excluding it from European advantages, and for excluding Europe from the advantages of the treaty. It this was answered in the affirmative, Turkey was entitled to be freed from her engagements. As to the question whether England was bound under the treaty to go to war for Turkey, he would say no. The basis of the conference was the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire. Having with the other powers, adhered to that principle at the conference, the Government was bound to support it in the sense in which those words were employed. It would be entirely unjustifiable action to draw the sword to constrain Turkey. It ought to make us blush with shame for we should thereby violate promises and treaties. Mr. Hardy refused to enter upon any engagement relative to the future. He hoped that the moral pressure of England and the other powers would not be without result. England was not obliged to make war, but she was obliged to maintain treaties.

An animated debate followed.

Mr. Chapin, Conservative, declared that Mr. Gladstone, as an honorable man, should withdraw his charges against the Government, or test their truth by a definite motion.

Mr. Gladstone complained bitterly of having for the first time in his life been accused of disinclination to meet his opponents fairly, but he declined to reveal his plans.

Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, urged that the Opposition were bound either to challenge the Government's conduct or admit that their charges had been made in ignorance.

The Marquis of Hartington, without absolutely promising to introduce such motion, would not admit that the Liberal accusations were made under a false impression. If they refrained from challenging the Government policy it was because that policy had undergone a change. The debate on the subject was adjourned until Friday next.

TURKEY AND THE PROVINCES.

THE FRONTIER QUESTION—REPORT THAT MIDHAT PASHA IS TO BE RECALLED—WAR PREPARATIONS GOING ON IN RUSSIA.

VIENNA, Feb. 16.—A special dispatch from Belgrade to the Political Correspondence, reports that M. Ristics has been instructed to draw up a definite settlement of the frontier question during his stay in Constantinople. Servia claims rectification of her frontiers on the Drina, Timok, and Ioar Rivers.

LONDON, Feb. 16.—Midhat Pasha has arrived at Naples. The Italie announces that he there received an important communication from the Sultan. The Italie also says it appears that Midhat Pasha will be recalled to Constantinople in consequence of Englend's advice, but it is not known whether he will be reappointed Grand Vizier.

LONDON, Feb. 17.—A dispatch from Constantinople says Montenegro has asked for two months extension of the armstice to afford time for the consideration of her claims. It is not probable that Turkey will grant the request. A Vienna correspondent reports that the Central Society at St. Petersburg for assisting the wounded has notified its branch establishments that the Czar permits the immediate commencement of the collection of money and materials. All the Russian nunneries have received orders to prepare to send delegations of nurses to the Pruth.

A dispatch from Belgrade says a rumor is current that the Servian deputation has halted in its journey on account of disturbances in Constantinople. A Berlin correspondent reports that the garrison of Constantinople is being reinforced by Levantine regiments which are supposed to be ignorant of recent events.

A special from Berlin says a coup d'état is daily expected at Constantinople. Steamers are anchored before the Palace ready to aid the Sultan's escape. In well-informed circles in St. Petersburg it is stated that Prince Gortschakoff has yielded to the Czar's request, and will retain office until May, at which time he is firmly resolved to retire. A Vienna dispatch says fresh difficulties are continually arising in the Montenegrin negotiations. The Turks think by negotiating on neutral territory they would tacitly recognize the independence of Montenegro. The Montenegrins think their consent to negotiate on Turkish territory might be construed as an admission of Turkish sovereignty. Montenegro has also now received her demand for the port of Spitza to which she has not much chance of the Turks ascending.

A Belgrade dispatch says it is not improbable that the negotiations for the convocation of the Skuptschina, are only pretexts to obtain a postponement of the commencement of hostilities on the expiration of the armistice, the Pan-Slavic societies desiring delay so as to leave full opportunity for the development of the discordant elements of Constantinople, which they expect will weaken Turkey by internal convulsions.

A letter to the Cologne Gazette from Rustchuk says 84 cannon have reached the Turkish Army at Varna. The Russian Telegraphic Agency announces that Russia's attitude is unchanged. Neither the Golos, which affirms peace, nor the other journals, which affirm war, represent the ideas of the Government. The Porte having refused the recommendations of the powers, a new understanding must be established. Russia awaits the replies of the powers in order to shape her conduct, either by that understanding, or by her sole interests. A Vienna dispatch mentions reports representing that a struggle between the palace, and the popular parties is proceeding in Constantinople, which, if the popular party is successful, will result in Midhat Pasha's recall, rumor of an approach to which are already rife.

FOREIGN BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 16.—The circular of the Liverpool Cotton Brokers' Association, reviewing the past week's trade, says: "Cotton was in increased request in the early part of the week, with an extensive business, and prices for some descriptions advanced; but for the last few days the demand has decreased, and the tendency of the market has been in favor of buyers. American was in active request early in the week, and advanced 3-4d, but there has since been less inquiry, and with the large supply offering the extreme advance was barely maintained. Sea Island was in fair demand, and prices were quite steady. In futures the week opened with a very large business, and by midday on Monday an advance of fully 3-16d. was established. Business has since been smaller, and 1-8d. of the advance has been lost."

A leading grain circular says: "The markets were firmer this week for both foreign wheat and dry qualities of British wheat. Some markets quote an improved value and a better consumptive demand. The floating trade is also improving. This market has experienced a renewed, steady inquiry, especially for Californian, of which there is a good quantity of fresh arrivals the past three days. To-day there has been a fair though not a large business in wheat, white realizing an advance of 2d. to 3d., but red, being already higher in proportion, improved only 1d. per cental. Flour was held for extreme prices without much doing. Corn was more readily salable and a shade higher than on Tuesday."

CONGRESSIONAL INHUMANITY.

THE SEVERE TREATMENT OF GOV. WELLS AND HIS ASSOCIATES DENOUNCED BY THE MICHIGAN LEGISLATRUE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Feb. 16.—The House of Representatives of this State this morning adopted, by a vote of 69 to 27, a resolution condemning the course of the Democrats in Congress in barbariously imprisoning the Louisiana canvassers as inhuman in itself and an assault on State rights. The Democratic minority filibustered against the proposition for some time, but were finally outvoted.

CINCINNATI ELECTION FRAUDS.

HOW DEMOCRATIC MAJORITIES WERE SECURED AT THE OCTOBER ELECTION—CONFESSION OF THE LEADING CONSPIRATOR—THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS PAID TO REPEATERS

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 16.—Eph Holland, the principal tool of the October election conspirators in this county, completed his statement to-day. It is a full and fair confession as to the means employed to pile up a fraudulent majority, but stops short of giving the names of the Democrats in the East who supplied the money. He accounts directly for over 500 fraudulent votes, enough to oust Banning and nearly every Democrat in office in the county. He testifies that he was engaged as a matter of business by Banning, Wallace, and other Democratic leaders to get votes by whatever means were necessary, and he got them. Thousands of dollars were furnished him, and he disbursed the money among repeaters from New-York, Chicago, and Pittsburg. His confession has made a startling sensation here, but there is a feeling of disappointment that he refuses to give the names of the principals. It shows conclusively that Stanley Mathews' legitimate majority over Banning was not less than 500.

LOSS OF THE GEORGE CROMWELL.

SHE IS DASHED UPON THE ROCKS ON THE COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND—ALL HANDS SUPPOSED TO HAVE PERISHED—THE VESSEL AND HER OFFICERS.

The steamer George Cromwell, of the Cromwell Line, from New-York to Halifax and St. John's, left this City on the 21st of December, 1876. She reached Halifax safely in the usual time, and left Halifax for St. John's on the 31 of January. Nothing had since been heard of her until last night, when a telegraphic dispatch was received from St. John's, conveying the news that a life-buoy marked "George Cromwell" had been picked up in Placentia Bay. Soon after the receipt of this dispatch another was received by Clark & Seaman, the agents of the line in this city, also dated St. John's, Feb. 16, and signed by Harvey & Co., repeating the announcement about the finding of the life buoy. Later on, further dispatches said that quantities of wreckage began to come ashore about the 11th instant seven miles south of Placentia, among the articles being tubs of butter, a cabin door, a life-buoy, and a case of geese. The impression among seamen at St. John's was said to be that the George Cromwell had been driven ashore on the night of the 5th of January, two days after leaving Halifax, and that she had struck on Cape St. Mary's. This cape is 25 miles east of Cape Race, on which the George Washington was wrecked nearly a month later, and the shore is of the same character as that of Mistaken Point—high, rugged, and dangerous, and so wild as to be seldom approached by the dwellers along the coast. There is no donot that all hands on board were lost.

The George Cromwell was a wooden-screw steamship of about 1,000 tons burden, and was built in this City, in 1862, by Westervelt & Co., to run with the George Washington, on the Cromwell Line, between this City and New-Orleans. She was 184 feet in length, 30 feet breadth of beam, and 18½ feet depth of hold. Until 15 months ago she was employed on the Southern Line, when larger vessels being required for the Halifax and St. John's trade, they were placed on that line. She was considered to be a stanch vessel, and had passed an examination in 1872. Her cargo was a general one, principally provisions, and was insured by the shippers. The vessel was partly insured, but to what amount could not be ascertained. The officers and crew of the steam-ship numbered 24 persons all told, the crew being principally from this City. The passengers and officers are as follows:

BANK FAILURE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

POTTSVILLE, Feb. 16.—The following notice was posted on the door of the Miners' Trust and Safe Deposit Bank at Shamokin this morning: "Owing to our inability to realize money on notes held as bills discounted we are compelled to close this bank and suspend business." Considerable excitement exists there, the bank having had a good reputation among the principal business men of the place, who are heavy depositors, and the loss falls principally upon them, there being but few depositors among the workmen. The bank's exact condition cannot be ascertained at present.

Cowardly Assaults.

When a candidate for high office is so well liked and so popular with the masses as to make his defeat difficult in a fair and honorable fight, mean and cowardly men are not wanting who delight in manufacturing lies and slandering his good name. There are also those whose selfishness prompts them to prostitute their honor, pervert truth, and ignore right, for the sake of injuring a competitor in business, whose prosperity they envy, and with whose business sagacity they have not the talent to successfully compete in an honorable way. These thoughts are suggested by the mean, cowardly attacks made upon me and my medicines by those who imagine their pecuniary prospects injured by the great popularity which my standard medicines have acquired and the continued growth of my professional practice. Narrow-minded practitioners of medicine, and manufacturers of preparations which do not possess sufficient merit to successfully compete for popular favor, have resorted to such cowardly strategy as to publish all sorts of ridiculous reports about the composition of my medicines. Almanacs, "Receipt Books," and other pamphlets, are issued and scattered broadcast over the land, wherein these contemptible knaves publish pretended analyses of my medicines and receipts for making them. Some of these publications are given high-sounding names, pretend to be issued by respectable men of education and position, for the good of the people—the more completely to blind the reader to the real object in their circulation, which is to injure the sale of my medicines. The Popular Health Almanac is the high-sounding name of one of these publications, which contains bogus receipts, without a grain of truth in them. Not less devoid of truth are those which have been published by one Dr. L., of Detroit, in the Michigan Farmer, and by other manufacturers of medicines, in several so-called journals of pharmacy. They are all prompted by jealousy, and utterly fail in accomplishing the object of their authors, for, notwithstanding their free circulation, my medicines continue to sell more largely than any others manufactured in this country, and are constantly increasing in sale despite the base lies concocted and circulated by such knaves. The people find that these medicines possess genuine merit, accomplish what their manufacturer claims for them, and are not the vile, poisonous nostrums which jealous, narrow-minded physicians and sneaking compounders of competing medicines represent them to be. Among the large number of pretended analyses published it is a significant fact that no two have been at all alike—conclusively proving the dishonesty of their authors. It is enough for the people to know that while thousands, yes, I may truthfully say, millions, have taken my medicines and have been cured, no one has ever received injury from their use.

THE "SHOT-GUN" METHOD.

ELECTION FRAUDS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

TABULAR ANALYSIS AND EXPLANATION OF THE RECENT VOTE OF THAT STATE—HOW A LEGITIMATE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY OF 35,000 WAS OVERCOME—THE EVIDENCE BEFORE THE BOARD OF STATE CANVASSERS — WHERE DID HAMPTON GET THE 6,531 WHITE VOTES IN EXCESS OF THE CENSUS?

Your great services to the cause of free suffrage in the South are known to all. The tabular analysis of the vote of North Carolina, which appeared in THE DAILY TIMES of the 10th inst., leads me to send you a similar analysis and explanation of the vote of South Carolina, in order that the country may see how a legitimate Republican majority of from 20,000 to 35,000 was overcome by the "shot-gun" Democracy. The basis of comparison adopted in this table is the State census of 1875, as well as the votes at each election of Governor since 1868. A similar comparison with the United States census of 1870 would disclose still more astounding results.

The infamous frauds in Edgefield County stand forth in the clearest light, when tested by the United States census of 1870 or the State census of 1875.

By the former census, (United States, 1870,) the entire population of Edgefield County, as then constituted, was 42,486. This included the village of Hamburg, and the townships of Gregg, Hammond, and Schultz, having at that time, according to the same census, a population of 7,728, all of which were, in 1871, made a part of the new County of Aiken. Deducting this from the entire population, as above stated, we have left 34,758 as the population in 1870 of the territory now comprised in Edgefield County. A further deduction should here be made for the township of Shaw's Creek, fully one-third of which is included in the County of Aiken. For this, however, we have made no deduction.

According to the State census of 1875, the entire population of Edgefield County, as now constituted, is 35,039.

The whole number of votes cast in this county at the late election, according to the returns before the Board of State Canvassers, was 9,374. Taking, then, either the United States census of 1870, or the State census of 1875, as giving the population of this county, the result is, that at the late election the votes cast considerably exceeded the ratio of one vote for every four inhabitants. This fact alone would throw great discredit upon the accuracy of the returns.

But, by the State census of 1875, the whole number of male persons over 21 years of age in the County of Edgefield is only 7,122, showing an excess in the total vote cast at this election, according to the returns, of 2,252 over the entire possible vote of the county.

Second—A comparison of the vote of this county at previous elections will establish the same result as above stated.

In 1870 the entire vote of this county for Governor was 8,251. In connection with the vote of this year it should be remembered that Gen. M. C. Butler was a candidate upon the Democratic ticket for Lieutenant Governor. It is fair to presume that owing to the fact of his being a citizen of this county, and the acknowledged leader of the Democratic Party in that county, he brought out the full Democratic strength. In the vote of 1870, as above given, is included the vote of that portion of the county which has since been made a part of the County of Aiken. By reference to the United States census of 1870, it will be found, as already stated, that the entire population of the territory now embraced in Aiken County was 7,728, which gives a voting population—reckoning by the same ratio as is established by a comparison of the entire population of the county with the whole number of males over 21 years of age—of, in round numbers, 1,500. Deducting this number from the entire vote, 8,251, we have 6,751 as the vote for 1870 of what constitutes the present County of Edgefield.

The aggregate vote of Edgefield County, as reported by the returns for this year, is 9,374, showing an excess over the unusually full vote of 1870 of no less than 2,623, or an excess over the vote of the entire County of Edgefield, before the present County of Aiken was established, of 1,123; or, again, an excess in the vote of the present year for the Democratic candidates over the entire vote of the old County of Edgefield for Gen. M. C. Butler in 1870 of 2,425.

In 1872, there being no Democratic candidate for Governor, it will be necessary to take the vote for State Senator in that county as the standard of comparison. This vote, in the aggregate, was 5,374, or exactly 4,000 less than the reported vote of this year.

In 1874 the entire vote of the county was 6,298. By the United States census of 1870 the entire population of the territory embraced in the present County of Edgefield was 34,758. Allowing one voter for every five persons, the ratio established by the same census, there would have been in this county in 1874, a total voting population of 6,951. By the State census of 1875, the whole number of males over 21 years of age in this county was 7,122. An examination of these figures will show that the above vote of 1874, 6,298, is very nearly six-sevenths of the entire number of persons over 21 years of age, according to the United States census of 1870, or the State census of 1875. The statistics of popular elections in this country have established the fact that six-sevenths of the entire voting population is the highest limit reached in any elections, except in a few extreme and exceptional cases, which do not affect the general rule as here stated.

The conclusion is that the vote of this county in 1874 was a full vote, under all ordinary circumstances, and yet this year the reported vote of this county exceeds the vote in 1874 by 3,046. And, in this connection, it may be added that Gen. M. W. Gary, who claims to have been elected State Senator from this county at the late election, has stated, in a public card, that about 600 colored voters did not vote, which number being added to the excess just named, would give an aggregate excess of 3,676 over the very full vote of 1874.

Third—The evidence before the Board of State Canvassers showed that this large excess of voters over the lawful vote of the county was due to increase exclusively of the Democratic vote. For, while the vote was, at the recent election, largely increased over the vote at any previous election, yet the Republican vote was decreased. This decrease in the Republican vote was shown, by the evidence before the State Board of Canvassers, to be due not to a natural change of party connections, but to the fact of an organized and systematic plan of intimidation and violence carried on throughout the canvass, and reaching its culmination on the day of the election.

The increase of the reported Democratic vote of this year over the vote for Gen. M. C. Butler in 1870, before the County of Edgefield was divided, is 2,545, and an increase over the Democratic vote in 1874 of 3,367.

In further explanation of the foregoing table it may be observed that the classification of votes as to color is omitted in the County of Charleston, as it did not appear on the managers' returns. This is also true in the Counties of Edgefield and Laurens.

In the County of Williamsburg the classification appeared in the returns of the managers, except from two precincts.

In the last three mentioned counties this classification has been approximated, that process being possible on the reasonable assumption that those who voted for the Republican candidate for Governor were almost without exception colored men.

This approximation could not fairly obtain, however, in the case of Charleston County, because there is a considerable white Republican element there.

Edgefield County is approximated as follows:

Colored voters by census of 1875	4,400
Votes cast for Chamberlain	3,107
Leaving number of colored voters unaccounted for	1,293
Votes cast for Hampton	6,267
Assuming that the colored vote, as per census, yet to be accounted for, were cast for him, viz.	1,293
And there appears as the actual white vote	4,974
Deduct the actual white vote, as per census	2,723
And there remains to be accounted for as white votes in excess of the census	2,252

Laurens County is approximated as follows:

Number of colored votes as per census	2,844
Colored votes estimated to have been cast	1,804
Colored votes unaccounted for	1,040
Number of votes cast for Hampton	2,916
White voters as per census	2,259
Excess of white voters over census	657

But assuming that these 657 represent colored voters and deducting them from the 1,040 colored voters, unaccounted for, there still remains 383 colored voters unaccounted for as per census.

Williamsburg County is approximated as follows: In this county there are 11 precincts. From one precinct where 157 votes were cast, (as deducted from the County Canvassers' returns,) no managers' returns were sent up, hence no classification of the voters as to color can be made. At another precinct the classification of voters (as to color) is not made, but it can be reasonably assumed that the 125 voters for Hampton were white, and the 245 for Chamberlain were colored. Adding the votes cast at the latter precinct to those cast at the other nine which are classified on the managers' returns, there is exhibited an aggregate of 1,529 white and 2,506 colored voters, or an excess of 117 whites over, and a deficiency of 70 colored from, the census.

Colleton County—It is to be remarked in connection with the statistics of the election in this county that while the colored vote is 511 in excess of the census, the vote for Chamberlain is 754 less than the census of colored voters, and 565 less than the actual number of colored votes cast, while Hampton received 33 more votes than all the white votes cast, with the 511 colored excess added thereto.

In Orangeburg County, where the aggregate excess of votes over the census was 788, Chamberlain received only 85 votes in excess of the colored vote according to that census, and 332 less than the number of colored votes actually cast, while Hampton received 689 votes more than the whole number of white voters according to the census; 318 more than the whole number of white votes actually cast, and only 99 votes less than the total white vote cast, with the whole excess of the colored vote added to it.

If in Charleston County we deduct 1,000 votes from Hampton, as representing the white Republican element, and give them to Chamberlain, and then deduct the same number of votes from Chamberlain and give them to Hampton, as the number of colored men who voted for him, the result remains substantially the same as to the excess of white (or Hampton) votes over, and the deficiency of colored (or Chamberlain) votes from, the census.

The difference between the total number of "votes cast in 1876," with the addition of the votes in Charleston, and the total vote cast for Governor, represents the "scattering" vote in the State; or, in other words, the votes cast for persons other than Chamberlain or Hampton was 634.

The deficiency of 10,747 colored votes from the census is accounted for substantially by adding to the 6,727 votes in the column of "colored less than census," the 3,655 ascertained by deducting the colored vote received by Chamberlain in Charleston County from the colored census of the county.

The data in the table are official. Even on the extraordinary assumption that Hampton received every white vote in the State, according to the census, except the 1,000 accredited to Chamberlain in Charleston County, the pertinent inquiry remains: "Where did he get the 6,531 white votes which are obviously in excess of the census?"

FISH AND FOWL.

HOW OYSTERS, TERRAPIN, FISH, AND GAME ARE SHIPPED.

From the Baltimore Gazette, Feb. 14.

Baltimore is the largest market for fine-grained, delicately-flavored fish, though she does not send directly abroad so many as New-York. Salmon shad, bay mackerel, and salmon trout flourish in the waters of her bay and its rivers, which seem admirably adapted to produce the finest varieties of these fish. Numbers of them are sent to New-York firms, who ship them abroad, thus giving that City the credit of exportations which Baltimore might just as well have had. The fish are prepared for transportation by being frozen. Barrels or other suitable vessels are filled with the fish, and are then placed in a refrigerator until thoroughly frozen. When shipped they are placed in similar refrigerators on board. The freezing does not appear to injure the flavor of the fish, though some have claimed that it does. One of the largest dealers in the city has a very neat refrigerator barrel, in which he puts up all the fish he sends any distance. The barrel is lined with zinc, and between the lining and the wood there is a narrow air space, as well as a layer of hair packing. This arrangement very effectually prevents great changes of temperature in the inside of the barrel when closed up. Inside of this metal-lined barrel is a galvanized iron can, in which the fish are placed. Around this can a freezing mixture of ice and salt is placed, which is renewed as fast as the ice melts. The water runs off by a pipe at the bottom of the barrel. Fish packed in this manner can be shipped with the greatest ease to any clime, and kept any length of time.

In the shipping of oysters in the shell great care is exercised in packing. A layer of the oysters is placed in a barrel with their mouths up. They are then packed with sea-grass which is very porous, and holds large quantities of sea-water, which involves partial nourishment for them. Over this layer of oysters corn-meal is sprinkled. On the corn-meal another layer of the oysters, packed in the same manner is placed, and so on until the barrel is filled. By this arrangement the oyster can feed nearly as well as if he were on his bed on the river or bay bottom. The grass will hold its nourishment from a month to six weeks, a sufficient time to make the longest voyages. The extent of this trade is difficult to estimate, as it is wholly retail. No house abroad has yet entered into the trade, receiving regular consignments from this port, but negotiations are now pending to effect such result. Caterers in London and Paris, and American residents abroad are large consumers, and they order directly from Baltimore, or indirectly, through New-York. Only one attempt to plant American oysters in foreign waters has been made by capitalists of this city, and that proved a failure. Some five years ago, through the influence of the Turkish Consul residing here, a number of gentlemen were induced to try the experiment. A vessel was loaded with them, packed in the same manner, as they are on the pungies which bring them to this market—that is, not packed at all—and of course nearly all died on the way. Satisfied with what they held to be a proof of the impossibility of transporting them, these parties did not repeat the experiment. In the face of the fact that oysters are being sent across every day, which arrive in the best condition, it would be ridiculous to deny the feasibility of the project. Whether the oysters will thrive in those waters is another question, only to be determined by experiment.

Terrapin are shipped from this port both alive and canned. When sent alive they are packed in boxes or barrels, without food, ice, or any other accompaniments. Between the months of September and March they do not eat anything, and this is the time during which they are shipped. Those put up in cans are boiled and then hermetically sealed, the same as other canned meats. Those sent abroad go exclusively to England and France, where they are highly prized. Soft crabs, fried and put up in oil cans, are quite largely sent to foreign markets. In game the principal export is canvas-back ducks. A common way of packing them is to tie them by the feet around the edge of a circular basket. This keeps the birds separated, and leaves a space in the centre for ice, if necessary. The basket of ducks is generally placed in a refrigerator and frozen before they are shipped. This method of packing them has proved remarkably successful. One dealer affirms that he has not lost a single basket in five years.

DANGERS OF PHILADELPHIA STREETS.

The Philadelphia Ledger of the 15th inst. says: "Yesterday afternoon, about 5:30 o'clock, as two horses, drawing a private carriage, were passing along Eighteenth street, above Cherry, the cobble stone pavement gave way under the horses and both sank into the gaping chasm thus caused in the carriage-way. One of the animals sank but a little way and managed to scramble out, but the other went down until nothing of him was left above the surface but his head and part of his neck. The poor creature was entirely helpless, and it took all the efforts of the crowd who soon gathered around to prevent him from sinking out of reach. Means of extrication were improvised, by means of rope and plank, and with the aid of a pair of car horses detached from a horse railway car, he was drawn out, after a lapse of about 10 minutes in his perilous position. The gap in the carriage-way thus caused is about five feet in diameter and of unknown depth, for before the horse was drawn out it was nearly filled with water, and subsequently did fill to nearly the surface of the street. It is not known whether the earth beneath had been washed out by a leaky water pipe or by the bursting of a choked-up sewer. There was a previous break near the same spot last week. The hole is quite dangerous, as the water in it is deep enough to drown any one. It was well guarded last night by a sort of barricade, a lantern and a policeman to give warning."

LAW REPORTS.

BOODY'S CASE AGAINST TILDEN.

CONCLUSION OF PLAINTIFF'S CASE—TILDEN ESCAPES BY PLEADING THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—MOTION TO DISMISS DENIED IN OGDEN'S CASE.

The trial of the suit of Henry H. Boody against Samuel J. Tilden and others for an accounting and settlement of claims arising out of transactions connected with "The Chicago and Galena Pool" in 1864, of which pool all the parties were members, was resumed yesterday in the Special Term of the Superior Court, before Judge Sedgwick. Mr. Dexter A. Hawkins appearing for Mr. Boody and Mr. William W. Niles for the defense. It had been announced on Thursday that Mr. Boody's examination was concluded, but yesterday morning he was recalled by Mr. Hawkins, who said he wanted to show that Mr. Boody, in giving Mr. George M. Bartholomew a receipt in full, did not give him a release, it having been claimed by Mr. Niles that Bartholomew, who is one of the defendants, had been given a release, and that, as the pool operation was a joint transaction, a release of Bartholomew would release Tilden and Ogden. Mr. Boody testified that he showed Bartholomew, in a summary way, what the equities of the case were, and that Bartholomew gave him $3,000, receiving from witness a receipt in full, with the understanding, however, that if a further examination of the pool accounts showed it to be just, Bartholomew was to pay witness $1,000 more, Bartholomew giving witness a written agreement to that effect.

Samuel S. Sands, called by Mr. Hawkins, testified that he was a member of the firm of Samuel S. Sands & Co., brokers, in 1863 and 1864, and remembered the operations of the "Chicago and Galena Pool" in 1864; he met Tilden, Ogden, and Boody, the principals in that pool, at Boody's office, in April, 1864, and talked over the subject of getting possession of stock of the Chicago and Galena Union Railroad Company, in order to consolidate the company with the Chicago and North-western; in the panic that season Galena tumbled to 113, and afterward recovered to 140; witness was relieved by the pool of the stock he had bought for it, being paid for it, including interest and commission; witness had met Tilden, Ogden, and Boody on several occasions at Boody's office, and on one of these occasions Tilden conversed with witness on he subject of finance—a question about which witness knew but little.

Mr. Hawkins rested, with the exception of reserving the right to call an additional witness who had been unable to attend, and whose testimony would be simply corroborative of that of Mr. Sands.

Mr. Niles moved to dismiss the complaint as against Tilden and Ogden, pleading for Tilden the Statute of Limitations. He said that, from the time of Boody having stated the account of the pool to Tilden and Ogden, and payments being made thereon, no question of the correctness of the account had been raised until after the expiration of more than 10 years and six months. This statement of account was substantially a formal one. Tilden had never seen any of the accounts kept by Boody relating to the pool; had never had anything to do with an entry therein, and had accepted Mr. Boody's statement as correct. It was clear, he said, that the case was covered by the Statute of Limitations relating to partnership settlements.

Mr. Hawkins said that this was a copartnership that had never been settled. There had been no dissolution of the copartnership, because, in reality, no final settlement had been made, as, though each of the copartners had taken a portion of the copartnership property, some of them had not yet settled for it.

Judge Sedgwick said that Mr. Hawkins' position was untenable. It appeared clear to him that the claim as against Mr. Tilden was barred. It was purely a legal question. The question of the wrong of the thing did not affect the matter at all.

Mr. Hawkins said that Mr. Tilden had drawn out a much larger amount than he was entitled to, and, of course, was not going to say anything about a mistake which benefited him, and an accounting was just what he did not want. The claims of Boody against Tilden and Ogden were not discovered by Boody until a late day, but that did not invalidate their justness. The case, anyhow, in reference to Ogden, would have been a non-resident of the City for years, and who, therefore, could not plead the Statute of Limitations, and that of Bartholomew, who was willing to abide the issue of an accounting, would probably both go before a Referee or auditor, and it would do no harm to let Tilden's case go with them. If Tilden, then, had such an equitable defense in an accounting, then let him, if he choose to do so, plead the Statute of Limitations. There were good reasons now why Tilden should not plead the Statute of Limitations. He was charged with a debt to a partner, arising out of his overdrawing his share of supposed profits, and it would go out to the country that instead of trying the question on its merits and abiding the issue, he had saved himself by pleading the Statute of Limitations. Mr. Tilden was a prominent citizen, and an aspirant for the highest office in the gift of the people, and he [Mr. Hawkins] not only as Mr. Boody's counsel, but in behalf of the good name of the country and for Mr. Tilden's own name and reputation, would ask that such a plea be not pressed, and, if pressed, be not accepted.

Judge Sedgwick said he thought Mr. Hawkins was covering too much ground in appearing for the country and Mr. Tilden as well as for his own client. The motion made by Mr. Niles was based on a purely legal proposition. Mr. Hawkins had not seriously denied its correctness from a legal standpoint, nor cited a decision adverse to the point made. The mind of the court was clear that the motion must be granted.

Mr. Tilden's case having been disposed of, Mr. Niles asked for a dismissal of the complaint as against Ogden, on the evidence as presented by plaintiff.

Judge Sedgwick denied the motion to dismiss as against Ogden, saying that there was sufficient in the evidence of Boody to put Ogden on his defense; and also denied a motion to dismiss made on the ground that a release had been given to Bartholomew, which operated as a release for Ogden.

The case was then adjourned to 11 o'clock A. M. on Monday next.

Mr. Hawkins said, after the adjournment of the court, that the claims against Tilden, with interest added, amounted to over $40,000, the payment of which he had escaped by pleading the Statute of Limitations, in spite of the protests of many leading Democrats.

The institution holds a lease from the City of the block of ground on Madison avenue between Eighty-first and Eighty-second streets, and running nearly to Fourth avenue. The property was assessed for a sewer in Fifth avenue between Seventy-ninth and Eighty-ninth streets; for a sewer in Seventy-fourth street, between Fifth and Eighth avenues; for the opening of Eighty-second street, between Second and Fifth avenues; for the opening of Madison avenue, between Eighty-sixth and One Hundred and Twentieth streets; for the grading, curbing, and guttering of Eighty-first street, between Third and Fifth avenues; and for other improvements, the whole amount of the assessments aggregating nearly $17,000. The Cardinal moved for the vacating of the assessments on the ground that by the terms of the lease from the City the institution was to pay no taxes or assessments. Judge Brady denied the application, since the institution cannot be in any way injuriously affected by proceedings for non-payment of the assessments. As the City would have the right to make the sale as well as the party to pay the assessments, the proceedings would be useless.

ARRAIGNMENT OF TWO ALLEGED THIEVES.

John Wilson, alias Smith, alias "Dutch Chris," and Michael Sheehan, alias "Sheeny Mike," who were arrested on Thursday last by Detectives Ferris and Von Gerichten, were yesterday arraigned before Justice Kilbreth on a charge of robbing the store of Messrs. Benjamin, Hahn & Co., No. 315 Broadway, on the 3d inst. Mina Lobig, of No. 320 East Ninth street, testified that she had rented rooms to Wilson a few days before the burglary was committed, and that she saw the trunk which was subsequently identified as the one that had contained the stolen goods in his room on the 5th inst., and also on the 14th inst. She further said that she had seen the prisoner "Sheeny Mike," in the room conversing with Wilson and several of his companions. Detective Von Gerichten testified to the facts of the capture of the prisoners. At the conclusion of his testimony, Wilson was committed for trial in default of $10,000 bail, and Sheehan was held for further examination.

THE FLOOD MURDER CASE.

James Flood, the tinsmith, who murdered his wife Mary on the doorstep of No. 52 Crosby street on the morning of Sunday, the 4th inst., was arraigned yesterday on an indictment for murder in the first degree in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. Counsel, on behalf of the prisoner, pleaded not guilty, and stated the defense would be irresponsibility or temporary insanity, caused by the sudden proof of his wife's infidelity. Assistant District Attorney Rollins said that the case would be tried at an early day.

STATE PRISON FOR TEN YEARS.

AN AMATEUR DETECTIVE CONVICTED OF BURGLARY—STORY OF A MUSIC-BOX.

About ten days since a rather curious case of larceny and receiving stolen goods was tried before Judge Gildersleeve in the Court of General Sessions. A bar-tender named George Andrews was charged with stealing a music-box. It appeared that a music-box had been stolen from a gentleman, and sold to a lady for about a fifth of its value. Andrews called on this person, stated that he knew how the instrument had been obtained, and demanded its restoration or a recompense of $15 for holding his peace. The purchaser of the music-box refused to comply with the demand, and had Andrews arrested for attempting to obtain money by false pretenses. After the arrest it was discovered that Andrews had also visited the owner of the music-box and offered to restore it for $15, but failed to obtain the money. Under these circumstances the District Attorney became convinced that Andrews had stolen the music-box, and subsequently attempted to make profit on it by trading with the loser and purchaser, whereupon the swindler was placed on trial for grand larceny. On taking the stand in his own behalf, Andrews assumed an air of bravado and hardihood. He said that he became legitimately possessed of the information relating to the theft of the music-box, and had only taken steps for its restoration, as a detective would have done. He succeeded in taking the jury into an acquittal, and on discharging the accused Judge Sutherland advised him to give up the business of amateur detective and engage in some less questionable pursuit. Assistant District Attorney Rollins, who prosecuted the case, said, "Never mind, Judge, we shall have that fellow here again before many weeks." The truth of the prophecy was apparent yesterday, when Andrews, under the name of Harris, appeared at the bar of the court to plead to an indictment for burglary in the first degree, he having been arrested in the act of robbing the premises of Joseph Lahr, No. 136 Ninth avenue. On finding that he was recognized by Mr. Rollins, he at once pleaded guilty, but, with consummate impudence, contended that he was not legally guilty of burglary, he having found the door of the residence in question open while on his way to break into another mansion. Judge Sutherland sent the prisoner to State Prison for ten years.

THE WASHINGTON MARKET HOMICIDE.

James Rice, who was indicted for murder in the first degree, was brought to trial before Judge Brady, in the Court of Over and Terminer, yesterday. In his opening speech, Assistant District Attorney Russell, who represented the prosecution, said that they would not ask for a conviction for murder in the first degree, but for murder in the second degree or for manslaughter in the third degree. This was said in reply to a juror who had conscientious scruples against the infliction of capital punishment. From the testimony given it appeared that at about 4 A. M. on Oct. 10, 1876, Owen McCabe had a scuffle with John and Frank McCarren, in Washington Market, where both parties had stalls. In the altercation McCabe was beaten. Three hours later McCabe went to his brother, Hugh McCabe, who was at No. 422 Greenwich street, and induced Hugh to accompany him to the place kept by the McCarrens. Owen McCabe says this was for the purpose of procuring the arrest of the latter. When Owen McCabe and his brother arrived at the stall of the McCarrens, Hugh was injured in, and, as claimed by the prosecution, the accused, who was in the employ of the McCarrens, went behind Hugh McCabe and struck him over the back of the head with a hatchet. Edward Randall and Abraham Dorset testified to seeing Rice inflict the blow. Dr. Marcus testified that Hugh McCabe died on Dec. 26 from an abscess of the brain, caused by a fracture of the skull. John Farrell, a policeman, testified that he saw Hugh McCabe after the assault draw a hatchet from his belt and hand it to some person in the crowd which had collected; the witness brought the parties to the station-house. In defense it is claimed that the blow which caused Hugh McCabe's death was not struck by Rice, but by some one else. Two witnesses were examined for the defense, and the trial was then adjourned over to Monday.

WANTS TO GET RID OF MONEY.

Application was made to Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, by Albert Weber, for leave to pay into court $1,600, which is claimed by two parties. It appears that Mr. Weber employed a man named Pattison to exhibit goods at the Centennial Exposition at a certain rate of wages, and by the terms of the contract it was required that the money was to be paid to a Mrs. Craig, of Buffalo. A person claiming to be a creditor of Pattison began a suit against the latter, and issued an attachment directed against the funds in Mr. Weber's hands. The money was duly levied on by the Sheriff. Mrs. Craig had previously begun a suit in Buffalo against Mr. Weber for the money. Mr. Weber, not knowing which claimant to pay, desires to bring the money into court, and let the claimants fight it out between themselves, or "interplead," according to the legal expression. Mrs. Craig claims that she, having begun her suit in Buffalo first, should not be required to litigate in this City. She also shows that Mr. Weber, when the attachment was served on him, made a certificate to the effect that he had no property of Pattison in his possession. To this it was answered that, if it should appear that the arrangement between Pattison and Weber was designed merely to keep the former's property out of the reach of creditors, the Sheriff was not concluded by Mr. Weber's certificate, and is permitted to show that the arrangement was merely to keep Pattison's property away from his creditors. Judge Barrett reserved his decision. Coudert Brothers appeared for Mrs. Craig, and A. J. Vanderpool and C. W. Gould for Mr. Weber.

THE CEMETERY OF THE EVERGREENS.

The suit of William C. Kneeland against Seymour L. Husted, William C. Prime, and others, was brought before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a motion by the plaintiff to strike out the answer of Mr. Prime as frivolous. Judge Barrett denied the motion on the spot, with costs. Kneeland, who claims to be a lot-owner in the Cemetery of the Evergreens, sues to recover $100,000 damages from the defendants for alleged wrongful conduct on their part, while acting as Trustees of the Cemetery Association. He says the defendants, while Trustees, purchased 207 acres of ground, for about $200 per acre, and sold them for $1,200 per acre to the association. Mr. Prime, the plaintiff alleges, arranged the sale by which the transfer was made, and received a bond of $1,000 as well as a lot valued at $1,255 for his share. Mr. Prime, in his answer, alleged that he was merely the legal adviser of certain gentlemen who proposed to organize a cemetery association. He received the association's bond and the lot, but he says these were given to him for his services, the association not being able to pay in money. Mr. Prime says he never acted as Trustee, and that, when he discovered that he had been appointed as Trustee, he resigned at once. The plaintiff himself, Mr. Prime says, was at first clerk to the Controller of the association, and afterward was Controller, and that if there was anything wrong, Kneeland himself was a party to it.

THE CHURCH MUSIC TROUBLE.

The trial of the suit of Edward Schenck against the Church of the Incarnation, was resumed before Chief Justice Curtis and a jury, in Part III. of the Superior Court, yesterday. A few witnesses were examined for the defense, but their testimony was merely a repetition of that given on the preceding day. The counsel then began their summing up to the jury. John E. Parsons, who represented the defendant, claimed that it was effrontery on Mr. Schenck's part to claim damages. He had not paid any of the choir, nor the organist, but these, with the exception of the soprano, had been paid by the church. Mr. Schenck was not liable for the salaries of the artists, and had himself said he did not desire to make any money out of the church. The counsel considered this was merely an attempt to "bleed" the church. Mr. Parsons then referred to Mr. Schenck's manner of conducting the musical services as being calculated to create disorder and to annoy the congregation. The plaintiff's way was too demonstrative for a musical conductor, though it might do very well for an auctioneer. Ex-Judge Fithian, in reply, claimed there was no effrontery in a man's seeking his rights under a lawful contract. He said some members of the church Musical Committee were determined to get rid of Mr. Schenck, and succeeded in doing so. This, however, did not relieve the church of its liability. The jury retired, and failing to bring in a verdict at the hour of closing the court, were ordered to bring in a sealed verdict on Monday morning.

AN INSURANCE SUIT.

The case of John Tilton and William Feather against the United States Life Insurance Company was brought before Judge Robinson, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday. Each of the plaintiffs is a policy-holder in the company. Tilton owns a policy for $10,000, which was obtained for a prior one which was surrendered. He thinks that the proper amount of reserve was not credited to him on the new policy. Feather holds a $2,000 policy and claims that he was not credited with all the dividends to which he was entitled. Both plaintiffs desire an accounting, and make charges against the management of the company. The latter made a motion yesterday to have certain portions of the complaint stricken out as irrelevant, and also to compel the plaintiffs to number and specify their causes of action. The defendant claims there are three causes of action in the complaints which cannot be joined together. One plaintiff asks one kind of relief and the other seeks another. The company said that it will at the proper time deny the charges of mismanagement. Judge Robinson reserved his decision on the motion. W. J. Butler appeared for the plaintiffs, and Aaron J. Vanderpool for the defendant.

COURT NOTES.

Sergt. Thompson, of the Fourth Precinct, who was held recently on a charge of clubbing one Michael Cahnon, yesterday furnished bail at the Tombs Police Court, Bartholomew F. Codigan becoming his bondsman.

The attention of Recorder Hackett and a jury was occupied again yesterday in hearing the tedious case of James Sutton, President of the Aldine Publishing Company, on trial for perjury. The Recorder found it necessary to remark that the trial had already been extended to an unwarrantable extent, and that matters had been dragged into the case which had no earthly connection with the simple question at issue.

Sarah C. Hatch applied recently to Judge Brady, in Supreme Court, Chambers, to have an assessment on two lots, for the regulating, &c. of Eighty-fourth street, set aside on the ground that the amount charged for the work was excessive and fraudulent. Judge Brady denied the application yesterday, on the ground that she had not made out her case. In the case of Patrick Riley, who petitioned for the vacation of an assessment for the repaving of Avenue B, Judge Brady granted the application because it appeared that the resolution of the Common Council authorizing the work had not been properly advertised.

AMBASSADORS AND CHARGES D'AFFAIRES.

From the Solicitors' Journal.

The Ambassadors have left Constantinople after receiving some discourtesy from the Ottoman Government. It is stated that the Sultan, "having toothache," refused an audience, and the Pashas absented themselves from the meeting for the signature of the protocol. Contemporary accounts state that when the Ambassadors of the three allied powers quitted Constantinople in 1827, they did not receive much more civility. It was not until their ships had weighed anchor that the Porte would send their firmans, and difficulties were made as to accepting the arrangements of the Ambassadors for the protection of the subjects of their respective countries. It is to be feared, indeed, that the penalty intended to be imposed by the withdrawal of Ambassadors is not of a very awe-inspiring character. The Chargé d'Affaires is according to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, is, perhaps, on the whole, a more convenient functionary than the Ambassador. The Ambassador can claim audience with the sovereign or head of the State; the Chargé d'Affaires must communicate through the Minister. So at least it has been laid down in America. In 1852, on the occasion of an appeal made to the President of the United States by the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Webster wrote to the American Chargé d'Affaires at Vienna: "The Chevalier Hülsemann ought to know that a Chargé d'Affaires, whether regularly commissioned, or acting as such only commission, can hold official intercourse only with the Department of State. He had no right even to converse with the President on matters of business, and may consider it a liberal courtesy that he is presented to him at all," (see Wheaton, p. 396.) The position of the different classes of representatives at foreign courts, as settled at the Congress of Vienna, assigns to the Chargé d'Affaires the third rank, but the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, by adding to Ambassadors and envoys accredited to sovereigns a new class of "Ministers resident accredited to Sovereigns," reduces the Chargés d'Affaires to the fourth rank. The Secretary of the Embassy is usually Chargé d'Affaires, and in the latter capacity he is entitled to the immunities of the Ambassador; and it would appear that, independently of that character, he is entitled to immunities. "The Secretary of Embassy says Wicquefort, ("Droit des Gens," liv. 4, chap. 9, s. 122, cited in Halleck,) "has his commission from the sovereign himself, which makes him a kind of public Minister, and he, in himself, is protected by the law of nations, and enjoys immunities independent of the Ambassador."

TERRIBLE DISASTER IN LONDON.

From the London Times of Jan. 31.

Yesterday morning, about 10:15, a terrible disaster happened on the premises of the City Commissioners of Sewers, in Commercial road, Lambeth, resulting in the death of one person, mortal injury to two women, and serious injuries to a dozen others. For some time past Lott's Wharf has been the scene of extensive building operations, the Commissioners erecting a large series of buildings for the sorting and storage of ashes, dust and refuse collected in the City of London proper, together with suitable furnaces for burning up such vegetable and animal refuse as is useless for manure. The main building was completed, and the shaft of the furnace was still in course of erection, with scaffolding around and above it. At the time mentioned a great number of dust sorters, men and women, were at work in a yard adjoining the new works, when suddenly the rain came down with such violence that they flocked under the scaffolding for shelter, and at that very moment the whole of the shaft and timber surrounding it was blown over by a fierce rush of wind, and came crashing down upon the unfortunate people. Their shrieks for help brought assistance from the adjoining wharves, and in the space of half an hour the whole of the poor people were rescued and taken to the hospital, three of them being to all appearances dead, but it was subsequently ascertained that only one had been killed outright, although two more of them are so much injured in the spine that their recovery is impossible. The City Surveyor for the Southern District and the Surveyor for the Parish of Lambeth were soon on the spot, and it then became apparent that the shaft had become strained by the gale of Monday night, and that the momentary hurricane which swept over the metropolis at 10:15 had snapped one of the standards and hurled the whole shaft to the ground.

RHODE ISLAND TREMBLING.

The Providence Journal of the 15th inst. says: "Officers from the Sixth Police Station, at Olneyville, report yesterday morning that some time Tuesday night, while sitting in the station, they felt the ground beneath the building tremble, and indeed for a moment the structure was shaken upon its foundation. One of the doors was thrown open by the shock, although securely bolted, and now the officers want to know if it was in reality an earthquake."

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Feb. 16.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS

In the Senate an appropriation of $100,000 was made for a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase of official stamps. The Silver Dollar bill was made the special order for Monday. The House amendments to the Consular bill were concurred in and the bill passed. The Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill was discussed and amended.

In the House the bill fixing rates of transportation over the Omaha Bridge was discussed briefly without action. A number of bills on the private calendar were passed.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock, and immediately took another recess till 12o'clock. On reassembling at that hour, Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported favorably on the Senate bill to repeal an act to incorporate the National Capitol Life Insurance Company, and to provide for winding up the affairs of said corporation. Placed on the calendar.

POSTAGE STAMP DEFICIENCY.

Mr. SARGENT, of California, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill appropriating $100,000 to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase of official postage stamps for the Treasury Department during the current fiscal year. Passed.

THE SILVER DOLLAR BILL.

Mr. LOGAN, of Illinois, moved to take up the Senate bill for the issue of silver coin and to make the silver dollar a legal tender.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, objected to the consideration of a bill of this importance during the morning hour. The Chairman of the Committee on Finance, Mr. Sherman, was absent, and it should not be taken up until he returned.

Mr. LOGAN said it was immaterial whether the Chairman of the Finance Committee was here or not. He [Mr. Logan] had prepared the bill himself, and the Chairman of the Finance Committee had told him to call it up whenever he thought proper. This bill nor any other to make the silver dollar a legal tender would have a hearing in the Senate unless it was pressed. The subject had been fully discussed over and over again, but a vote could never be reached on the main question. He felt sure this bill would be killed by delay, although it was a matter of importance and should be acted upon.

Mr. LOGAN withdrew his motion, and moved that the Silver bill be made the special order for Monday next at 1 o'clock P. M., which, after debate, was agreed to.

THE CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, of California, the Senate concurred in the amendments of the House to the Senate amendments to the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, and it was passed.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts so as to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the indebtedness due the Government by the Pacific Railroad Companies, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Booth, submitted on Wednesday last, to the second section of the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads, which provides that the act shall be construed as a final settlement between the Government and the companies, if accepted by the companies within four months of the date of its passage, and so repeals all acts and parts of acts in that behalf. Pending action, Mr. CHRISTIANCY proposed to insert a section providing that Congress shall at all times have power to alter and amend as well as repeal the act.

Mr. CHAFFEE, of Colorado, submitted an amendment to that of Mr. Christiancy, so as to provide that the act should be construed as a final settlement between the Government and the companies, if within four months after its passage it be accepted by the companies, and providing said companies shall faithfully comply with all the provisions of the act, and shall not be in default of any of the installments when due.

Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts, spoke of the rights of the Government and the railroad companies, and said he was in favor of an amicable settlement with the companies, and would, therefore, support any bill to avoid litigation.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY spoke in favor of his amendment, and said all he wanted was to have these railroad companies lay aside a fund to pay their indebtedness to the Government.

Mr. WADLEIGH, of New-Hampshire, said he had no bitter hostility against these railroad companies, but there were many people in the country who had to work hard to pay their taxes and get a living; their money went into the Treasury of the United States and should not be taken out for railroad companies. He was opposed to the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads because he believed it was wrong; he opposed it because he saw the same men thronging the lobbies to-day and urging its passage who had imposed upon Congress in former years bills the evils of which Congress was trying now to get rid of.

Mr. WEST, of Louisiana, said he thought the Senator from New-Hampshire [Mr. Wadleigh] used rather harsh and uncalled-for expressions. The Railroad Committee had given the matter much time to by the Senate, and the Senator who had just taken his seat should not lose sight of the fact that this matter was brought to the attention of Congress by the Executive Department of the Government. He argued that the only difference between the bills of the Committee on Railroads and the Committee on the Judiciary was that the former proposed a settlement with the consent of the companies, and the latter a settlement without such consent.

Mr. MCMILLAN said he was not in favor of making an agreement.

Mr. WADLEIGH referred to the passage of the original act in 1862, and said if it had been stated then that the railroad companies would not be expected to pay the interest on bonds as it became due, no man would have dared to put himself on record in favor of the bill. All that he asked now was that these companies be compelled to pay their debts, as they were abundantly able to do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska, referred to the debates in 1862, and argued that the general tenor thereof was that the interest should not be paid by the companies as it fell due.

Mr. DAWES said a motion made in the House of Representatives that the companies should be required to pay the interest as it became due was voted down.

Mr. HITCHCOCK (resuming) referred to the act of last year authorizing a remeasurement of the Union Pacific Road, and said some economists opposed to the road brought about this legislation. The road was again measured, and it was found that the company had been cheated out of lands and bonds for two or three miles of the road, and the result of this economy was that the Government had to pay $100,000 or $150,000 to the Union Pacific Company.

The amendment of Mr. Chaffee, above referred to, was agreed to—yeas 30, nays 22.

The question then being on the amendment of Mr. Christiancy, as amended by Mr. Chaffee, it was agreed to—yeas 36, nays 15.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. Booth, submitted on Wednesday last, to strike out the fifth section of the bill reported by the Railroad Committee, which allows the company to anticipate their semi-annual payments discounted at the rate of 6 per cent., &c., and it was agreed to without division.

Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, modified the amendment submitted by him yesterday in the nature of a substitute so as to provide that the act shall take effect upon its acceptance by the railroad companies within four months from its passage.

The Senate then, at 5 o'clock, went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened took a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 10 o'clock this morning and took a further recess until 10:55 o'clock, and on assembling went into Committee of the Whole on the bill fixing the rates for transportation of freight and passengers across the bridge at Omaha, on the line of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Mr. LUTTRELL, of California, favored the substitute of the minority of the Pacific Railroad Committee providing that the company shall not charge more than $5 a car, and 25 cents a passenger for transportation over the bridge. He was opposed to allowing them the right to charge any toll, but he had signed the minority report in preference to the majority, which allowed the Government Directors of the road to fix and limit the tolls.

Mr. THROCKMORTON, of Texas, spoke in support of the bill of the majority. He thought that the rates now charged for transportation across the bridge of $10 a car and 50 cents a passenger were too high, but he did not think that a committee of the House could, in the limited time allowed it, regulate the rates to be charged as well as the Board of Directors could.

Without coming to any conclusion on the bill, the committee rose, prayer was offered by the Chaplain, and the Journal of Thursday read.

The House at 1:50 went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Cox in the chair, on the private calendar, and at 4:10 P. M. arose, and the following bills were passed: To refund to the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore $13,500 illegally assessed and collected for Internal Revenue tax; for the adjudication and issue of patents in mineral land cases in Oregon, and in the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana, being the bill introduced and reported by Mr. Lane, of Oregon; supplementary to an act entitled "An act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and China, concluded on the 8th day of November, 1858, at Shanghai, and to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in certain cases." It allows certain American Insurance Companies to go before the Court of Claims to make a case against the Chinese indemnity fund in the State Department.

The House then, at 4:25, took a recess until to-morrow.

THE LOUISIANA INVESTIGATION.

THE TILDEN PLOT AGAINST THE RETURNING BOARD—HOW LITTLEFIELD PLANNED TO SECURE A LARGE SUM OF MONEY—TESTIMONY OF AN ACCOMPLICE—HOW THE STORY WAS REHEARSED UNDER DIRECTION OF GOV. PALMER, OF ILLINOIS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The Senate Subcommittee on Louisiana, Senator Howe presiding, resumed their investigation at 11 o'clock this morning. O. M. Gifford, of Davenport, Iowa, was sworn, and testified: He is a manufacturer in Chicago, Ill.; was in Louisiana lately to examine national banks; has known Spearing over 20 years; was introduced to Littlefield by Spearing in New-Orleans on the 19th or 20th of December last; was invited to call on Gov. Wells at the Statehouse; on the way back from the State-house Littlefield asked witness what he thought of Wells; witness gave an answer conveying a favorable opinion of Wells; Spearing and Littlefield would give witness a list of items were done in Wells' room in the State-house; witness made an arrangement with them to meet him at his room that night, and they came accordingly; the conversation finally led to the statement by Littlefield and Spearing that they had been approached by prominent Democrats, among them Gov. Palmer, of Illinois, to tell for money what they knew about the Returning Board; Littlefield said he had been approached by Palmer, and could get $10,000 for "squealing." In reply to a question from witness, Littlefield said great frauds had been committed by the board in Vernon Parish; the returns from that parish gave nearly a solid vote for Tilden, but had been taken up again and altered so as to elect the State Senator and District Attorney whom Wells favored; witness asked Littlefield if he had any evidence to support his statement, and he replied he had, and took from his pocket a paper which he said was a copy of the Vernon Parish returns; witness looked at it, and remarked that he didn't think the paper amounted to much; Littlefield said the Democrats would give $50,000, and Spearing said, $100,000 for it; Littlefield proposed another meeting that night, when he said he would bring a minute-book showing the vote in 1872 and 1876, which would confirm his statements; he said it was necessary to act at once, and must be done that night, because he had been summoned before the committee in New-Orleans, and he didn't want to report, and meant to run away; he pressed witness to decide at once upon the matter, and said if witness didn't want to go into the scheme he had an arrangement with a Democratic friend, who would close with him in the speculation and divide; he said Judge Davenport, of Iowa, would manage the matter for them; witness asked what they wanted, and they suggested to witness to communicate with friends in Washington; witness consented, and telegraphed to Senator Allison; the following afternoon received a reply to the dispatch, and showed them the contents; witness has no copy of either dispatch; the reply was "that it was safe to consult Howe, and if that cannot be done come on to Washington;" they objected to witness' going to Howe, but witness did so, and told Howe what he had heard; Howe replied that the committee were there to expose all frauds, and the best thing witness could do would be to expose all he knew; Spearing and Littlefield both expressed dissatisfaction that witness had called on Howe, and asked what witness wanted to do and witness replied that he declined to have anything to do with them further; went with a portion of the committee afterward to see the jetties; subsequently witness conversed with Senator Wadleigh; witness was going to Texas and suggested to Wadleigh that he might hear from a man named Littlefield in Washington; Wadleigh said he was sorry Littlefield could not be brought before the New-Orleans Committee, and that he would sooner see Tilden inaugurated than Hayes elected by fraud; witness traveled with Mr. Collins to San Antonio; conversed confidentially with him; witness regrets to have to reveal his intercourse with Collins; called at his room and he said he had talked with Littlefield and Spearing; he said he had previously talked with them, and they had again come to him; witness advised him to tell the truth; Collins then went with them as it was a dead beat plan

A RUFFIAN IN THE TOMBS.

JOE COBURN SHOOTS TWO OFFICERS.

AN INOFFENSIVE POLICEMAN BRUTALLY ATTACKED IN THE PUBLIC STREET BY THE PRIZE-FIGHTER — COBURN FIRES TWO SHOTS AT OFFICER TOBIAS AND THREE AT OFFICER JERFIES—THE RUFFIAN IS ARRESTED AND LOCKED UP—PROMPT ACTION BY THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Brief mention was made in THE TIMES yesterday of a desperate encounter which occurred early in the morning, between "Joe" Coburn and two policemen of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, in the neighborhood of Broadway and Thirty-third street, during which the two officers were shot by Coburn. The full details of the affray are as follows: Coburn for several months past has kept a drinking place at No. 1,286 Broadway, which was the resort of roughs, of the most desperate character, who found a hospitable host in the proprietor. Frequent rows occurred in this place and on the sidewalk in front of it, and the Police were on a number of occasions compelled to interfere to prevent bloodshed. Capt. Williams, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, gave orders to the Police officers on the post to watch the place closely and not to allow any crowd to congregate in front of it. The fidelity with which the officers carried out their orders excited the ire of Coburn, who charged that the Police were endeavoring to break up his business by driving his customers from his establishment, and he threatened, it is said, to "get square" with the Police force by killing one or more of their members. He often boasted that there were not policemen enough in the precinct to take him to the station-house, and no doubt depended upon his influence with Democratic politicians for whom he had done good service in the past to shield him from punishment. He was particularly incensed against Patrolman William E. Tobias, who had Broadway to Thirty-fourth street for his night post, and who had on a number of occasions driven crowds of drunken and disorderly roughs from the street in front of Coburn's place. Coburn's desire for revenge culminated in the attack upon Officer Tobias yesterday morning. The policeman went on his post at midnight, and as, in the regular course of patrol, he passed Coburn's gin-mill, he noticed a coupé standing in front of the place. The driver of the coupé was absent. The officer passed to the end of his post and returned, finding the coupé still standing there, but no sign of the driver was to be discerned. As Tobias passed the place for the third time the coupé was still there, and as the officer had been directed not to allow hacks or coupés to stand in Broadway without their drivers, he opened the door of Coburn's place, and, putting his head in, called out: "Where's the driver of this coupé?" A young man who was sitting down in the bar-room replied that he was the driver. "Then," remarked Tobias, "why don't you come out and take care of it?" Coburn at this time (about 1:15 A. M.) was standing, bareheaded and in his shirt-sleeves, behind the bar. He had evidently been drinking and was in a quarrelsome mood. When he saw the officer he made a very indecent remark, to which the policeman made no reply, but closing the door after him, proceeded along his post.

As he approached Thirty-third street, he found that Coburn had rushed out of his saloon and was following him, accompanied by five or six of his associates. The officer turned about, and Coburn at once began abusing him, using the most filthy and indecent language. Tobias said to him: "I don't want you to intertere with me; you'd better go about your business." Coburn continued to abuse the officer. The latter turned to Coburn's friends and said to them: "Take this man away; he's drunk, and if he don't go away I'll take him in." Coburn, on hearing this remark, became highly incensed, and sprang at the officer like a tiger, endeavoring to seize him by the throat. The policeman jumped back, and threw up his arm to ward off the blows of his antagonist. Coburn slipped his hand into his pistol pocket, and pulled out a five-barreled revolver, of large calibre, and, aiming deliberately at the policeman, fired. Fortunately the officer divined his intention, and, throwing up his arm, struck the pistol the moment it was discharged and spoiled Coburn's aim. The bullet, however, passed through the officer's overcoat and struck him in the left breast inflicting a slight flesh-wound. At this juncture, Patrolman John Jerfies, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, who was on patrol in Thirty-third street, arrived at the spot and found officer Tobias scuffling with Coburn, and surrounded by a crowd of eight or ten ruffians, who were endeavoring to overpower him. Jerfies attempted to make his way into the crowd, to assist his comrade, but Coburn's friends surrounded him and pressed him against the wall of the building in front of which the affray occurred, with so much violence that he could not assist Tobias, nor could he use his club to defend himself or to give an alarm. While he was so hemmed in by the ruffians, Coburn fired a second shot at Tobias, the ball passing through the fleshy part of the policeman's left fore-arm, causing a painful wound. This shot placed Tobias hors de combat, and he ran out into the middle of Broadway and gave an alarm rap with his club, and called loudly for assistance. Jerfies by this time had released himself from those who had surrounded him, and attempted to arrest Coburn. The latter seized the officer by the throat, and placing the revolver near his breast fired again. The bullet struck one of the buttons on Jerfie's overcoat, and being deflected from its course passed through the officer's clothing and lodged in the left side, causing a slight flesh-wound. Coburn then fired two more shots at Jerfies, neither of which took effect. The officer then closed with Coburn, and after a short struggle they both fell, Coburn being uppermost. While lying on the form of the prostrate officer, Coburn struck him on the head with the butt of the revolver repeated blows, inflicting several fearful scalp wounds. Roundsman O'Neill and Patrolmen McGrath and Fanning now arrived, and the Roundsman seeing Coburn bearing Jerfies sprang upon him and dragged him off. A lively scrimmage then ensued between Coburn and the Roundsman, but the latter by a free use of his club soon subdued the belligerent pugilist and disarmed him. While going to the station-house Coburn again became violent, and it was found necessary to club him severely before he would cease his resistance. The officers while going to the Station-house were followed by a gang of desperate ruffians, friends of Coburn, who endeavored to rescue him, and a running fight was kept up until the arrival at Capt. Williams with a section of police from the station-house. The crowd was quickly dispersed and quiet restored.

It is a noticeable fact, and one which speaks very well for the discipline and forbearance of the Police, that during the entire melée not a shot was fired by the officers engaged in quelling the disturbance, although they were all armed with revolvers. Coburn on being taken to the station-house became very violent and used the most filthy and abusive language, and it required the combined efforts of four Police officers to put him into a cell. His injuries were attended to by Police Surgeon Satterlee. The Doctor also attended the wounded officers; and found their injuries to be severe, but not in any way dangerous. Jerfies' head was found to be pretty badly cut, but the wounds were all of the scalp, and the skull was not fractured. It will be some weeks, however, before they will be able to resume active duty.

Coburn was brought to the Washington Place Police Court yesterday morning by Capt. Williams. He was handcuffed and presented a woe-begone appearance. His head was covered with bandages and his face bore traces of his desperate encounter with the Police. Patrolmen Tobias and Jerfies each made a formal complaint against Coburn, and in the affidavits which they signed they told the story of the shooting substantially as given above. Justice Murray, who presided, asked the prisoner if he desired to cross-examine the complainants, and Coburn replied in a surly tone: "No; its no use asking them any questions; they've got all to say now." His formal examination was then taken as follows:

Court—What is your name? A.—Joseph Coburn.

Court—How old are you? A.—Forty-two years.

Court—Where were you born? A.—New-York City.

Court—Where do you live? A.—No. 100 West Thirty-second street.

Court—What is your occupation? A.—Saloon keeper.

Court—Have you anything to say, and if so, what, in relation to the charge preferred against you? A.—I am not guilty. I have nothing else to say. I deny everything. I deny that I shot at all. I deny shooting at the officers or at any one. I don't know why they make a charge against me.

The magistrate then committed him for trial, refusing to take bail in the case. Coburn was sent down to the Tombs handcuffed to a burglar.

Immediately after hearing the facts in the case District Attorney Phelps sent dispatches to the wounded officers, and secured their attendance before the Grand Jury. The case was promptly prepared for the consideration of the gentlemen on the Grand inquest by Chief Clerk Clark, and by noon two indictments for felonious assault with intent to kill Officers Tobias and Jerfies had been found. The prisoner was then sent for and brought before Judge Sutherland for arraignment. He appeared in court accompanied by his brother and two officers, and appeared to be pretty badly wounded. His head was completely swathed in bandages, and he appeared much under the influence. When his name was called he walked to the bar with somewhat of his old swagger, but the effort seemed to exhaust him, and he sank into a chair.

Mr. Edgar M. Chipman, counsel for Coburn, pleaded not guilty to both the indictments, and said that there was there presented the almost unprecedented spectacle of a man being indicted and arraigned for an offense alleged to have been committed a few hours before. He therefore moved that the accused be admitted to bail. He was, counsel urged, covered with wounds and bruises, and was a more fitting spectacle for the hospital than the Tombs. The accused was ready to give any reasonable amount of bail, and ought to be allowed the privilege to which he was entitled.

Assistant District Attorney Rollins opposed the motion to admit the prisoner to bail on the ground that the prosecution was ready to try the case at once.

Judge Sutherland took the papers and reserved his decision.

Coburn was then taken back to the Tombs. His counsel subsequently applied to the Prison Physician for a certificate of Coburn's condition, with a view of presenting it to the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, as the ground of an application for the removal of the accused from the Tombs to Bellevue Hospital. The District Attorney has placed the case on the calendar for trial for Monday next. In addition to the two indictments growing out of the affray with the officers, he will be tried on two old charges of assault, the complainants, in which, as alleged, were purchased by Coburn or his friends. One is an indictment for assaulting Thomas Cougner, of No. 1,262 Second avenue, a car driver, with the butt of a pistol, in May, 1874; the other an indictment for assaulting Nicholas McDermott, of No. 345 West Thirty-eighth street, on the 26th of January, 1876. The feeling against Coburn around the courts is intense, and it is broadly asserted that he is but shamming injury in order to excite sympathy.

This is not the first time that Coburn has been in conflict with the Police. During a tracas in Prince street, near Broadway, on the evening of Nov. 12, 1868, he stabbed Patrolman Samuel Davidson, then of the Eighth (now of the Fifteenth) Precinct, in the left breast, causing a wound which at one time was believed to be fatal. Henry Drake was his companion in that brawl. Notwithstanding his injury Davidson succeeded in arresting Coburn and his companion, so honorable mention was made of his conduct on that occasion by the then Board of Metropolitan Police. The wound was five inches deep and over an inch wide, and the blade penetrated to within one-eighth of an inch of his heart. On being brought to trial in the Court of General Sessions, Coburn pleaded guilty of felonious assault, and was sentenced to three and one-half years' imprisonment. He was a companion of Paddy Duffy, who some years after stabbed Officer Dyckman, of the Eighth Precinct, in Houston street, near Broadway, and nearly killed him. Coburn, while out on bail pending his trial for stabbing Officer Davidson, was arrested for stabbing a man on Eighth avenue in the left breast with an oyster knife. This charge was compromised, and was never brought to trial. He was arrested several times for shooting and beating his wife, Kitty Coburn, (now deceased,) but his political influence was sufficient to cause the "pigeonholing" of the indictments.

A FATHER'S CRIME.

HIS DAUGHTER CHARGES HIM WITH AN UNNATURAL OFFENSE—HE SUBSEQUENTLY ATTEMPTS TO MURDER HER.

Antonio Leon, a night watchman, employed in this City, entered yesterday morning the apartments of Rose Massimino, his married daughter, at No. 48 President street, Brooklyn, and deliberately attempted to murder her. Mrs. Massimino, who is only 19 years of age, was married about two months ago to John Massimino, engaged in business at No. 29 Old slip as a stevedore. Very soon after the marriage the woman confessed to her husband that she had been the victim of a horrible crime, and that her father was the guilty person. Massimino went to his father-in-law's house, at No. 294 South First street, Williamsburg, and, having satisfied himself of the truth of the charge made by his wife against her father, told the latter never to enter his (Massimino's) house again under penalty of death. About 7 o'clock yesterday morning, Leon, with his brother John, who is also employed as a night watchman in this City, crossed the Hamilton Avenue Ferry to Brooklyn, and walked directly to his daughter's house. Massimino passed Leon and his brother on the way to the ferry, and, in doing so, said "Good morning" to the latter. His father-in-law, on hearing the remark, said, looking to Massimino, "Get out of that; don't speak to that fellow," and then went directly to his daughter's house, and, without announcing himself, at once walked into her presence. Rose was in the kitchen at the time preparing breakfast for her father-in-law, who was in bed in a room adjoining. Fearing that he meant mischief, the daughter ran toward the latter room, but before she had entered it her father seized her and dragged her violently through the passage-way into the front parlor, closely followed by his brother John, who remained in his company through the terrible scene which ensued. The first words of the desperate man were, "I have come to kill you," and, drawing a pistol, he fired three shots at her in rapid succession, one of which grazed her head. The girl fell prostrate on the floor, and the latter stood over her with the smoking pistol still pointed at her head. He snapped it again and again, but he had either exhausted his ammunition or some disarrangement of the weapon took place, for it failed to go off. Meanwhile his brother and the old man Massimino, the latter of whom had been aroused by the noise of the struggle, had seized the would-be murderer, and taken away the pistol. His daughter then, supposing that she could make her escape, crawled toward the door; but the first movement in that direction caused her infuriated father to renew the attack, and again seizing the pistol, which had fallen to the floor, he threw her down by it, and pounded her over the head with the butt end until he had smashed it to pieces, and inflicted a score of ghastly wounds. By main strength he was dragged by his brother and the old man from the body of his bleeding victim and disarmed. He again succeeded, however, in freeing himself from their grasp, and, seizing a pair of shears which lay on the sofa, struck wildly around him, cutting Massimino on the left shoulder, and stabbing his daughter—who had meanwhile regained her feet, and covered with blood was staggering toward the door—several times on the head and right arm, which she had raised to defend herself. Finally, by a desperate effort, she freed herself, and running down stairs fell insensible at the entrance to the house.

The cries of the woman attracted a great crowd, and during the confusion Leon and his brother escaped. The latter was subsequently arrested at his residence in Williamsburg, but the Police, up to a late hour, had not succeeded in finding the would-be murderer. Dr. Meade arrived at Massimino's house soon after the murderous assault, and took the wounded woman and her father-in-law Nicholas, who received a stab in the shoulder, to the Long Island College Hospital. Dr. Meade told a TIMES reporter last evening that while the woman's injuries were of a serious nature, there was no immediate fear of death. The patient suffered principally from shock. On her head are about 25 small wounds. Most of these are contusions, and were caused by the butt of the pistol. Several, however, bear evidence of having been inflicted with a sharp instrument. The unfortunate woman voluntarily told the doctor of her father's unnatural crime, and attributed his attempt to murder her to the fact that her husband had been informed of his father-in-law's guilt. Mrs. Massimino says her uncle John tried to save her. Her father-in-law, Nicholas Massimino, went home after his wound was dressed.

DRESSED HOGS AT AUCTION.

The members of the Produce Exchange gathered outside the west door after the business hours yesterday, the occasion being the auction of two dressed hogs that stood on their heads on a truck in the street. To each was appended a certificate from the official weigher of the Exchange, placing their net weight at 873 and 870 pounds respectively. These hogs were two of 48 that were slaughtered together by John Taylor, at Trenton, on Monday last. Twenty of them came from the farm of Joseph Carter, and 28 from that of J. Harrison, neighbors at Cream Ridge, Burlington County, N. J. Mr. Carter's averaged 654 pounds, and Mr. Harrison's 613 pounds net. The heaviest weighed 905 pounds, including gut-fat, and was 20 months old. It is claimed that these were the best corn-fed lot of hogs ever slaughtered in this or any other country. At 2:15 the auctioneer mounted the truck, amid a shower of dough pellets and cries of "show your license," and asked what was bid for the "two Orphans." The first bid was 7½ cents per pound, and this was rapidly run up to 9 55-100, at which price they were knocked down to Mr. Augustus Bechstein.

BROOKLYN RETREAT FOR THE INSANE.

An association of ladies of excellent standing and much influence in Brooklyn, desire to establish a retreat for women in the incipient stages of insanity. The ladies who have undertaken this work believe that under the improved method of treating the insane, combined with cheerful surroundings, pleasant occupation, and out-door exercise, a much larger percentage of cures may be effected than has yet been attained in this country. A public meeting to forward the object will be held Monday evening, at Dr. Putnam's church, on Pierrepont street, corner of Monroe place. It will be addressed by Dr. Storrs and others.

THREE MEN INJURED.

Yesterday afternoon three laborers named Jeremiah Lawler, Maurice Flood, and Louis Stanbet, who were employed to assist bricklayers engaged in constructing an ice-house at Ringler's Brewery, Ninety-second street, and Third avenue, accidentally fell from the third-story to the basement of the brewery, and were seriously injured. They were removed to the Ninety-ninth Street Hospital, where their injuries were attended to. The accident was due to the falling of an elevator on which they were standing.

INSURANCE MATTERS.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE COMPANY.

FURTHER TESTIMONY BEFORE THE REFEREE —THE BOSTON AGENT DENIES THE CORRECTNESS OF THE ENTRIES IN THE BOOKS IN REFERENCE TO HIS AGENCY.

The taking of testimony in the matter of the Continental Life Insurance Company before Mr. William Allen Butler, the Referee, was resumed yesterday afternoon, at No. 20 Nassau street, when Mr. F. Barnett, the New-England agent of the concern, whose office was in Boston, was called and testified that he had been in the employ of the company since its incorporation; the accounts were settled every month regularly, and he never knew before this week that there was anything charged against him on the books. Mr. Moses then called for the book in which the agent's balances were entered, and referred to an entry against the Boston agency of $158,663 70. This amount the witness said was not due by him, nor could it by any possibility exist; such an amount never appeared upon the books of the agency, and had never been the subject of correspondence between himself and the officers of the company. Furthermore, the balance charged had never been mentioned to him in the remotest way. After the appointment of Mr. John J. Anderson as Receiver, certain instructions were received from that gentleman regarding the settlement of suits then pending; the balance in the Boston agency, $37,039 56, was retained there according to the terms of the contract; witness was a stockholder in the Continental and had been informed that he was elected a Director, but had never received official notice to that effect and never attended a meeting of the board; he still has his stock which was worth $2,000, in Boston; had never received any loan upon it from the company.

Mr. George W. Thomas, the book-keeper, was next called, and testified that the entry of $153,663 70 was for advances made to agents, and that it should have been charged up or credited to that agency long ago, as it was not an indebtedness, but represented advances made to agents as guarantees. At the time the Receiver was appointed there was about $1,000,000 of such advances on the books; this amount witness thought was not used in making up the annual statements. The witness was then questioned regarding the uncollected and deferred premiums, which were given in the last annual report at $696,221 81, and stated that they were placed at that high figure to swell the assets.

The next witness was Mr. Marvin E. Parrott, who, after submitting a list of the suits now pending against the company, testified that he learned in 1875 that Mr. Frost was a Director in the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company; witness knew nothing regarding a loan to that company of $75,000.

John J. Anderson, the former Receiver, was recalled, and admitted his connection with the Hope and New Jersey Mutual Companies; he did not, he said, receive a portion of $77,000 which was given for the reinsurance of the latter company's risks by the former; he was in the West when the contract was made; the contract in question, he averred, was not made for the purpose of putting $200,000 in hopeless mortgages in the company. Mr. Anderson said he desired to explain now the amount, $314,000, which was transferred to the New-Jersey Mutual, was got; the three receipts given by the last-named company to the Continental amounted to $306,000, and the other $8,000 was added for the interest on the United States bonds, $75,000 of which were among the securities transferred.

Mr. John A. Bragg, formerly a Director of the New-Jersey Mutual, and a stockholder in the Hope Life Insurance Company, of this City, was placed on the stand and put through a long examination by Mr. Raphael J. Moses regarding the reinsurance of that company by the latter, and the subsequent reinsurance of the Hope by the New-Jersey, and the connection therewith of L. W. Frost, but his testimony elicited no new facts.

L. V. Stiles, the Cashier of the Continental, testified that he had never seen the contract for the purchase of policies by Rufus L. Frost and W. R. Blake; witness received a number of premium notes with the initials W. R. B. on them, which were duly paid. The witness was questioned regarding the amount paid to Blake under the contract, and a reference to the books revealed the fact that he had received about $25,000. The contract was read in evidence, and it provided that Blake should receive 20 per cent. of the reserve for every policy changed or purchased; witness identified the handwriting as that of R. C. Frost. The hearing was then adjourned.

LOOKING FOR MR. NOYES.

When Benjamin Noyes, the President of the National Capitol Life Insurance Company, of Washington, D. C., learned on Thursday evening last that Justice Pratt had issued a writ of ne exeat against him at the suit of William R. Grace, Receiver of the Continental Life Insurance Company, to prevent his leaving this State, he at once made preparations to avoid the service of the papers, and although he had been ill for two days and unable to go to his office, he left his hotel, and has not been seen since except by his most trusted friends. He had been stopping at the Astor House, and inquiry made there yesterday failed to elicit any information regarding his whereabouts. A number of letters had been received for him, and he sent a boy for these with an order. Up to a late hour yesterday afternoon the papers had not been served upon him, and it is believed that he is trying to evade the officers.

THEY DON'T WANT HIM.

A PETITION TO THE SENATE PROTESTING AGAINST THE REMOVAL OF MR. WILLIAM SMYTH, THE PRESENT ACTING INSURANCE SUPERINTENDENT.

The following petition, signed by policyholders in the Continental, Security, and National Life Insurance Companies, of this State, whose names are appended, was on Thursday last sent to Senator Francis M. Bixby for presentation to the State Senate:

To the Honorable the Senate of the State of New-York:

The petitioners, policy-holders in the Continental Life Insurance Company, the National Life Insurance Company, and the Security Life Insurance Company, of New York, respectfully pray your honorable body to protect them from the consequences of a proposed change in the head of the Insurance Department of the State of New-York. Your petitioners beg to draw your attention to the fact that great malpractices and frauds have, for many years, been carried on with perfect impunity by certain life insurance companies, under the supervision of the said department, and that no check has been given, no exposure made, and no punishment inflicted through or by the heads of the said department until within the last few months, and by no other State insurance officer than William Smyth, the present Acting Insurance Superintendent.

Your petitioners most respectfully represent that the said William Smyth is now actively engaged in the most thorough and conscientious performance of his duties, and that he has already done more for the purification of the business of life insurance from corruption, embezzlement, deception, fraud, and perjury than has ever been accomplished, or even attempted, by any or all of his predecessors in office.

Your petitioners beg also to state that they have watched Mr. Smyth's proceedings, and have become convinced that he has undertaken his present work of cleansing the business of life insurance from its accumulated evils, after a long and thoughtful study of the subject, and from the most upright, pure, and public spirited motives; that he has, by study and thought, fitted himself for the task, and will certainly fulfill it completely, if influences are not brought to bear to shield and save the guilty from his just and retributive proceedings; that his removal under these circumstances will be an act of great public wrong and impolicy; that no successor to him can be appointed who can perform the duties he has undertaken without long preparation in acquiring his knowledge and experience in the subject; that he, the said William Smyth, has proved himself to be an honest, resolute, and incorruptible public officer, and that his removal at this conjuncture will be a triumph for the culprits he is engaged in punishing, a discouragement to all faithful public officers pursuing a similar righteous course, and will in effect be equivalent to the escape from justice of faithless, defaulting, robbing, and defrauding officers in life insurance companies, and to the desertion and betrayal of their policy-holders and the cause of the widows and orphans upon whose portion these heartless offenders have so long been preying.

Your petitioners do, therefore, most earnestly and respectfully pray that your honorable body will refuse to confirm any appointment designed to supercede the present Insurance Superintendent, William Smyth, until he has completed his exposure of life insurance frauds, and brought the guilty parties to justice.

MISSOURI INSURANCE COMPANIES.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 16.—In the matter of the St. Louis Mutual Life Insurance Company, which has been before the Circuit Court for some time past, Judge Wickham to-day entered a final decree, forever debarring it from further prosecuting business, and turning all its property over to the Receivers recently appointed. All claims against the company may be presented to the court by petition, after which they will be referred to Judge Thomas T. Gantt, who has been appointed special Referee to determine all such demands. W. R. Walker, Assignee of the North Missouri Insurance Company, now in bankruptcy, filed a suit to-day in the United States District Court against Joseph F. Reisher and John F. Williams, Directors of the company, for $136,000 assets of the company claimed by the Assignee to have been misappropriated. Williams is the present Speaker of the Missouri House of Representatives.

THE KING SUITS.

NEGOTIATIONS LOOKING TO A SETTLEMENT OF THE SUITS AGAINST TWEED—A LETTER FROM THE LATTER TO CHARLES O'CONOR.

There have been rumors from time to time for several months past in regard to an early settlement of what are known as the King suits. During the past few days, however, these rumors have assumed definite shape, and there is now no doubt that negotiations have been in progress looking to a settlement of some of the cases, notably those in which Tweed is concerned. With reference to Connolly it is said that ex-Surrogate Hutchings, who left for Europe some months ago, is now engaged in endeavoring to smooth the path for the return of the ex-Controller, whose son-in-law Mr. Hutchings is. Sweeny is expected in this City in a few weeks, but no steps, as far as can be ascertained, have been made for a settlement of his case. His counsel, Mr. McKeon, has always professed a willingness to go to trial with the suits, and the general impression is that the people's case against Sweeny is a rather poor one, owing to the lack of competent evidence. In regard to Tweed, however, the case is different. He was once convicted on a criminal charge, and a verdict was recovered against him in the $6,000,000 suit, which the Supreme Court, General Term, has affirmed. A year's imprisonment in the Penitentiary and the subsequent confinement in Ludlow Street Jail have not tended to reconcile Tweed to his lot, and he has recently made overtures of settlement. Mr. O'Conor, apparently recognizing the futility of the efforts against the Ring, has signified his approval of measures looking toward a restitution of even a portion of the money stolen from the City. The way has been carefully fell all through the negotiations, and they have finally resulted in what look to be the preliminary steps to a settlement. Tweed has sent a letter to Charles O'Conor within the past few days in which he expresses his disgust at the continued litigations in which he has been involved. In this letter Tweed expresses his entire willingness to stop further litigation on his part if the prosecution will let him alone. He professes to be very poor, but expresses his willingness to make restitution as far as is in his power. Steps have also been taken to collect some of the claims which Tweed has against various persons. From present appearances it would seem that the suits against Tweed will be settled, and for a very small amount. Whether Tweed will consent to appear as a witness for the people in the Sweeny suit, and in other prosecutions against persons not sued hitherto, is a matter about which there seems to be as yet some doubt.

INVESTIGATING A CHARITY.

FURTHER PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE MANAGEMENT OF THE NEW-YORK JUVENILE GUARDIAN SOCIETY—THE MATTER TO BE THOROUGHLY SIFTED.

The Committee of the State Board of Charities, consisting of Messrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Henry L. Hoguet, and Mrs. C. R. Lowell, engaged in the investigation of the affairs of the New-York Juvenile Guardian Society, held their second session in the New-York office of the board yesterday. The object of the meeting was for the purpose of hearing the witnesses who had been subpœnaed to testify in behalf of Mr. D. F. Robertson, the Secretary of the society, against whom charges had been preferred. None of Mr. Robertson's witnesses came forward, however, and in explanation a letter was received from him protesting against the secret manner of examining witnesses without giving him an opportunity of being present and allowing them to be cross-questioned, and also requesting permission to be present at any future examination of its affairs.

Mr. Stephen Pell, who was Treasurer of the association from April, 1874, to March, 1875, appeared, with a transcript made from his books, showing the amount of money received and disbursed by him during his term of office. Following is a synopsis:

Amount of money received on account of the New-York Juvenile Guardian Society as shown on Treasurer's books, from April 16, 1874, to March 10, 1875		$7,932 73
Loans	$575 00
Rent of rooms in building No. 101 St. Mark's place	175 00
Collections	7,182 73	7,932 73
DISBURSEMENTS.
Interest on bond and mortgage	$1,390 00
Commission to collectors	1,151 00
Paid to Mr. Robertson	1,999 62
Insurance	50 25
Other bills and back indebtedness	3,357 09
Cash on hand	104 74	7,932 73

The disbursements for expenses (included in the above under the item of "other bills and back indebtedness") were $1,157 13, of which $125 were for teachers' back pay.

Mr. Hoguet, after examining the statement presented by Mr. Pell, asked him whether he had kept the books of the institution. Mr. Pell replied that he had not; he had only acted as Treasurer, and received the money as it came in, and paid it out on vouchers approved by two members of the Financial Committee, Messrs. Jeremiah E. Cary and Ambrose Wood; Mr. Robertson always had a sufficient number of vouchers in his pocket to take up all the money he (the Treasurer) could give him. In answer to another question by Mr. Hoguet, Mr. Pell said that the society was in debt at least $5,000 when he entered upon his duties. He then explained that when he took charge he tried to find out how much the society owed, and found that there was an indebtedness of at least $10,000. The society was in debt to every one with whom they had dealings. There were also $300 to $400 owing to teachers for unpaid salaries. Mr. Hoguet asked the witness why, upon finding the concern in financial difficulties, he had not insisted upon having a full statement. Mr. Pell answered that he had applied to Mr. Robertson for the information, but had been put off by him from time to time, until at last his term of office had expired, leaving him no wiser than he was before. Mr. Hoguet then asked him whether it had ever occurred to him, as Treasurer of the society, that a concern, the actual income of which was less than $8,000, from contributions from the public, could or ought justly to owe $5,000. Mr. Pell replied that when he entered the society he did not know what its annual income really was, and had no means of ascertaining until he had received the money.

Mr. Hoguet then referred to the application made by the society in the present month to the Controller, asking an appropriation of $10,000. He asked Mr. Pell whether he thought the statement contained in that application, to the effect that the society held its house in St. Mark's place in fee, was a proper one to make, in view of the fact that it was mortgaged to its full value. Mr. Pell replied, emphatically, that he did not.

On Monday last Mr. Robertson appeared before the committee, accompanied by his counsel, Mr. Lansing, and asked to be informed when he could appear before them with his witnesses. He was told that yesterday would be set apart for hearing all whom he might desire to bring forward, but instead of producing his witnesses he sent the letter above referred to to the committee. Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, speaking in the name of the committee, said, with regard to this communication, that the rule adopted by the committee was that where there was only a simple charge against some one person connected with the management of a society—where it was a really good society, and where the Directors were trying to make it a good charity—the committee were disposed to keep the investigation secret; but where it was a case like the present, which had already been publicly investigated, they considered it proper that it should be a public investigation and the testimony made public as it was taken.

The next session of the committee will be held on Wednesday next at 9:30 A. M., for which time the members of the board of the association and the persons who signed the application to the Controller of the City for the appropriation of $10,000 for the society have been subpœnaed to appear.

AN ALLEGED SWINDLE.

Mr. William Powers, of Springfield, N. H., sent a letter to Mayor Ely, which was received by him yesterday stating that he bought a ticket in a Laramie City lottery, and that he subsequently received a notice signed "Russell & Co., Jewelers, No. 37 Bond street, New-York," advising him that he had drawn a gold watch and chain valued at $200, and that the prize would be forwarded to him on payment of $20, the latter being the amount due on it. Mr. Powers requests the Mayor to call upon Messrs. Russell & Co. about the matter, and says that he will "pay him for his trouble." He adds that "if this is a swindle" the Mayor knows what to do. The Mayor handed the letter to Capt. Welsh, of the Twenty-sixth Precinct, for investigation.

WASHINGTON.

RANDALL'S INSULT TO THE SENATE.

ACTION OF THE HOUSE ON THE DECISION OF THE LOUISIANA CASE—AN UNPRECEDENTED RULING BY THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER—THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE REFUSED RECOGNITION—A PARTISAN POWER NEVER BEFORE ASSUMED BY ANY PRESIDING OFFICER—OUTRAGEOUS TREATMENT OF A REPUBLICAN MEMBER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—To-day the Democratic members of the House exhibited very bitter feeling over the decision of the Louisiana case. It came so suddenly upon them last evening, and was so entirely different from what they had from some cause brought themselves to expect, that they were thrown into a state of demoralization which for the time prevented them from collecting themselves sufficiently to express the utter disappointment caused by the decision. This morning they were early at the Capitol, notice having been served last night upon each Democratic member to be in his place in the House at 10 o'clock. Most of them were present at the hour designated, and as a recess was immediately taken until noon they had abundant opportunity to mingle and talk over the situation. Except a few of the leaders who were assembled in the Speaker's room, the Democrats, during the recess, gathered in groups on the floor, each group forming an informal indignation meeting for the purpose of denouncing the majority of the Commission.

In the Speaker's rooms were assembled Speaker Randall, Mr. Lamar, Chairman of the Democratic caucus; Messrs. Morrison, Cox, Hewitt, Springer, Field, and others, devising a programme of proceedings. It was finally determined by these leaders that the joint convention should not be assembled until an opportunity was had to hold a formal caucus, and accordingly the resolution for a joint meeting on Monday was prepared, which Lamar offered immediately following the reading of the journal. When the House was called, at 12 o'clock, the journal was read through in order to give time and opportunity for privately instructing the Democrats of the programme adopted in the Speaker's room. The reading of the journal had not proceeded far when the Secretary of the Senate appeared with a message announcing that the Senate was prepared to meet the House in joint convention to continue the Electoral count. Contrary to all precedent, Speaker Randall paid no attention to the Secretary of the Senate, forcing him to stand without recognition for nearly an hour. This was a deliberate indignity which cannot be justified under any circumstances, and which, in this instance, was aggravated by the fact that the communication from the Senate, no matter when made, could have no possible effect on any contemplated action of the House. The reading of the journal completed, Mr. Lamar was recognized to introduce his resolution informing the Senate that the House would be prepared to reassemble in joint convention at 11 o'clock Monday morning. The previous question was moved, when Mr. Kasson arose, but before he uttered ten words a howl came from the Democratic side, and thus encouraged, the Speaker was proceeding to take the sense of the House, entirely ignoring Mr. Kasson, when that gentleman called out that he rose to submit a question of privilege, and insisted upon his right to recognition. Mr. Kasson's determined manner induced the Speaker to halt, and to snappishly inquire, "What is the question of privilege?" Mr. Kasson directed attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Senate had been waiting for some time to deliver a message from the Senate, and that he should be received before the vote was taken on Lamar's resolution. The Speaker ruled that to be no privileged question, and, amid yells for the regular order from the Democratic side, the Speaker angrily commanded Mr. Kasson to resume his seat. The question was put on Lamar's resolution and carried by a vote of yeas 152, nays, 111. The Secretary of the Senate was compelled to stand through the roll-call, but upon its completion, and before announcing the result, Speaker Randall recognized him, and the communication from the Senate was delivered. Nine Democrats voted against the resolution, and the same number also voted against the recess until Monday, which was moved by Mr. Lamar immediately upon adoption of his resolution.

Speaker Randall's refusal to receive the message from the Senate was based on the idea that the violation of the Electoral Commission law could be in some way better defended if the record were to show that there was no previous notice received of the readiness of the Senate to proceed with the count. Randall knew the nature of the message, and because he knew it declined to recognize Secretary Gorham to receive it. This is a power never assumed by a presiding officer of either House, and one week ago, on a similar occasion, Randall interrupted the roll-call to receive the message. The power he exercised to-day is one by which in the closing days of a session the Speaker could defeat entirely important legislation. Randall's action was discourteous, violent, and outrageous, and probably no other Democrat in Congress in his position would have been so devoid of decency and shame as to have acted so improperly.

YESTERDAY'S ACTION IN THE HOUSE.

THE COURSE PURSUED BY THE DEMOCRATS ENTIRELY UNEXPECTED—A WEAK EXCUSE GIVEN BY THE LEADERS—MEMBERS OF THE PARTY WHO ARE LIABLE TO KICK OVER THE TRACES—A GREAT DIVERSITY OF OPINION AND INTERESTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb 17.—The action of the House to-day was unexpected in its method, though not in its result. It was supposed the Democrats would allow the joint meeting to be held, and would present objections to the decision in the case of Louisiana, and then take a recess till Monday, as was done when Florida was brought into the convention. Instead, they determined not to have a joint meeting till Monday. This is clearly a violation of the spirit of the law, and almost certainly of the letter as well. If the resolution was passed in good faith, the question of its strict legality might be waived, and it is asserted by nearly all leading Democrats that the party will stand by the results of the law, and some of them profess to expect the entire vote will be counted by the end of next week. Some of them have given as a reason for deserving a little delay now that there are 30 or more of their men in the House who are hot-headed and rash, and who can only be kept under control by careful management. This refers to such people as Springer, of Illinois, and Thompson, of Massachusetts. The latter has become infinitely more of a nuisance than Springer. He goes around the Capitol haranguing little bands of Democrats wherever he can get them together. He talks in a wildly excited manner, and at times about the Commission, and presents some symptoms of incipient insanity. It is said that he regards the rejection by the Commission of his Florida report as a personal affront. The leaders may be sincere in their expressed determination not to delay and filibuster, but their actions do not seem so, for while professing not to intend delay they do delay, and only nine Democrats, and they not prominent in the party, voted against deferring the count till Monday. It is the universal belief that on Monday a further recess will be taken till Tuesday before the States are counted down to Oregon. This is mere conjecture, but the caucus which meets at the Capitol to-night, and which may possibly continue in session till too late an hour to learn before to-morrow what was agreed upon, may decide definitely upon a course to be pursued.

There is a great diversity of opinion, feeling, and interests in the Democratic ranks, and Republicans generally rather hope that the revolutionists will prove strong enough to make the attempt at delay formidable, the common belief being that such a fact would lead to a speedy disruption of the party. The excitement is intense, but a remarkable feature of it which still continues is the personal restraint that has prevented not only violent altercations, but even angry words. Everything said is in the best of good nature, and the hot display of Mr. Hewitt on the floor of the House to-day was the nearest approach there has yet been to violence or any encounter. The action of the caucus, when known, may make plain the future, which is now considerably clouded by Thompson, Springer, and their like.

THE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

THE PROCEEDINGS MORE PACIFIC THAN ANTICIPATED—NORTHERN DEMOCRATS MORE REVOLUTIONARY THAN THEIR SOUTHERN ASSOCIATES—DAVID DUDLEY FIELD'S VINDICTIVENESS—THE RESOLUTIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The Democratic caucus to-night was attended by over 100 members, and in the general character of the proceedings was more pacific than was anticipated. Mr. Cochrane, of Pennsylvania, introduced a resolution, preceded by two or three long preambles, setting forth that the majority of the Electoral Commission had disregarded their oaths and refused to obey the law, thereby defeating the will of the people, and resolving that it is the duty of the House of Representatives to defeat the fraudulent action of the Commission by all means known to the Constitution and the laws, to this end interposing dilatory motions when available, objecting to the votes of States yet to be called, to the end that the inauguration of a usurper may be defeated. This resolution was advocated by Cochrane, Hurd, Southard, of Ohio; Lynde, of Wisconsin, and Thompson, of Massachusetts, who made the most bitter and vehement speech of the evening. John Young Brown, of Kentucky; Reagan, of Texas; Singleton, of Mississippi, and Hill, of Georgia, opposed the resolution, each of these gentlemen denouncing it as unwise, unpatriotic, and revolutionary. Those who advocated it argued that it would be preferable to submit to an interregnum in the Presidency, the elevation of the President pro tem. of the Senate, or a new election, rather than permit the inauguration of Hayes. Finally, Mr. Reagan offered a substitute for Cochrane's revolutionary measure, declaring that the House will not interpose irregular or dilatory act on to the further count of the Electoral vote, but that the count shall proceed in the mode prescribed by the Electoral act, carrying out in good faith all its conditions. Mr. Bright, of Tennessee, offered an amendment to this resolution that the House of Representatives protests against the shameful and fraudulent decision by the majority of the Commission in the case of the States of Florida and Louisiana. This resolution, together with the amendment, was adopted by a vote of two to one.

David Dudley Field came to the front with a resolution calling for another caucus on Monday night, and the appointment of a committee of five to report upon the propriety of stopping the appropriations for the coming year for the Army. Mr. Willis, of New-York, moved to table Field's resolution when, Field withdrew it. The caucus adjourned about 11 o'clock. It is noticeable that the Southern members acted almost solidly against the extreme measures proposed, and made all the pacific speeches that were uttered. Mr. Cochrane's preamble and resolutions were as follows:

Whereas, The Electoral Commission was created in good faith, with a view to the examination of evidence and all questions which pertain to the disputed votes of Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon; and whereas, said Commission, in disregard of their oaths, fraudulently refused to obey the law and the will of the people by defeating such examination; therefore

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress, which it owes to the Democratic Party and the American people, to defeat the fraudulent acts of said Commission by all the means known to the Constitution and laws, to the end that all possible delays may be interposed, dilatory motions made, and objections interposed to the vote of every State yet to be counted, with the view of multiplying issues, and thereby defeating the inauguration of a usurper.

Mr. Reagan's substitute was as follows:

Resolved, That the count of the Electoral vote shall proceed without dilatory opposition to the ordinary execution of the act of Congress creating the Electoral Commission, whose decisions shall be received and acted upon in accordance with the provisions of the said law.

Mr. Bright's amendment, which was adopted, was as follows:

"But this resolution is accompanied with the solemn and earnest protest of the Democratic Party against the gross and shameless violations of law, justice, and truth contained in the decisions of the majority who signed the same in the cases of Florida and Louisiana."

The following resolution was offered by Mr. Walling, of Ohio, but received only 13 votes:

Resolved, That, in view of the fact that the so-called Electoral Commission have refused to receive evidence of the frauds charged in the recent elections, or the ineligibility of Electors, it is our duty, as representatives of the people, to do no further legislation recognizing said Commission, or meet in joint session to further the count of the Electoral vote under its decisions.

HEWITT FORCED TO APOLOGIZE.

DEMOCRATIC BITTERNESS ILLUSTRATED—A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS GROSSLY INSULTED BY A NEW-YORK CONGRESSMAN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—A scene occurred during the brief session of the House to-day which serves to illustrate the bitterness of feeling existing among the Democratic leaders. When Mr. Lamar offered his resolution for reassembling in joint convention on Monday, Mr. Bliss, of New-York, who was sitting directly behind Mr. Baker, of Indiana, inquired of him, "What does this mean?" Baker replied, "It means filibustering." Mr. Abram S. Hewitt sits next to Baker, and overhearing the question and Baker's answer, turned to Baker, and, with much warmth and emphasis, said: "That's a d——d lie." Hewitt's insulting remark was exploded with so much force that it was heard several seats distant, causing those members in the immediate vicinity of the parties to rise in anticipation of a personal collision. Baker afterward informed Hewitt that he had wantonly insulted him, and that he would hold him responsible for it, when Hewitt apologized for his choleric conduct. This incident occasioned a great deal of comment, and Hewitt is universally condemned for his ebullition of passion and violation of decency. His apology was entirely satisfactory to Mr. Baker.

THE HAND OF TILDEN.

PELTON BUYS ALL THE COPIES OF "SLATER'S CODE-BOOK" TO BE FOUND IN NEW-YORK—SOMETHING FOR THE SENATE COMMITTEE TO LOOK INTO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—It has been ascertained in New-York that the cipher dictionary used by the Democrats in the concoction of the Oregon villainy is known as Slater's Code-Book, and was purchased from Charles Wiley, a bookseller, at No. 15 Astor place. About two weeks after election, Tilden's nephew, Col. William T. Pelton, called at the store and purchased two of the books. These were undoubtedly used in the celebrated cipher correspondence with Grover, relative to the decision in the case of Watts, the Oregon Elector. Subsequently, on the 8th of December, Pelton again appeared and purchased four copies more, supposing that number to be all that remained in the store. On the 16th of December another of the books was bought for the use of the Democratic Committee at the Everett House, and on the 18th and 19th respectively, two more of them were sought out and purchased by well-known Democrats. The name of the buyer on the date last mentioned is unknown, but as he delayed payment until Jan. 8, and some difficulty was experienced in collecting the bill, it is surmised that it was Tilden himself. On the 22d of December Pelton, or some one else for him, bought all the remaining Code Books in the store—three in number. Mr. Wiley refuses to give the names of the purchasers, but it has been ascertained beyond doubt that they are as above stated. He says that he has had frequent calls for the book since, and could have easily sold 50 copies. The price of the work was $3 50. When Pelton first called he was shown an A B C signal book, but said that he preferred "Slater's," as that was the safest.

SENATOR KELLY'S EXPLANATION.

WHAT HE KNEW ABOUT TILDEN'S ATTEMPT TO BUY AN ELECTORAL VOTE—COL. PELTON AND HIS PRINCIPAL IN GRAMERCY PARK CHARGED WITH RASCALITY—WHERE THE MONEY SENT TO OREGAN CAME FROM.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The explanation of Senator Kelly to-day in the Senate of his Oregon correspondence was the same in substance as the brief statement in THE TIMES a day or two ago. He enlarged that statement, and read all the telegrams with an emphasis that made the sense clear where they have seemed blind. By reading them he secured their printing in the Record, a result he could not have had in mind. He put the dispatches together in order of time, showing that he was entirely familiar with them. His defense went only to the extent of helping himself out of the criminal conspiracy, and in attempting this he found it necessary to charge Patrick with rascality. Mr. Kelly is so fat-witted that he did not comprehend that when he was charging Patrick with cheating he was directly charging the same conduct upon Pelton and Pelton's principal, for whether Kelly understood Patrick's corrupt proposition or not, it is clear that the New-York parties did, and approved it if the fee could be made contingent on Tilden's inauguration. The Democratic Senators were generally in their seats, and they saw the effect of Kelly's story if it were believed, and they looked anything but pleased. Kelly's explanation is generally held to be entirely incredible, and he can only give assurance of his sincerity by submitting himself to examination under oath by the committee.

That the money sent to Oregon came from Tilden's private account is made daily more certain by the attempts to prevent investigation. The Cashier of the bank, Mr. Jordan, refuses to testify, and if the money had been taken from other funds he would have been instructed, no doubt, by Mr. Tilden, to present evidence of that fact. Tilden now is in such bad odor, even with the Democracy, that if a new election were to be held, he could not get the nomination from their convention.

CLAIM OF LOUISIANA DEMOCRATS.

HOW THEY HOPE TO SECURE CONTROL OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT—THEY WILL SUPPORT PRESIDENT HAYES IF MR. NICHOLLS IS RECOGNIZED AS GOVERNOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Since the decision rendered by the Electoral Commission yesterday, the Democrats of Louisiana have given up all hope of seating Mr. Tilden in the Presidential chair. Their one hope now is to secure control of their State Government, and to that end they are straining every nerve. Their programme is to appeal to the Hayes Administration for a recognition of Nicholls and the other Democratic State officers, and should this fail, as they expect it will, their next action will be in the courts. They will claim that although the Returning Board had power to canvass the returns for Presidential Electors, it had no power to count or declare the vote for Governor and Lieutenant Governor. This claim they base upon a clause in the State Constitution adopted in 1868, which provides that the Legislature and not the Returning Board has power to canvass the vote for State offices. The Louisiana politicians here are among the most conservative Democrats, and they now state that if they can secure a recognition of Nicholls and his Government under the clause of the Constitution named, they will be willing to support and sustain President Hayes and his Administration with every power and all the influence which they possess.

WHY TROOPS WERE SENT SOUTH.

THE ELECTION IN VIRGINIA—THE MILITARY NECESSARY TO PRESERVE THE PEACE—FREEDMEN PROTECTED FROM INTIMIDATION WHEREVER SOLDIERS ARE STATIONED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—L. L. Lewis, United States District Attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia, was before Mr. Goode's committee to-day, and testified that the only apprehensions of trouble were occasioned by editorials in the city papers at Petersburg before election time, and speeches made by canvassers; did not actually see any necessity for the presence of troops, although the colored Republicans feared from the above reasons that trouble would ensue; was not in Petersburg on election day.

C. P. Ramsdell, a United States Marshal for the Eastern District of Virginia, testified that he wrote letters to Attorney General Taft in October last; in the election of 1874 witness received telegrams from Attorney General Williams to the effect that if such disturbances as mentioned in the letters written by witness occurred again it would be necessary to summon United States troops to his assistance in preserving the peace, but he hoped that such a step would not be resorted to unless absolutely necessary; four days after the May election of 1876, Edward Edwards was frightfully beaten and also shot, and when the November elections were near at hand he was visited by a number of persons, among them many ladies, who begged witness to use every effort to preserve the peace; he feared that disturbances of a more violent nature would take place, hence his letters to the Attorney General; witness appointed 142 Deputy Marshals; among these there were only two Conservatives who served; there was no pay attached to the offices; witness was ordered to Petersburg by the President to stay there and preserve the peace; the November elections were exceedingly quiet, and the number of troops present were 24 privates and two officers.

C. P. Ramsdell, United States Marshal, testified that his impression was that the presence of military at Petersburg on Nov. 7 tended to preserve peace and encourage a free and fair expression of the vote, although the Petersburg community is as lawabiding as any other he knew of. He also stated that the United States Court was in session on that day, at Jarrett's Hotel, by order of the President.

B. W. Hoxsey, Assistant District Attorney, who resides at Culpepper, Va., stated that he was at Petersburg on the day of the last election by order of the President; that he was, in fact, the immediate cause of troops being sent there. He went to Washington in consequence of a telegram received from the Chief Supervisor of Elections, and saw the Attorney General and Gen. Sherman. He said that from his previous experience he did not believe that any municipal authorities in Virginia would allow the full black vote to be cast in any place where it predominated. He stated, however, that at the November election at Petersburg no disturbance occured at any poll; no United States Marshal made an arrest, and the Mayor maintained the peace on that day.

The committee then adjourned until Monday.

GOV. TILDEN'S BANK ACCOUNT.

THE CASHIER OF THE THIRD NATIONAL BANK BEFORE A SENATE COMMITTEE—HE REFUSES TO PRODUCE TILDEN'S ACCOUNT AND WILL BE REPORTED FOR CONTEMPT—TESTIMONY OF THE BANK PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Conrad N. Jordan, Cashier of the Third National Bank of New-York, was before the Senate Sub-committee on Privileges and Elections this morning. Senator Mitchell questioned the witness as to his knowledge of sums of money having been sent from New-York to Oregon since the late election, and the witness declined to answer all questions on that subject, or to produce the books and papers called for in the subpœna served on him until he has consulted with his lawyer. He stated that he had consulted with no one, save the President and Directors of his bank, since the subpœna was served on him; witness further refused to state what advice had been given him by the President and Directors of his bank when he consulted them relative to the subpœna served on him calling for a statement of the accounts at his bank of Samuel J. Tilden, A. S. Hewitt, and W. T. Pelton.

James B. Weaver, proprietor of the Everett House, New-York, was called and examined by Senator Mitchell. He stated that they were in the habit at his house, during the late political campaign, of cashing checks and orders drawn by Col. W. T. Pelton; the checks drawn by Pelton were on the Hanover Bank of New-York; he does not know that there was any money deposited with his Cashier for political purposes during the months of October and November last, except $5,000; this sum was deposited by Mr. Lamont, of the New-York State Democratic Committee, and witness knows nothing of the way in which it was disbursed; the National Democratic Committee had rooms at his hotel during the last political campaign.

John W. Ellis, President of the Third National Bank of New-York, was before the committee this afternoon and made, under oath, a statement similar to the one made by him to the Chairman of the Sub-committee [Senator Mitchell] yesterday. He stated that he knew of the issuing of a subpœna to Mr. Jordan, in which certain books and papers were called for; he spoke to Mr. Jordan on this subject and Mr. Jordan informed witness that he had received another dispatch telling him that he [Mr. Jordan] need not come to Washington; witness does not know who sent the dispatch, and Jordan thinks it bore no signature; he first learned of Jordan's being in contempt by reading the morning papers of a few days since; he went to Mr. Jordan immediately and asked him how it was, and, after conversing with him for a time, left with the impression on his mind that Jordan was to obey the subpœna as first issued. In fact, Jordan wrote a dispatch in the presence of witness in which he stated to Senator Morton that he would come to Washington immediately. The witness stated, in reply to Senator Kernan, that he and the members of his firm—Winslow, Lanier & Co.—are all Republicans, and also that "Mr. Jordan was a Republican, but Mr. Tilden bull-dozed the Republicanism out of him this time."

Mr. Jordan was recalled, and questioned by Senator Mitchell relative to the dispatch which he received imorming him that he need not come to Washington in answer to the subpœna of the committee. Mr. Jordan stated that the dispatch was not sent to him, but it was brought to the Third National Bank and given him to read. He declined to say who the dispatch was sent to, and who brought it to him at the bank, until he has consulted his counsel as to his answer; he did not tell Mr. Ellis that he had received a dispatch telling him that he [witness] need not come to Washington, but he told Mr. Ellis that he had seen such a dispatch; the dispatch was not shown him by W. T. Pelton; he has not seen Pelton since his [witness'] arrival in Washington; he has advised with no person or persons relative to the course which he is at present persuing in refusing to answer questions, and intimated that he thought questions were being asked which were improper. He also stated that he would make his answer when he was taken to the bar of the Senate. He stated in reply to Senator Logan that he was aware of the consequences for refusing to answer questions put by the members of the committee, after which he was replaced in custody of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

Mr. Ellis stated to the committee that he was willing to produce the books and papers called for by the committee in the subpœna to Mr. Jordan, and he and P. A. Vincent, the paying teller of the Third National Bank, will appear before the committee on Tuesday next, in answer to a subpœna duces tecum.

CONGRATULATING GOV. HAYES.

NUMEROUS CONGRATULATORY DISPATCHES RECEIVED BY THE NEXT PRESIDENT—A CALL ON HIM BY FRED. DOUGLASS—HOW THE OHIO DEMOCRATS ACCEPT THE SITUATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Feb. 17.—Gov. Hayes received a large number of congratulatory dispatches to-day and a great many complimentary calls. Fred. Douglass, who happened to be passing through the city, called to pay his respects, and spent some time in conversation with the Governor.

There was considerable political cross-firing in the General Assembly to-day, the Democrats generally acknowledging defeat, but accusing the Electoral Commission of partisan decision. The Republicans expressed their astonishment that the Democratic minority of the Commission has not been able to overcome the partisan bias, so much deprecated by the Democrats, sufficiently to vote with the majority even on trivial questions. The discussion was animated, but good natured, the Democrats generally accepting the situation gracefully.

REJOICINGS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Feb. 17.—The Republicans here are rejoicing over the decision of the Electoral Commission in the Louisiana case. A public demonstration will take place as soon as the final result is announced. With Hayes as President the Republicans of this State will organize for the campaigns of 1878 and of 1880.

TROOPS NEEDED IN THE SOUTH.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS KILLED WHILE IN THE DISCHARGE OF THEIR DUTY—HOW THE REVENUE LAWS ARE DEFIED IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Feb. 17.—On Wednesday last, in Watauga County, John Wilson, a revenue officer, attempted to arrest Mathias Harmon, a notorious illicit distiller. Several shots were fired on both sides, resulting in the death of Wilson and the escape of Harmon. Several illicit distillers were arrested a few days ago in Polk County and carried to Hendersonville for trial. The friends of the distillers rallied and followed the officers for the purpose of rescuing the men under arrest. A street fight took place in Hendersonville between the officers and the rescuers, resulting in the shooting of two of the attacking party. Another account says two officers were killed while the trial was going on.

A letter from the Collector of Internal Revenue of the Mountain District says that two Deputy Marshals, one by the name of Merrill, attempted to arrest a squad of illicit distillers in Buncombe County one day this week, and that the two Marshals were killed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The Commissioner of Internal Revenue to-day received a dispatch from Revenue Agent Wagner, stating that his Yadkin County raiding party had just arrived at Winston, and reported the capture of 29 copper stills complete, 36,000 gallons of mash and beer, and eight distilleries.

RECREANT TO HIS PLEDGES.

GOV. VANCE AND HIS PARTY IN NORTH CAROLINA—HIS CONDUCT STOUTLY OPPOSED BY INFLUENTIAL NEWSPAPERS—WHAT DID THE GOVERNOR OF NORTH CAROLINA SAY TO THE GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA?

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Feb. 17.—A brisk fight is going on in this State between Gov. Vance and his organ the News, and the Sentinel of this place, and another Democratic paper published in Newbern, over Vance's appointees of the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad. Gov. Vance appointed M. F. Arendell State proxy, who was a surgeon in the Holden-Kirk war of 1870, when Gov. Holden attempted to put down the Kuklux. Gov. Vance is soundly denounced as recreant to pledges made during the canvass, and such reform as this is characterized as shameful and insulting to the people of Eastern Carolina. The Sentinel says the appointees are the tools of a Ring, who are fattening upon the railroad. An injunction has been issued, restraining payment of interest on the bonds of this road, which are said to be invalid, usurious, and in the hands of the Ring.

Gov. Vance has recognized Wade Hampton as Governor of South Carolina, by communicating with him relative to fugitives from justice now in jail in this State.

THE CONTROL OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Feb. 17.—The bill to reorganize the county Governments has passed both houses of the Legislature, and is now a law. The Legislature under this law will elect Justices of the Peace, and they will elect the various county officers. Every county Government will be Democratic as soon as this bill goes into effect.

WELDON, THE ASSASSIN.

MOBILE, Feb. 17.—A reporter called on Patrick H. Pepper, of the firm of P. H. Pepper & Co., this morning to make inquiries regarding W. H. Weldon, and was shown a letter from C. D. Spencer, general salesman with H. B. Claflin & Co., New-York, to P. H. Pepper & Co., dated New-York, Nov. 13, 1876, saying: "I have succeeded in finding that salesman. His name is W. H. Weldon. He has had a large experience, and is, I think, a first-rate salesman. He is quick, energetic, well connected, and honest." Mr. Pepper states that Weldon commenced service on the 20th of November, 1876. Early this month he was reprimanded for disobedience of the rules of the firm. He did not again make his appearance until Wednesday, the 14th instant, at 11 A. M., when he called for the payment of past services, which was made. He had the appearance of having been on a big drunk.

EX-PRESIDENT IGLESIAS' CABINET.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 17.—To-morrow Alfonso Mejia, Joaquin M. Alcalde, Frances Y. Prieto, Jose M. Iglesias, and Sebastian Garcia, members ex-President Iglesias' Cabinet, will leave for New-York via St. Louis. The object of the visit at present is unknown.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ENGINEERS.

A COMMITTEE OF THE STRIKERS ON THE BOSTON AND MAINE RAILROAD BEFORE THE STATE COMMISSIONERS—THE GRIEVANCES OF THE LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS EXPLAINED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Feb. 17.—To-day the committee of the striking engineers on the Boston and Maine Railroad, and Mr. Arthur, the Chief of the Brotherhood, were heard by the State Railroad Commissioners, each under oath. Their statements in substance were, that they had been treated harshly and unfairly, and no disposition had been shown to deal honorably by them. Previous to the strike the President had been called upon, and respectfully asked to listen to their grievances and requests, but in reply he had said he could not increase their pay, had no desire to do so, and if they were not satisfied that they could leave. He would not even offer to lay the matter before the Directors. If he had so offered there would have been no strike. It was stated that the pay of engineers on this road was less than any other road running out of Boston; that it was uneven, and that great favoritism was shown. The grading of the pay, as heretofore, was done away with by Smith, the engine dispatcher, against whom the men are very bitter, and a disposition was seen to drive out the older men and put in cheaper men, and also to keep the younger men on low pay. Three of the oldest engineers, one of whom had been in the employ of the road 36 years, and another 33 years, had been reduced in pay since February. Mr. Arthur, the Chief of the Brotherhood, explained the workings of the organization. It was opposed to strikes, except as a last resort. There was a tribunal which judged all grievances in the order, and the chief had no arbitrary power. If there had been a half dozen men on the road opposed to the strike, he should never have given his consent. The Brotherhood would support a man in a strike they approved until he got employment, even if for 10 years; the membership of the order was about 13,000, embraced 90 per cent. of the reliable engineers of the continent, and was increasing daily; witness said the Brotherhood claimed the right to say to a man, "Join us or stay with the road. If you come with us we will pay you as well as the company;" the Brotherhood furnished the money to pay the hired substitutes; they would be willing to be governed by a law that made it a penal offense for an engineer to abandon his engine on the track, provided the law also forbade the company to say to a man at any time and at any place, "We are done with you." Fault was found when men left their engines because of the trouble given the company and the public, but no fault was publicly found when the companies dismissed engineers without warning, and families were thus left helpless. His salary as Chief Engineer of the Brotherhood was $2,500. Two other officers received $2,000 each. The order was secret only so far as passwords, grips, and signs were used to distinguish a member from an outsider. If a man abandoned the property of a railroad, unless in a strike supported by the order, or injured it in any way, he would be punished by the order.

The situation on the road is about as yesterday. Trains are running regularly on the new time table, and there is a slow movement of freight. No overt act has been attempted by the strikers.

RAILWAY LITIGATION IN THE SOUTH.

MOBILE, Feb. 17.—A petition was filed to-day in the United States Circuit Court by Morris Ketchum, surviving Trustee of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, for the appointment of George S. Coe, President of the American Exchange Bank of New-York, and Philip C. Calhoun, President of the Fourth National Bank of New-York, to fill vacancies in the Trusteeship of the first mortgage. Argument upon the effect of Judge Wood's request and proposal to sit in the cause will be heard by the court on Monday.

On petition of the purchasers of the Alabama and Chattanooga Railroad, Judge Grandon, of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, made a decree that, on the payment of the whole cash required by the terms of the purchase, the road shall be turned over to them. The petitioners, represented by J. C. Stanton, have 40 days more to pay the cash required. They have already paid $30,000.

SINGULAR DISCHARGE OF A JURY.

UTICA, Feb. 17.—After the adjournment of the court last night in the trial of Patrick Crowley for the murder of Daniel Mulverhill, in Newport, Herkimer County, Feb. 13, 1876, one of the jurors asked for the court copy of the Revised Statutes. The Constable in charge was told by the reporter of the Albany Argus and Utica Observer, that it was all right, and the book was handed in. Upon being called into court at 9 o'clock A. M., the presence of the book was discovered, and on an exception by the defense, Judge Nixon discharged the jury, this irregularity nullifying any verdict that might be rendered. On the first ballot the jury stood equally divided on murder in the first and second degree, and manslaughter in the second degree.

SUSPENSION OF A NATIONAL BANK.

POTTSVILLE, Feb. 17.—The excitement at Shamokin, caused by the stoppage of the Miners' Trust and Safe Deposit Company yesterday, is intensified this morning by the suspension of the Northumberland County National Bank. The cause of the suspension of the bank is attributed to the action taken by the United States Controller of the Currency, who closed it up, though it is claimed by the bank officers that the suspension was brought on by a run caused by the suspension of the Miners' Trust and Safe Deposit Bank yester day. Its deposits were large.

CRIMINAL NEGLECT OF A DRUGGIST.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 17.—The inquest on the body of Hettie Love, who died on Tuesday last from the effects of muriatic acid administered by mistake in a dose of castor oil, was concluded by Coroner Goddard to-day. The verdict charges criminal negligence on the part of the druggist, Isaac W. Sitler. The accused was remanded to prison to await the action of the Grand Jury.

AN ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 17.—A young man named "Abe" Rothschild attempted to commit suicide early this morning by shooting. It has transpired that he murdered his mistress, named Bessie Moore, in Jefferson, Texas, some time ago, where they had been stopping at a hotel. Rothschild was a commercial traveller for a house in this city. His wound is not fatal, and he will be taken to Texas for trial.

LABOR DEMONSTRATION.

TRENTON, Feb. 17.—The unemployed potters, to the number of 600, are parading the streets today, with music and banners, on which are inscribed, among other mottoes, "We court arbitration," "High tariff means low wages," "Right must conquer might," "Labor has rights which capital is bound to respect," "Free trade means prosperity," "A fair day's pay for a fair day's work." The procession is very orderly.

A POLICEMAN FATALLY SHOT.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 17.—This afternoon two men named Douglass and Jourdan became engaged in an altercation near Frankford road and Norris street. Policeman McGonigal was summoned to arrest the parties, and on his interfering, Douglass drew a pistol from his pocket and shot the officer dead. McGonigal was an exemplary officer. The murderer, who is an ex-policeman, has been arrested.

FATAL EFFECTS OF HYDROPHOBIA.

BOSTON, Feb. 17.—Annie Bragdon, a girl who was bitten by a dog in September last, died to-day of hydrophobia.

A ROYAL WIFE WHO WILL HAVE HER OWN WAY.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 17.—The Courier asserts that the Duke of Edinburgh, for domestic reasons, has resigned the command of her Majesty's steamship Sultan, and is returning to England.

THE DEFIANT TURK.

INCIDENTS OF THE CONSTANTINOPLE CONFERENCE.

A GREAT PLACE FOR BABBLING MISCHIEF-MAKERS—DEALING IN CANARDS AND TURKISH FUNDS—A BUSYBODY EXTRAORDINARY—THE PASSIONS OF JEALOUS RACES—VENOM OF EUROPEAN RESIDENTS—WHEN AND WHERE THE PROTOCOL WAS SIGNED—COMIC SIDE OF THE EASTERN QUESTION.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1877.

On Saturday, Jan. 20, closed the last act of the drama of the conference, which has "dragged its slow length along" from the beginning of December until now. Its general significance gives it a high place in the drama of history, though for us dwellers in Constantinople the humors and whimsies of the by-play have caused a daily-recurring wonder as to whether we were assisting at tragedy, at melodrama, or only at a preternaturally solemn farce. The painful doubt has at last given place to as much of certainty as is ever possible with regard to this long-vexed Eastern Question. The catastrophe you already know; my present business is with the comedy aspect of the preceding action, the burden whereof falls upon the chorus of newsmongers and fabricators of canards—that is to say, upon the busy little world of Perote society. If there be a spot on the face of the globe where the mischief-making tongue wags to more effect than on the poly

Perote, comes in clasping his hands in despair. "News are very bad. Consolidés down to 11; never were so low before." In vain I remind him of 20 occasions within the last three months when they have been equally low. He still believes in the despair of the moment. To-morrow they will be up to 13, and the day after be down again at 11; deviation and depression repose alike upon undoubting faith and absolute forgetfulness. With a lame sort of likeness to the Bourbons, these people learn nothing and forget everything. Lying almost ceases to be a vice where people so invite imposition; universal credulity reduces falsehood to the level of practical joking.

Comic rôles have been sustained also by more august actors. Sir Henry Elliot, for example, suddenly shorn of his authority as busybody extraordinary, invested with the grandeur of representing the British Government, has cheerfully contented himself with the odds and ends, the dirty work of intrigue. There seems reason for believing that he has secretly worked against the conference, of which he was ex officio a member. I know, at least, that he has sought to gratify his spite upon those whose authority has weakened his own. Mr. Baring is kept in Bulgaria, and his position made as unpleasant for him as possible by the very embassy whose duty it is to sustain him. Small annoyances to various aides of the conference are traced to her Majesty's Ambassador. Dinner invitations are refused to those who testify against the "dear Turk;" and coolness, almost rudeness at times, clouds the courtesy due to Lord Salisbury, and his entourage. These are small things, to be sure—they are valuable only as indicating the state of the cause which they seek to serve.

INTRIGUES AND INSOLENCE.

But then the Eastern Question is one of those which embitters the minds of all who entertain it. At least here in the Levant it almost invariably adds the gall of "envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness" to every shade of opinion and partisanship. It is the melancholy privilege of every element in the hodge-podge of races that peoples the Ottoman Empire to hate every other element with an acrimony that can hardly be appreciated at a distance. Kurds in Asia Minor, Circassians in Thrace and Macedonia burn and ravage, murder and outrage in obedience to their passions Greeks, Catholics, and Protestants, Masouites, Druses, Arabs, Wakabees, or whatever race or sect you choose to designate. They are all Ishmaels as regards one another. "The grand old Turk" at the top of the heap smiles at the want of unity which assures his own pre-eminence, or, if he thinks there is any danger of concord, stirs up some old wound or sows anew the seeds of conflict. During the sitting of the conference the Greeks have been burning with envy and jealousy of the Bulgarians. "We," they say, "have shed our blood to win our independence, and Europe has only pared down our boundaries for us and left the greater part of our nation still in subjection. These Bulgarians, the other hand, have done nothing, and have deserved nothing, and yet Europe demands their independence!" Accordingly many men who ought to know better have intrigued to thwart the good intentions of the conference toward Bulgaria. Thousands (I trust the number is a Perote exaggeration) have even signed petitions begging the Porte not to grant the measure of freedom proposed, saying that no subjects of His Imperial Majesty, the Sultan, had any cause of complaint against his fostering Government. But flatter and cringe as they would these same men were always willing to grant that Greece had serious grievances that called for redress. They did not scruple to allow privately that the real trouble was that Bulgaria, along with Thessaly and Epirus, ought to be given to Greece. Scores of books and pamphlets—to say nothing of uncounted newspaper leaders—have been published to prove that Bulgaria was really Greek territory; that the country owed all its progress to the Greek element in it; that the majority of inhabitants were Greeks; and even that many of the Bulgarian-speaking people were nothing but disguised Greeks, all longing for union with the Hellenic Kingdom. Finally, the European residents all take sides, and spit out venom at each other, and at whichever fraction of the native populations is unineluded in their private and particular scheme of toleration. The newspapers all join in the war of abuse, at least so long as they say no evil of the Turks. Now, even, when the fate of the Empire trembles in the balance; when the moment is overcharged with a weight of possibilities terrible for all Europe to contemplate, these newspapers and this Perote society are snarling and hurling billingsgate at each other, and especially at the Ambassadors, more like grinning and irresponsible monkies than like human beings. A man who reflects honor upon English statesmanship, himself a Catholic, was here not long ago, and said within my hearing: "I am strongly reminded here of the Papal Court, just before the triumph of a united Italy. Indifferent to all broader considerations, eager and venomous over little things, their conversation bore a striking resemblance to that I have been listening to at the Porte this morning." He did not point his moral—no more will I.

THE DIVORCE OF TURKEY.

As for the conference, it has agreeably disappointed those who are accustomed to look upon diplomacy as a magnificent contrivance devoted to the art of "how not to do it." The representatives have from the beginning agreed upon the necessity of at last doing something for the long-suffering Christians in Turkey. With the single exception of Sir Henry Elliott, they have to a man worked through in this sense. Their final demand of the Porte is a worthy sequel of their labors. We ought to be thankful that the Porte has rejected the propositions. Their acceptance could have resulted only in the oft-repeated shuffling and evasion that mark Turkish relations with Europe. Nothing is lost by refusal, but everything is to be hoped for.

To-day the Marquis of Salisbury and his suite leave for England; to-morrow Gen. Ignatieff goes, as well as the Counts de Chaudordy and de Bourgoing. Count Zichy, Baron Werther, and Count Corti, representatives respectively of Austria, Germany, and Italy, follow in a day or two. Sir Henry Elliott alone pleaded diplomatic etiquette as an excuse for staying awhile after his colleagues had gone. Lord Salisbury, in the presence of witnesses, exacted from him an assurance that he would not take advantage of delay to retouch the political question of the hour. Humiliating as was the demand, Sir Henry, after a short hesitation, acceded to it. Last night the closing soirée of our short, grave, and gay season was given at the Austrian Embassy. There was dancing and music, there was great apparent cheerfulness, and much real, though concealed, sadness. I mention the occasion because, like the rest of my chronicle, it belongs to history. A little to one side of the more crowded rooms there is a small cabinet of charming aspect. Koordish stuffs drape the windows; antique vases and statuettes, glass from Cyprus, even a little blue and white, decorate the walls and strew the mantel and tables. Here the Ambassadors of the six great powers came together, while the dancing was going on in the other rooms, and signed the protocol of the conference—they laughingly called it "the divorce of Turkey." Yet even here the Porte managed to insult and anger them afresh—the two Ministers, Safvet Pasha and Edhem Pasha, who had promised to be present at 10 o'clock to assist at the signature, had not arrived at 11, and the signatures were affixed in their absence. Well, that is only one more instance of the small spite I have been telling about. It has long managed to embarrass and delay diplomacy in Constantinople; it remains to be seen if it will clog the wheels of destiny.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF HUNGARY.

Turkey has one friend whom no amount of dishonesty, corruption, oppression, or outrage on her part has alienated from her; that is Hungary. Hungary, too, is ruled by a dominant race having nothing in common with the people it oppresses. The Hungarians, of stock akin to that of the Turks, were also among the latest of the barbarian conquerors of Europe; the two peoples have never become assimilated to the populations who suffer from their rule. In both cases these populations are chiefly Slavonic, at least so far as regards Europe. The sympathy of Hungary with Turkey is, therefore, easy to understand: the sympathy of other powers has never been more than a cloak for self-devotion, but that of Hungary is the genuine feeling of one oppressor of barbarous stock with a kindred oppressor. It was, therefore, with more of amusement than of surprise that we learned the other day that a deputation of students from Pesth was on its way to Constantinople to present a sword to Abdul Kerim Pasha, Generalissimo of the Turkish Army. The students came and have been fêted for several days by the officials of Stamboul. Last night a ball was given in their honor at the Municipality, at which Edhem Pasha was present. The fact is made public in the newspapers of to-day, evidently in order to underscore the insult of his absence from Count Zichy's. As for the ball, it was, as a Frenchman who was present told me, d'un luxe insolent. The untranslatable expression is exceedingly felicitous. You might accuse me of scandal-mongering were I to say that at an early hour of the morning the divans were covered with a motley crew of Turks, Hungarians, and Perotes—the diplomatic world refused its presence—all shamelessly drunk. Accordingly I refrain from a plump assertion to that effect. I will only hint that with the rich variety of costumes, such a scene would offer to a painter a subject worthy to figure alongside of Couture's "Romans of the Decadence."

THE FUTURE OF NEW-YORK.

LETTER II.

The great North-west is, in a certain sense, the offspring of the State of New-York. The means of communication devised by the genius of Clinton and made effective by the munificence of this State, peopled some of the States whose stars adorn our flag, which have, in turn, become the mothers of States. As parents sometimes see their children rise about them more stalwart and comely than themselves, so some of these newer States have within their borders cities which have attracted a portion of the business which was formerly a feature of the trade of this City. Thirty years ago merchants and traders from every section of the country came to New-York to purchase their goods. Here credits were easier, stocks larger, and prices lower than elsewhere; and the "jobber," as he is called—that is, the dealer who stands between the importer and commission merchant and the retailer—needed a spacious and attractive store, carried a large and varied stock of goods, and employed a multitude of assistants to conduct his business. The purchaser came a long distance, at a large expense, and bought a year's supply. The Winter was a close season, for then navigation was sealed. To-day, New-York is no longer the centre of the jobbing trade. It is, to be sure, the centre of a jobbing trade, but that is a home, or near-by trade. Cleveland, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and many minor cities, are now each jobbing centres, dealing directly with the retailers within their respective spheres. In some of these cities, too, are found importers and commission-houses established by Eastern manufacturers.

"Times change, and men change with them," and if the men don't change, so much the worse for them—they will be left behind in the keen competition of life, and drift, wrecks upon the strand. So, doubtless, thought the controlling mind in the house of A. T. Stewart & Co. when it decided to establish a branch in Chicago. Choice did not dictate this, convenience did not, but necessity did, and the men changed their policy with the times, in verification of the adage. Here, again, supremacy gives way to equality, and New-York is checked in her growth in the line indicated.

As in morals one who hesitates is lost, so in business the city which hesitates, falters, and is dismayed, is in peril. He is the successful man who in the course of a large experience has versatility enough to adapt himself to new circumstances and new relations. See the great Astor, ready for any emergency, dismayed by no disaster, surrendering to no defeat. Full of latent reserved power, he seemed to court difficulties to triumph over them. So, too, with Vanderbilt; as skipper of a periagua he was daring and successful. When such craft were superseded by steam-boats, he adapted himself to the new conditions, and excelled; when the steam-boat surrendered to the railway, he did not surrender, but seized the railway, controlled it to his uses, and again excelled. Communities cannot adapt themselves to changed conditions with the alertness of individuals, for a ship cannot turn in so small a circle as a yawl.

Now, there are communities and communities. The community of New-York is essentially different from the communities of Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and the comparison is not favorable to New-York. The local sentiment, not easy to define, but always alert, powerful, and defiant, which prevails in the cities named, is lacking here. This sentiment in its last analysis is profoundly selfish, not as to the individual so much as to the community, but it is also prodigiously effective. The commercial creed of the Baltimorean begins with: "I believe in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad," and with that it ends. The Philadelphian, in like manner, believes in the Pennsylvania Railroad. And these creeds include the infallibility, impeccability, and invincibility of the respective roads. It must be admitted that this devotion is reciprocal, and these roads are loyal to the interests of the communities they serve. The New-Yorker believes in nothing but that New-York is a great city, with great natural advantages, which will in some mysterious way work out for his city a great destiny. He ignores forces working silently against his city. He disdains to note symptoms—not of decay exactly—but say of arrested development. He has not discovered that natural advantages have been neutralized by the equalizing agency of artificial advantages, as described in a former letter.

The absence of this pervading sentiment of local pride, which unifies a community, is chiefly owing to the fact that there is in New-York no middle class to serve as a connecting link between the rich and the poor; a class solid, substantial, and intelligent; anchored to their homesteads, diligent in their business, and keenly sensitive to the interests of the city they inhabit, respected by the rich and confided in by the poor. Such a class is an enormous force in a community; conservative in all that pertains to law and order; watchful over every interest of their city, and aggressive in everything that will promote the welfare of their municipality. This class may be somewhat sordid, if you please; but even this makes them an effective class; for, as a great English statesman has said: "The love of lucre, though sometimes carried to a ridiculous—sometimes to a vicious—excess, is the grand cause of prosperity to all States." I do not mean to say that there are no individuals of this class here, for there are many, but not a sufficient number, compared with the entire population, to constitute a class exercising a powerful or controlling influence in affairs.

That New-York has grown until recently more rapidly than competing cities is another fact that accounts for the lack of a sentiment of local pride and supreme devotion to local interests. This rapid increase has been chiefly due to immigration, not alone from foreign countries, but from other States of this country. Whither the middle class have gone, and why they went, and why those who come hither from other States do not take root here as they should, may be hereafter considered.

It is gratifying to know that there has, within a year or two, been developed something of this sentiment of local pride and devotion to local interests. It comes none too soon, and it is to be hoped that it will increase in intensity and volume. Its spring is self-interest—always an effective motor—and its results, if it shall possess the gift of continuance and be wisely applied, will promote the general welfare by giving the business interests of our City a new impulse, so that, instead of weakly surrendering the crown of commercial supremacy to any rival, it shall be proved that "he that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves and sharpens our skill." GEORGE H. ANDREWS.

DESPONDENT FLORIDIANS.

The Worcester (Mass.) Spy prints a letter from Mr. C. A. K. Poore, of Tallahassee, Fla., written on the 7th inst., which concludes thus: "Northern visitors have departed, and none have come to take their places, and hotel tables show a 'beggarly account' of empty chairs, and dry goods repose in undisturbed quiet upon the merchants' counters. Stagnation, social and financial, has settled down upon us, and on this lovely morning as I sit writing, with open doors and windows, the only sound that breaks the sabbath stillness comes from the Capitol opposite, where some would-be Solon has worked himself up to a pitch of earnestness, and, possibly, eloquence, in discussing some real or seeming important measure. But this is not at all a pleasing picture for the Democrats to contemplate, nor do they hesitate to bewail and denounce it. Prominent men of the party have publicly declared that the former condition of things, under Republican administration, was far preferable to the present, and have sometimes gone so far as to express their regret that it did not continue. Alas, that the wisdom gathered from experience should so often be too late."

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS IN FRANCE.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND THE NEWSPAPERS — RECENT PROSECUTION OF A PROVINCIAL JOURNAL—SHAMEFUL ATTACK ON AN ESTIMABLE LADY—THE INSOLENCE OF A COMMUNISTIC LEADER —THE VERDICT OF THE LAW COURT— A SPECIMEN ARTICLE TRANSLATED FOR THE BENEFIT OF AMERICAN READERS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Feb. 2, 1877.

The sensation of the day is the process of Les Droits de l'Homme, the Radical journal, that has thrown the Siècle and the Rappel into the shade, and it is the main topic of conversation in Paris to-day. The enemies of M. Jules Simon rejoice to see him placed in a position where he had to violate his own principles in order to act as a patriot and serve the interests of his country. For years he has preached the liberty of the press from the house-tops; now he is obliged to authorize prosecutions which would have shocked him in days gone by. See, his enemies say, how Jules Simon in power goes back upon the principles of Jules Simon a leader of the Opposition. But there is a great deal of malice in such remarks, for the form of the articles pursued was such that it was impossible to overlook them, and M. Jules Simon, with every disposition in the world to allow the utmost liberty, was obliged to execute the laws. It may be that there are what we call "fixed principles," but in practice the difficulty lies in their application, for the series of events giving rise to a certain law may never again be exactly reproduced. It is extremely difficult to make laws for the press. In the first place, liberal men like Jules Simon start out with the principle that the utmost liberty ought to be granted consistent with public safety. Unreflecting persons may claim an unrestricted liberty for the press, but calm, judicial minds will hesitate to go thus far, because it would create an exceptional case under the common law. If the press is perfectly free it must be exempted from the penalties which the common and statute law provides for libel in our country, for attacks upon the Government, the Army, and the magistracy in France. In England a journalist who attacks the magistracy can be punished under the law which provides for contempt of court, and the restriction of the liberty of the press exists, but under another form. The recent prosecutions here have been nearly all questions of form, and while authorizing these pursuits, M. Jules Simon has nevertheless remained as strong a partisan as ever of the liberty of thought and of the press. Liberty, however, does not mean license, and there are limits to it, as to all things human.

Let me illustrate my idea by citing the recent pursuit of a provincial journal which went beyond the utmost limits of the principles of liberty. During the past few years many journals have spoken of Mme. Simon as a free-thinker, and opposed to the Church and to religion. There was no truth in these reports in the sense named, for Mme. Simon is no more an enemy of religion than the million of Protestants in our country who oppose the Church of Rome and do not believe in its dogmas. But no attention was paid to these stories which were given in a general way, for the persons attacked were partisans of the liberty of the press. But the journal in question went into details and gave positive and libellous falsehoods. It stated that Mme. Simon visited one of the charity schools of the Sisters during the siege and heard them complaining of cold and the want of fuel. "You want fuel," she cried, "then take this to burn," and tore down the crucifix, dashing the image of Christ in pieces upon the floor and throwing the wood of the cross upon the fire. This was the sense of the article published, and probably there is not a sensible reader in America who will not understand at once that the whole story is made up, and that it is one of the boldest of calumnies. The object of it was to rouse the indignation of the ignorant Catholic masses against the Premier. M. and Mme. Simon promptly brought suit for libel, and the journal has been justly condemned. The opposition papers make a great outcry, and ask what has become of M. Simon's ancient principles concerning the liberty of the press; but I think that very few persons will be found to urge the immunity of the press in such outrageous cases as this, or to demand for it a freedom that can be pushed to license.

While still advocating the widest possible liberty of the press, and being surrounded by liberal men, M. Jules Simon could not help executing existing laws, and hence could not overlook the articles of the Droits de l'Homme. The leader writer in that journal, who signs X. Y., is Henri Rochfort. Day after day he makes attacks upon the Government, the Legislature, the Magistrates, and the Army, upon the bases of society, upon nearly everything that other men hold sacred, and the question comes as to what shall be done. The law formally forbids such attacks. But many an article was passed over unnoticed until the writer began to apologise for acts qualified as crimes, a thing the French law punishes with severity. If M. Simon had passed this over he would have been accused of a dereliction of duty; when he orders the law executed he is accused of violating his own principles. Of the two courses he had to follow he preferred the latter, in the interests of the country, though rendering him personally unpopular, and the Droits de l'Homme was prosecuted. Yesterday it was suspended for six months, and its editor sentenced to three months' imprisonment and to a fine of 3,000 francs. To-day the papers, even those that rejoice over the fall of this Radical journal, are all sarcastic or severe in speaking of M. Simon

One of the articles which gave rise to the pursuit was about the death of the banker Jecker, who disappeared during the Commune. When a millionaire is suddenly lost there is a great outcry made about him, and the friends of Jecker made every effort to learn his fate. At length the Government learned that he was among the victims of the Commune, but the details of his assassination were only given the other day. They evidently come from an eye-witness or from one of the latter's most intimate friends. The story is interesting enough to translate, and I give portions of it:

It was on the morning of the 26th of May; no sun, and a fine drizzling rain, a sort of icy fog penetrated to the very marrow of our bones. Seven o'clock had not yet struck, but even at that early hour I was at the barrier of the barrière Fontaine Rouge with —— [Armand, who is speaking, tells his friends that he indicates the person as 'the man,' in order to avoid giving names. He is then detailed to aid in the arrest of Jecker in the Cabinet of Raoul Rigault.] * * * Rigault gave him [Jecker] two or three sharp glances from under his glasses, taking two or three pinches of snuff at the same time. Jecker's eyes roved wildly about the room, and he made a gesture indicating despair. The Delegate [Rigault] gave a violent pull at the bell-cord near his hand; a servant appeared; he gave him an order in a low tone of voice, and two minutes later a Sergeant and four men entered the room.

"That's the man," said Rigault, "shut him up in the most solitary fashion." The banker was arrested and the Delegate gave his reasons.

"You see, Armand, we must have canons, but we want other things as well. At la Roquette Prison there is a lot of Jesuits, spies and brigands who will come down upon us if things turn out badly, but there is one of these hostages who will not escape; he will be shot if I have to do it myself."

(An order is procured for the execution of the imprisoned banker.) The door opened; the guard and the prisoner appeared, and in a moment there was silence.

"Jecker," said the man, in the hard, sharp tone that you know, "your last hour has come; I have an order to shoot you. Try to die in a better fashion than you have lived, if that is possible." Perfectly livid, the prisoner looked at us, and his face assumed a greenish hue; but not a word came from his lips.

"Are you ready?" asked the man.

"I am!"

"Then come on." We left the prison. The same fine, chilly rain was falling. Surrounded by us, armed with chassepots, and preceded by the Captain, revolver in hand, Jecker marched with his eyes upon the ground, but with a firm step. At the first barricade the officer in command came up to us.

"Where are you going in that sort of a fashion?" he asked.

"To shoot that man," replied our Captain.

"That man! And who the —— is he?"

"Jecker."

"The man of Mexican fame?"

"Yes."

"Do you want any help?"

"No; thanks; we are enough for the work."

This conversation, or something very like it was repeated at each barricade. At last we arrived at the plaster beds of the barriere des Amandiers, between Pere la Chaise and Montmartre. There was there, at 500 or 600 yards from the fortifications, an abandoned villa in the midst of a small field, and a six-foot wall inclosed this quiet home of some peaceable bourgeois. Near it was a freshly-dug grave. The man cast a look about him.

"Here we are," he said, "this is the spot." The butts of our muskets rang as they came down heavily upon the ground. The man turned toward Jecker: "There!" he said, pointing to the wall. Mute and livid, Jecker walked automatically to the wall, threw his hat upon the ground, and folded his arms across his breast. At this moment our guns came up.

"Do not miss me—," he said, but the phrase was not finished, for four balls struck him in the breast, and he tumbled over upon the ground. The Captain went up to him, and instead of the usual coup de grace, broke in his skull with the butt of his revolver. A dozen frightful gamins, who had followed us, then approached.

"We come to ask, citizen," said the orator of the band, with that training voice of the Parisian Javroche, "what is to be done with the body."

"What is to be done with it?" growled the man. "Throw him into the ditch, like his master, Maximilian. Throw him in, you young scamps; and as for ourselves, citizens, let us leave that carrion." And that is the way, my friend, that the miserable Jecker died.

It is difficult to show more cynicism than is betrayed in this moving story. It shows that the great Swiss banker died bravely, at least, and it puts an end to the doubts that have been so long felt regarding his fate. This process has brought out the fact that he was assassinated by the order of Raoul Rigault.

Hitherto the committees of the Chamber and of the Senate have been in the habit of sending for one of the Ministers whenever information of a precise character was wanted, and it was not easy for a member of the Cabinet to escape from these calls upon his time. If he refused he ran the risk of offending an entire party and of losing his majority at the next division. During the Premiership of the Duc de Broglie there where two or three strongly Radical committees, and they rarely failed to send for him two or three times a week, enjoying his annoyance at being arraigned and questioned. To them it was equal to bear-baiting, or a bull fight. But the present Ministers have had some experience in that sort of amusement, and do not care to be baited in the same way. Hence, it was resolved at the last Cabinet meeting that each Minister should detail one of his Chefs de Cabinet for this service, sending him to represent the Minister required whenever summoned by any commission. This arrangement does not appear to give entire satisfaction, the Senators and Deputies thinking that it lessens their dignity to treat with a subaltern when they have a right to summon a Minister before them. Some protests against the new system have been entered. Each sous-chef thus delegated to represent a Minister before the Parliamentary commissions is entitled to the payment of his railway fare and to an extra indemnity of $1 per diem.

One of our Auvergnats, small dealers in wood and coal, had a very curious adventure yesterday afternoon. Two men entered his shop and purchased a small fagot, the price of which was two sous, but pretended to have no coppers, and offered a 20 franc gold piece. The Auvergnat hastened to draw his sac, and carefully counted out 19 francs and 90 centimes. When it was in the hands of the purchaser the companion said: "Ah! I have found a two-sous piece in my pocket; it's not worth while changing your gold piece; here," and he handed the two sous to the dealer, who gave back the piece of gold. Meanwhile, the first man was getting out the silver, but both turned suddenly and ran out of the shop. "Fouchtra! Je suis volé," said the Auvergnat; but he was a stout hearty fellow, and gave chase at once. He had a long run for it, but presently a gendarme captured one fellow, and the other ran to the Seine and tried to throw his pursuer off at one of the bridges. But his foot slipped and he fell into the river. Without hesitation the Auvergnat plunged in after him, and brought him out, getting 25 francs for saving a man from drowning in addition to his own 19 francs and 90 centimes.

MARINE NOTES.

The schooner L. A. Johnson, from Philadelphia to Portland, was wrecked near Portland Headlight. All on board were saved.

Henry Edwards, seaman on the ship Hamilton Fish, from Liverpool for New-York, Dec. 14, fell from the mizzen-topsailyard on the 13th inst., and was instantly killed.

The Mable Lent, Capt. Wyman, which left St. Thomas Jan. 24 for Porto Rico, there to load a portion of her cargo for New-York, was lost on the coast of San Domingo, near Puerto Pia, while proceeding to complete cargo at Blanco d'Isabella. She was of 188 tons burden, was built at Bear River, Nova Scotia, in 1874, and was owned by W. F. Marshall, of Digby, Annapolis Harbor. Her crew were saved.

Capt. I. L. Bosnell, of the schooner Kate and Luella, of Lebanon, Del., arrived yesterday morning in the steamer Tybee from Turk's Island. He reports that his vessel left Richmond, Va., on Dec. 6 for New-York, with a cargo of coal, and on the 9th of the same month, when off the capes of Delaware, experienced a fierce north-west gale, during which all the canvas was blown to shreds, forcing her to scud to the southward under bare poles, and driving them into the gulf. On the 20th he rolled the mainmast out of her, and she remained at the mercy of the elements until Jan. 27, when he managed to work her, with many difficulties, into Turk's Island, all hands being exhausted. The vessel was left at the island to refit.

DIVORCES IN MAINE.

The Augusta (Me.) Journal prints a list of 23 divorces granted at the recent term of the Supreme Judicial Court in that city, and says: "It is a mournful company of most unhappy men and women, but only a fair sample of what is going on in nearly all of the other counties in the State. Twenty-two women asked to be divorced from their husbands. Their lives have been made miserable by cruelty, neglect, drunkenness, crime, and desertion; and who shall say that the court has not been the instrument of blessing in setting the poor wives free from the marriage relation? In six cases husbands ask for divorces from their wives, on the ground of high temper, incompatibility of disposition, and in some cases a strong leaning toward ugliness and absolute cruelty."

Among the cases enumerated are the following: Nancie P. Chesley, of Fayette, divorce from Lorenzo Chesley, of Mount Vernon. Cause, neglect and refusal to provide support, nursing, and medical care and attendance when sick, preventing her attendance at religious meetings, and exercising a tyrannical control over her, and otherwise rendering her life miserable; kicking and striking her, and desertion.

Ella E. Douglass, of Gardiner, divorce from Charles H. Douglass, of Gardiner. Cause, cross abuse, extreme cruelty, kicking, striking, and choking her, often kicking her out of bed and ordering her to leave the house, threatening to take her life if she ever returned; he has a bad disposition and uncontrollable temper.

Daniel M. Black, of Waterville, divorce from Martha Black, of Waterville. Cause, shameful abuse and ill treatment, even in sickness, not withstanding he had provided her a home suited to her rank and position in life. She is so revengeful, morose, and quarrelsome, that her husband can find no happiness in her presence, and his peace of mind is greatly disturbed.

Seth W. Perkins, of Gardiner, divorce from Clarinda C. Perkins of Canton. Cause, alienation in affection, covering a period of four years, manifesting a strong dislike, culminating in actual hatred of him, so that she refused to suffer him to remain in the same house, and he had to leave for the sake of "keeping peace in the family." The libelant is a minister of the Gospel, and has not been able to live with his wife for more than three years.

A HUSBAND HEARD FROM.

The Elmira Advertiser says: "About 10 years ago a party of from 20 to 25 men left Geneva, N. Y., for the mining regions in one of the Western States. Among the party was Jerome Crawford, who left behind him a wife and one child. Two years later all returned except Mr. Crawford, who, they said, became separated from the rest of the party and could not be found. About four years ago his wife, giving up all hope for him, and thinking he must be dead, married again. Some time ago she received a letter from her supposed dead husband, saying that he had been captured by the Indians and held by them as a prisoner until recently, when he made his escape, and now asks his wife to send him money so he could return to his old home again."

THE CHARITY OF THE POOR.

The Worcester Spy says: "A pleasant instance of true generosity and its reward occurred last week at Rockport, Mass. A woman who supported her two children by hard work was asked by a fellow-workman in the mill to aid in making a purse for a poor woman. She had but 60 cents left to carry her and her children through the month, but she gave 25 cents. A little later the person returned and told the woman the purse was meant for her, and handed her $30."

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

THE LOTTERY SWINDLES.

WATCHES SAID TO BE WORTH $200 EACH OFFERED FOR $20—STRONG ALLEGATIONS AGAINST A FIRM KNOWN AS RUSSELL & CO.

The bogus lottery swindlers are again at work, and their labors seem to be meeting with success. Complaints have reached the Mayor's Office regarding the operations of a firm doing business as jewelers under the name of Russell & Co., at No. 37 Bond street. Several days ago Mayor Ely received a letter from a Mr. William H. Powers, of Springfield, N. H., in which that person stated he had been informed by Russell & Co. that he had drawn as a prize in the Topeka and Laramie Lottery a watch valued at $200. The circular containing this information stated also that a committee of ticket-holders in the lottery had decided that an extra assessment of 20 per cent. of the value of prizes drawn should be levied before such prizes were delivered. Mr. Powers asked Mayor Ely to procure the watch from Russell & Co. and express it to him C. O. D. Mayor Ely gave Mr. Powers' letter, with others of a like character, into the hands of Capt. Walsh, of the Twenty-sixth Precinct, with orders to investigate the character of Russell & Co. Capt. Walsh stated to a TIMES reporter yesterday that there was every evidence that the firm name was bogus, and that the operations of Russell & Co. were fraudulent, but that no action could be taken against them, as no complainant could be procured to appear against them. He said that circulars announcing the drawing of prizes were sent to persons who had bought no lottery tickets, and that almost all the persons who sent money to Russell & Co. believed they could procure a gold watch for one-tenth its value. It will be easily seen, said Capt. Walsh, that most of the people who are deprived of their money by Russell & Co., endeavor by false pretenses to procure an article which they believe is worth more than the money they send on. He had endeavored to ascertain the methods of Russell & Co., and had discovered that Russell is a clerk for Ellis H. Elias, the proprietor of the Dollar Store under the Grand Central Hotel, and of the Parisian Diamonds Emporium further up Broadway. A reporter of THE TIMES visited the place of business of Russell & Co., at No. 37 Bond street, yesterday afternoon. When he ascended the steps he was met by three gentlemen who asked him if he was employed by Russell & Co. He replied that he was not, and walked on to the door of the store which bore the inscription, "Russell & Co., Kingston Gold Watch and Jewelry Co." The door was locked, and pinned upon it was a paper stating that somebody would be "in in 15 minutes." As this moment a letter-carrier appeared, who said, "That's a pretty long 15 minutes. I was here three hours ago, and that paper was then on the door." The gentlemen who stood in the doorway proved to be the Assignees of the claims of friends in the country who had received notices that prizes awaited them and would be sent by Russell & Co., upon the receipt of one-twentieth of their value. All were convinced that Russell & Co. were swindlers. Very soon another person appeared who stated he had been engaged in a controversy with Mr. Russell in the morning, and was certain that the watches offered as prizes could be procured down town for $4 60 each. Later another gentleman joined the party and said he had come to pay $25 for one of the prize watches at the request of a friend named F. A. Bottome, who resides in Thomasville, Ga. He said that Mr. Bottome received a circular informing him that he had drawn a watch as a prize in the Topeka and Laramie Lottery, and he had written to him asking him to examine the watch and determine its value before the money was sent for it. The latter called upon Russell & Co., who showed him the watch and said they valued it at $35 retail, but as the lottery company took a number they sold each time-keeper given as a prize for $20. It was none of their business, Russell & Co. said, that the lottery company represented the value of the watch at $200. The gentleman who gave this information said he wrote to Mr. Bottome saying that the watch be was sent to have drawn was worth about $8, but that it looked good, and he thought if his conscience permitted, he could sell it in Georgia for $50. He advised Mr. Bottome not to purchase the watch, but that gentleman sent him $20 and ordered him to buy the timepiece without delay. He still had the chance to execute his mission yesterday afternoon, however, for no representative of Russell & Co. appeared, and he and the other gentleman left Bond street breathing vengeance against the firm.

THE TROTTING ASSOCIATION.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION OF THE BOARD OF APPEALS—A DECISION ADVERSE TO THE POINT BREEZE PARK ASSOCIATION.

The concluding session of the Board of Appeals of the Atlantic District of the National Trotting Association was held at the New-York Hotel yesterday morning, Mr. C. D. Hutchinson, Vice-President, in the chair. There was only one case of importance before the board, and after this was decided the board adjourned for the season. The case was the most important of the session, and was in the nature of a complaint made by Hiram Schitler, of Reading, Penn., against the Point Breeze Park Association of Philadelphia, together with a request for an order. Having considered the evidence, the board found the following facts: That at the termination of the fourth heat of the race in question the judges declared the same to be a dead heat between John S. Heald and Mattie Lyle, placing Scotland third, Harry Spanker fourth, and Little Mary fifth; that these five horses started in the fifth heat of the race, and four of them continued in the race until the termination of the seventh heat, Harry Spanker having been ruled out after the fifth heat in obedience to Rule 31. At the termination of the seventh heat the race was postponed on account of darkness, and was resumed the next day, when, on calling up the horses for the eighth heat, the judges reversed their decision upon the fourth heat, and declared the heat to have been won by John S. Heald, with Mattie Lyle second, leaving the fifth heat undistributed, though ruling the sixth and seventh heats void. The fifth heat had been recorded on the previous day as having been won by Mattie Lyle. The judges next ordered Mattie Lyle to the stable, under the assumed authority of rule 31, because, according to their revised decision, she had failed to win a heat in five, and the next day, in the eighth heat, they started only John S. Heald, Scotland, and Little Mary. At the termination of the eighth heat they placed Scotland first, Little Mary second, and John S. Heald third. At the termination of the ninth heat they placed Heald first, Scotland second, and Little Mary third, thereupon awarding the race to John S. Heald. Upon a review of these proceedings, the board decided that the action of the judges in so reversing their decision of the said heat was unlawful, and their decision in that respect was set aside. The original decision of the fourth heat was restored, and likewise the original decision of the sixth and seventh heats. It was further ordered that the eighth and ninth heats should be set aside as unlawful, because from the eighth heat Mattie Lyle was excluded improperly. The race so far as it was embraced in the first seven heats with the summary corrected was confirmed, but the race as that point was declared to be unfinished, and it was ordered that the race should be trotted to a conclusion, on the same track, between the horses which competed in the seventh heat, to wit: Hattie Lyle first, Little Mary second, and Heald third, they being assigned positions for the eighth heat in that order, and that the continued race should be trotted on some day between May 15 and June 1 next, inclusive, the dates to be named by the officers of the Point Breeze Association. The Point Breeze Park Association was also directed to give notice of the day determined upon before May 1 next, and that the notice should be communicated by mail to the interested parties and to the Secretary of the National Trotting Association.

MARY AND PATRICK TAKING THE PLEDGE

Mary Donohoe took the witness stand at the Court of Special Sessions yesterday and preferred a charge of assault and battery against her husband, Patrick Donohoe. The prisoner, a brawny stevedore, looked sullen and defiant. "Please, your Honor," said Mary, addressing Justice Murray, "my husband came home drunk a few evenin's ago, and he sazed be by the head and pounded it agin the floor. He spinds most of his money in the bar rooms. I have a big family of small childhre, and he gives me very little to support them. He is very cruel to me, Sir, but I don't want to purish him. It he'd only support the childhre, I am able to support meself. If he was sick or out able to work, I'd be willing to beg for him." Lowering her voice to a whisper, she continued, looking around appealingly to the court, "God bless ye, gintlemen, and give him a good scolding; frighten him, and perhaps he'll give up dhrinkin'." Patrick was called to the witness stand. He strove to throw the blame of the whole trouble on his wife, but he was stopped short, and told to stand up until sentence of the court would be pronounced upon him. "Patrick," said Justice Kilbreth, as if he was about to pass sentence of death on the prisoner, "you deserve to be hanged." The prisoner started. "But if you take the pledge for 12 months, and promise to keep it, and not beat your wife, you can go home this time." "I will, your honor, if she takes it," said Pat; and husband and wife kissed the book, with a firm promise to live in peace for the future.

FATAL RESULT OF AN ACCIDENT.

Some two or three weeks ago, a young man in the employment of Mr. Winges, a pork butcher, in Hoboken, got into a frolic with two lads who climbed on the sleigh while he was driving. The driver, Henry Brown, after some words, struck one of the lads, Thomas Walsh, over the head with a halter strap, the buckle of which inflicted a painful scalp wound. Walsh immediately left the sleigh threw a piece of brick at the driver. The wound inflicted was a severe one, though the young man was able to return to his home in New-York without assistance. The lad, Walsh, surrendered himself, and, after a day or two, was admitted to bail in $1,500, on the certificate of the attending physician that Brown was not in danger of his life. Early this week Brown suffered a relapse, and on Friday he died. Young Walsh, who was in this City at the time, returned to Hoboken and gave himself up to the authorities and was committed to answer.

The arrangements for the Martha Washington reception and garden party, at the Academy of Music, on Thursday evening next, are now almost complete. Each bower will be composed, as nearly as possible, of the shrubs, plants, and flowers indigenous to the quarter of the globe represented, and the lady attendants will

CURRENT LITERATURE.

ESTRANGED.

Some day she will come back, my poor lost Dove—
My Dove with the warm breast and eager eyes!
How did it fall toward her, my passionate love?
Where was the flaw? since flawed it must have been,
Or surely she had staid with me, my Queen.
Her heart was full of inarticulate cries
Which my lips failed to catch; and yet she strove
To cleave to me. Ah, how she must have striven,
Praying, perchance, ofttimes for strength from Heaven!

But no strength came; and so, one fatal day,
Despairing of all help, she went away.

And there her half-completed portrait stands—
I painted her with flowers in her hands,
Because she always seemed so bright and good,
I never thought the studio's sultriness
Would hurt her anyway. I thought the sight
Of painted forms and unfamiliar lands
Would be enough for her. She was too mild,
Too patient with my painter's life. Poor child!
Had she complained at all, by look or tone,
Had she but said, "I seem too much alone;

I grow half fearful of these painted eyes
That never change, but, full of sad reproof,
Burn me and waton me; and these Southern skies
Reflected in deep streams; and that dark boat
From which a girl with bare sweet breast and throat
Droops willow-like, and dreams of life and love;
And that young lad's dying face, which never dies;
And then, again, that picture of Christ there,
Cast fallen in an agony of prayer,
And his disciples near him, stern and dumb,
Like men who know the fated hour is come:"

Had she said thus, and added, "Take me, dear,
Outside of these sad times; let me stand
Once more within life's shallows, and there hear
Light laughter of the surf upon the beach,
For here the very sea is without song or speech,
So is all it is, and far away from land;
I want life's little joys; this atmosphere
Oppresses me; I cannot breathe in it;
The light that lights your life leaves mine unlit"—
I should have answered tenderly, and sought
To carry out in all her slightest thought.

She knew I loved her, through those Winter days;
Dil it not comfort her at all, my love?
It was such joy to look upon her face,
I sat for hours, content to be quite still,
Feeling her warm bright beauty fill
My soul and brain; fearful lest she should move,
And sneak, or go; but when she met my gaze
I turned away, as if I had done wrong
In so king on her loveliness so long.
I rarely kissed her, rarely took her hand;
And now, I think, she did not understand.

Perchance she thought my love was passionless,
Wanted what I withheld yet longed to give;
She did not know my silence a caress—
Ah! passion was by reverence controlled—
And so she deemed my love of love were cold.
Ah me! the lonely life she had to live!
And I knew nothing of its loneliness.
Here was a nature quick to give and take.
A nature to be broken and to break;
She loved confiding valleys, sun-kissed hills,
But saddened at the solemn peace of hills.

All things had been so different had I known
Her nature then as now; and yet, and yet,
If she came in, as I sit here alone,
The April twilight falling through the room,
And all the pictures lapsing into gloom—
Came in, knelt down, and on my lap me to forget,
Forgive her, and reclaim her for my own,
I should be glad, and draw her to my heart,
And kiss the rising tears away, and part
The sweet hair back, and fold her to my side,
Yet leave, perchance, the want unsatisfied.

But here she comes not. I must wait and bear;
Live on, and serve my art as best I may.
If I can catch the color of her hair
And the neck's poise, and set beneath her name,
Shall not her loveliness have deathless fame?
Now lights shine out along the London square.
O dreary place! where no joy comes at all.
There! I must turn the easel to the wall!
I cannot bear her face as yet—O Love!
O, wounded of my hands! my wounded dove!

ST. VALENTINE'S LOITERY.

IN TWO DRAWINGS.

I.

THE FIRST DRAWING.

Early days for sketching out of doors. Mid February does not generally in our climate offer much temptation to the landscape-painter to take the field. But Frank Hilary was young, strong, and enthusiastic, full of determination, and ready to brave all the vicissitudes of the artist's career, bad weather included.

But the weather was not bad on the occasion when we first make his acquaintance, as he sits quietly working at a water-color drawing of some grand pollard oaks—quite the contrary, for the sky and the temperature on this present 14th of February, A. D. 1870, was suggestive rather of Midsummer. It was one of those sudden bursts of Spring-promise with which we are sometimes favored, only, as it would seem, to emphasize the rigors of the March and April that are to follow.

The woods were alive with song, the feathered choristers availing themselves to the utmost, everywhere, of the encouragement the sun was giving to their love-making. True, the trees were bare, freezingly bare, with an uncanny skeleton-like look about them, while the dense masses of evergreen shrubbery which somehow had got itself mixed up with the brambles and soddened bracken on the skirts of the oak copse which Hilary was sketching, brought into strong relief, here and there, the silvery boles and rugged gnarled trunks of the forest monarchs. The timid crocus and primrose peeped out now and again from among the weltering heaps of last Autumn's russet leaves, and even massed themselves as unmistakable patches of color along the ridge of broken gravelly bank which, amphitheatre-like, made an uncommonly snug nook for the painter.

It was a singularly sheltered and sequestered spot, and sitting there so quietly as he did, the very squirrels came down from their trees, and the rabbits from their burrows, to within arm's length of him before they saw him. It was altogether a paradise of a place for a painter, while the fine foreground of gnarled timber, the wide stretch of park, the peep of blue distance, and the gabled roofs, twisted chimneys, and ivy-clad turrets of Croyston Towers made up a subject which must have struck even the most indifferent.

Frank Hilary had found his way hither from Hadenham, a house three miles off, where he was staying while painting the portrait of a favorite child, one of several daughters of a Mr. Hughes, the owner of the place. He had nearly completed it, and would probably have returned to London without so much as catching a glimpse of Croyston Towers, had not the sudden illness of the little girl prevented her from sitting to him for two or three days. But as the picturesque fame of the neighboring old mansion was proverbial, Hilary availed himself of the fine weather and his unlooked-for leisure, to walk over and possibly make a sketch of the celebrated Tudor mansion.

He had approached to within a quarter of a mile of it by a path across the park when he suddenly came upon the oak trees and the composition they made with the distant view of the house. Halting within the little amphitheatre of broken bank where we find him sitting, he exclaimed: "Whew! how hot it is! It's like June! I can walk no further; this subject is good enough for me;" and he went to work accordingly.

It was about 10 o'clock A. M. when he first opened his camp-stool, and for two hours he remained completely absorbed and undisturbed. Looking up at last, toward the left, where the evergreens trended away in a sort of wilderness until they reached the shrubbery and gardens of the mansion, what was his surprise to see a young lady sitting within some thirty yards of him, also sketching. Her profile was toward him, and it was very evident to him, after a few minutes contemplation, that she, like the squirrels and rabbits, had come to these close quarters quite unconscious of his presence. Moreover, from the general lay of the land, the bank, and the shrubs, his ambush was pretty nearly complete. He had a perfect view of her, but unless she were to advance a few paces, and then look straight back into his little amphitheatre, she probably could not see him at all. She made a striking figure, one not likely to be overlooked by an artist.

"How charmingly she comes there!" said Frank to himself. "By Jove, I must make a line or two of her. What luck! why, if one had wanted a figure to fit, here it is—color perfect, form exquisite!"

With rapid strokes the skilled hand soon produced an unmistakable presentment, slight at first, but growing by degrees into a vivid reproduction. The soft woolen dress of a lovely olive-gray green, with collar and cuffs of dark fur, contrasted well with the rich golden twists of hair kept nattily in their place by a knot of deep-crimson ribbon shining out quite brilliantly under the shady black hat covered with nestling feathers, while the slightest peep of a crimson petticoat carried the warm tone artistically through the composition. As one by one such details were completed, the artist's enthusiasm and admiration increased. When she moved slightly, he paused in an agony lest the pose should be irremediably altered. When she turned her head, he winced lest she might see him, and so take flight abashed; but within an hour and a half he had managed to complete a most attractive sketch in water-color, perfectly unmistakable in its likeness. The delicate piquant profile even had been caught, and was as like as all the rest, notwithstanding the distance betwixt artist and sitter; for Frank's clear blue eye was far-reaching and penetrating.

One o'clock rung out from the turret of Croyston Towers. The young lady rose hastily, gathered her traps together, and hurried away through the wilderness toward the house.

"What a nuisance!" cried Frank aloud; "I only wanted about another half hour, and I could have finished it thoroughly—well, never mind. I'll come over again to-morrow, and very likely she will come too; she is an enthusiast evidently, dear little creature, from the way she stuck to her work; amateurs generally are. I wonder who she is?"

Then Frank went on with his oak trees through the remainder of the lovely afternoon, and came again the next day, as he said, to finish them; it could not have been for any other purpose, of course; but somehow he could not finish them; circumstances were just as propitious for work, and the weather was equally fine, but nevertheless he could not settle to it. Instead of looking at his subject, he was forever turning his head to the left, toward that shrubbery of a wilderness, as if he expected something besides bushes to appear there. Nothing else, however, was visible throughout the whole day; and it became quite evident to the least interested in such matters that the oak-trees would still require one more day's work. His host saw this plainly; and as the little sitter was no difficulty on that head; so, for the third time, Hilary went to his oak trees, and then he brushed them; but he had no chance of finishing that other drawing—"she" never appeared again.

"What is the name of the family at Croyston Towers?" asked Frank casually of Mr. Hughes at dinner that evening.

"Belport is the family name," was the answer; "but there is only old Lady Belport living there now, the dowager. Croyston is made to do duty for the Dower House."

"There is not much life, then, going on there now, I suppose?" said Frank.

"O dear, no; only people who go over to look at the place, or, like yourself, to make a sketch of it; it's a favorite subject with artists, as you know."

"Yes, in the Summer; there are plenty of them then, no doubt, but not at this time of year, of course," went on Frank.

"By no means; I have seen people sketching there in the depth of Winter," replied the host.

"H'm," thought Hilary, "she couldn't have been staying in the house then. I wonder who she was, and where she came from?"

Surely if he had wanted to know so very much, he might have shown the sketch of the young lady in the wilderness to Mr. Hughes, who, being a local magnate, might have been able to tell him who she was. But he did nothing of the kind, and he returned to London without making an effort, as it seemed, to find out; but then everybody knows that artists are very odd and inconsequent fellows about some things.

II.

THE SECOND DRAWING.

"Glad you like it. It's not much in my line, landscape—and Croyston Towers is such a hackneyed subject that I hardly know how I came to paint it; but I saw it this Winter, during some wonderfully fine weather, and I thought it looked new-rather, and I have made a good deal of the figure, as you see."

"Yes; and very, very charming it is—delightful feeling about it; very nice, indeed, old fellow!—rather a pity you didn't paint it larger.

"Hadn't time."

"However, they have given it a first-rate place; you are sure to sell it."

Now the first-rate place in question was a conspicuous spot on the line in the water-color room of the Royal Academy Exhibition; and the ocoas on when Frank Hilary received the above and many more congratulatory criticisms from his friends was varnishing day, just prior to the opening. The rooms were crowded with the brethren of the brush, chatting and commenting, dusting and touching up their works, as they are privileged to do at such times, undisturbed by the outer world.

Just as the last words of Frank's friend fell from his lips, the two painters were joined by several others.

"Who is the lady, Hilary?" cries one; "she's deuced nice! Evidently a likeness, old man?"

"Yes, it is a likeness, I am bound to say; and she comes pretty well there, I think."

"Ah, you knew her, you rascal, and got her to sit."

"Not at all; but you fellows want to know too much. It doesn't matter to you who she is if you like the result; that's sufficient, isn't it?" said Hilary, biting his lip.

"Well," chimed in yet another brother of the brush who here came up, "if he won't let on about his model, we know where to go for the model of an artist!"

"What do you mean?" said Hilary.

"Oh, I like that! You don't mean to say you don't know what I mean?"

"I'll swear I don't?"

"What! haven't you seen your likeness? Will you tell me you haven't been sitting to somebody?"

"No, on my word!"

"Well, then, it's the most extraordinary likeness I ever saw; come and look; it's rather a clever drawing, too. Here, it's over here, at the end of the room."

And Hilary was carried off by two or three of his friends and brought up in front of a water-color drawing. It represented an artist at work out of doors in Winter, ensconced in a sheltered little nook, with a background of broken bank, pollard oak-trees, and in the distance a peep of—why, Croyston Towers, surely! Frank Hilary was rather taken aback, for, of a certainty, he was the artist. Yes, there he was; just as he must have appeared on that memorable 14th of February and for the two succeeding days. There could be no mistake; he plainly saw the likeness in the face, to say nothing of the fidelity with which his favorite rough shooting-coat, wide-awake, &c., had been reproduced. Besides, there was the place quite recognizable. What did it mean? Stooping down to examine the drawing, for it was hung low, he was so absorbed in wonder that he did not hear the little bursts of raillery and laughter in which his friends continued to indulge. He kept peering and peering, as if to find out who was the painter; but there were no initials, no name in the corner, nothing to give him a clue.

"I should like to take it down and have a look at the back, to see who it is done by," said he abstractedly.

"Just as if you didn't know, Frank. You must wait till Monday for the catalogue, eh, before you can possibly find out? What rot it is, your pretending to be so innocent! Why, he's actually blushing; look!

And the remark of his friend, while it raised more merriment among the others, was strictly true; he was blushing, for a sudden idea had crossed his mind.

Was this portrait of himself in any way the solution of the problem of her non-reappearance? He remembered that the 14th of February was St. Valentine's Day, and this strengthened his idea, though why it should one could hardly guess, for artists do not attend much to dates, nor are they very accurate about them.

During the next two or three hours which Frank Hilary spent in the rooms of Burlington House, he paid many furtive visits to the water-color room, in the hope of catching some one dusting the glass over his portrait, and so perhaps find out what sort of an individual the artist might be. But nobody gave the least care in the drawing, and Frank was fain to go home in ignorance of who had turned him to such picturesque account. This was on the Tuesday. Thursday was the press day, on Friday came the private view; but Hilary was not high up enough on the ladder of notoriety to be invited, and so he never got a peep into a catalogue. However, he should find out all about it on Monday he thought, and was pacifying his impatience with this reflection and a final pipe on the Friday evening in question, when the last post brought him a letter. It was an important-looking letter, too, only the second of its kind he had ever received; but he knew it, and tore it open impatiently. With the official heading of the Royal Academy of Arts, the printed form with names, dates, &c., filled in, it ran thus:

SIR: I have to intimate to you that your work, No. 631 in the Catalogue of the Royal Academy for the present year, entitled "A Lady Sketching, Croyston Towers, St. Valentine's Day," and No. 240, has been selected for purchase by Mr. Raphael Madder, of 888 Piccadilly. As the Royal Academy only undertakes to register the selection of works, it is left to the artist to communicate with the purchaser in reference to the payment and delivery of the work at the close of the exhibition.

I am, Sir, yours, ———.

To Frank Hilary, Esq.

"Capital!" thought Frank, "this is luck indeed! But who is Mr. Raphael Madder? Why, if I'm not mistaken, he's an artists' color-man; keeps one of those fashionable West-end shops, all polish and pasteboard, to tempt the amateur; and if so, he is only a dummy put forward by the real purchaser, who does not want to be known. He could not have been himself at the private view. I shall see about it the first thing to-morrow morning."

"Yes, Sir," said the shopman, "we have been advised by our customer of the purchase, and have been directed to hand you a check for the amount on Monday, on the receipt of your order to receive the picture at the close of the exhibition."

"But your customer," said Frank; "who is your customer?"

"We are not at liberty to say, Sir; it was made a particular request that we should not say. We often act as agents for our customers in these matters. It saves wealthy people a deal of trouble."

"H'm," said Frank, "I should like to have known where my picture was going, nevertheless. You are really stating facts, are you? I mean you are not going in for picture-dealing yourselves?"

"Oh, dear, no, Sir! As I say, we do a great deal of agency business of this kind; you will find our name and address given in the catalogue frequently; that is for amateur ladies and gentlemen who don't want their own residences given. See," went on the man, producing a new but much-rumpled catalogue of the Exaibition, "here we are; here's a case this year, 'Brown, Corisande, No. 842, care of Mr. Raphael Madder,' &c." His finger was traveling down the alphabetical list of contributors at the end of the book. Frank pounced on it eagerly (now he should find out at least the name of the artist who had painted him;) and saying, "Allow me," sought out the water-color room. Quickly his eye took in a page or two of numbers, titles, and artists' names. Presently he paused in surprise; there it was undoubtedly; that was it, "No. 842. An Artist Sketching Croyston Towers, St. Valentine's Day;" and who had painted it, after all? Why, "Corisande Brown!" Then Frank turned to the alphabetical list again to make sure.

"What did you say was the name?" he was going on. "Yes, certainly, 'Corisande Brown!' I see, care of Mr. Raphael Madder. O, then," addressing the man behind the counter, "this picture is by another of your customers?"

The man's eye was following Frank's pointing finger. "Yes, that is so, Sir," was the answer.

"Do you know if it is for sale?"

"Cannot say, Sir, but I should fancy not; amateurs do not generally care to sell."

"And who is Corisande Brown, may I ask?"

"I am not at liberty to say, Sir; it is quite anonymous; in point of fact, I don't know; Mr. Madder manages these things."

"H'm; very mysterious, indeed," said Frank half angrily; "You won't tell me who bought my picture, and you won't tell me who painted a picture I admire; and, supposing I want to buy it, you won't tell me whether it is for sale. Strange way of doing business."

"These are my orders, Sir; but I'll find out. I'll ask Mr. Madder if he thinks the drawing you refer to is to be had."

"Well, I wish you would. I saw it on the varnishing day, and I should like to have it if it is not too much. Well, then, if I call on Monday," continued Frank, after a pause, "and give you an order to receive my picture, you say you will give me a check for the amount?"

"Yes, Sir, and let you know about the drawing at the same time. Good morning, Sir."

Very much puzzled indeed was Frank with all this. Strange that the portrait of himself should be christened much as he had christened his portrait of her. "A Lady Sketching Croyston Towers, St. Valentine's Day." "An Artist Sketching Croyston Towers, St. Valentine's Day." Odd, too, that Mr. Madder should be acting as agent for the exhibition of the one and for the purchase of the other. Well, it is a coincidence, of course, but, all things remembered, it's a strange one! And Frank went on his way musing.

After a nasty run through the rooms on Monday, the opening day, he marched straight off again to Mr. Madder's, and found the check, signed by that purveyor of artists' materials, awaiting him. Duly acknowledging it, and giving his order for the delivery of the picture to Mr. Madder, he said:

"Well, what about that drawing? Is it for sale?"

"No, Sir."

"Positively?"

"Positively."

"Now, it is not by any chance the work of the same person who bought my picture, is it?"

"Really, I don't know, Sir; I cannot say."

"They are both customers of yours?"

"Yes, Sir."

"But they are not both the same person?"

"Upon my word, Sir," said the man, smiling, "I am not at liberty to say anything."

No, and strive as he would, Frank could get no more out of Mr. Raphael Madder's man; but he drew his own conclusions, and he had to wait six weeks before he obtained any relief for the unusually perplexed state of his intellect.

The evening set apart by the President and Council of the Royal Academy for their grand soirée and reception came round, as it usually does, toward the end of June. Mr. Frank Hilary, like the rest of the exhibitors, was bidden to the entertainment, there to mingle with the motley throng, ranging from the highest in the land to the most obscure followers of art—yes, like the rest of the exhibitors, for they are all invited. "She" might be there, then; at any rate, "Corisande Brown" would be invited, and supposing she and the purchaser of his picture were one and the same person, why, he might see her perhaps! So he went to Burlington House in a state of undue trepidation. Constantly he found himself growling in the neighborhood, first of his own portrait, and then of his own picture. Suddenly, on coming within range of the latter, he started, and had any of his jocose friends been with him (which he thanked his stars was not the case) he certainly would again have become a butt for their good-humored chaff, for he was blushing up to the roots of his hair.

A little knot of people were standing in front of No 631, "A Lady Sketching," &c., evidently examining it with keen interest. The person only, however, in this group had any attraction for Frank. He saw nobody but her; for there she was, unmistakably, looking at her own portrait. Her profile was toward him, as it had been when he made the sketch, as it was now in its reproduction in the finished drawing. The likeness, under this severe test, was even more striking than ever, in spite of the vast difference in costume. In a bewilderment of admiration—not, be it understood, of his own skill, but of her beauty—Hilary hardly knew whether he was on his head or his heels. A hand on his shoulder aroused him, and turning, he was face to face with Mr. Hughes, his host at Hadenham.

"Glad to meet you, Mr. Hilary. I have been looking at your picture of Croyston Towers; it is capital! I recognized it from its fidelity to the sketch you showed me, which you made while staying with us; but the figure, the young lady, that was not in your original drawing, I think? that I suppose, was a separate study which you did not show me?" and there was an airy significance in Mr. Hughes' last words.

Recovering from his momentary confusion, and stammering out something about its being an afterthought, Frank saw that Mr. Hughes made one of the party that had been looking at his picture.

"It is a capital likeness," continued that gentleman. "I know the lady intimately, and she is amazed and puzzled to imagine how you obtained her portrait; for she declares she never sat to you, and is highly indignant. She wishes me to present you to her, however, that she may ask you and call you to account. Allow me: Mr. Hilary, Miss Dacres;" and Frank immediately found himself bowing to his nymph of the woods.

"I am rather pleased with your picture, Mr. Hilary," she said condescendingly, in a voice that, notwithstanding the hauteur of its tone, set his whole frame tingling. "It is very like—the place, I mean; we live close to Croyston, and I know it well."

"I am glad you approve," said Frank, now no longer blushing, his courage having risen to the occasion.

"But, pray," she went on, "how did you get a like—"

"Ah," he broke in, "I know what you are going to say. I must ask your forgiveness. A thousand pardons for having taken such a liberty; but it was irresistible—I mean, you were irresistible; as an artist yourself, you can understand how well you came against those dark evergreens."

"Yes, you have made my dress tell very well, I grant," she said, glancing toward the picture with an air of patronage; "but I want to know, and I insist on being told, how you were able to make a likeness of me? and how do you know I am an artist? Is there anything in my personal appearance that suggests the æsthetic?"

"Yes; particularly when I see you on a camp-stool, with a color-box on your thumb?"

"Pray, where did you ever see me so?"

"Why, there—where I have painted you!" and Hilary pointed to the picture.

"Indeed! I was not aware that I was being watched. I did not know that espionage was one of the many accomplishments of a painter!"

"I apologize. I dared not let you see me, or I should have lost my one great opportunity; but you had your revenge, I fancy," he added, looking straight into her dark-gray eyes, which she immediately dropped.

"I don't understand," she said. "I certainly did not see you when I was sketching 'Old Croyston'"—an emphasis on "Old Croyston"—"on that very fine St. Valentine's day."

"Ah!" cried Frank; "no, you did not see me then; but how about the next day and the next? They were equally fine; did not you go again to the oak copse?"

"Really I don't remember," she answered, a little confused.

"No? There is a picture over there—if you won't mind coming to the other end of the room—that might possibly help your memory; it is rather a curious coincidence."

Frank offered his arm, and they moved away, followed by Mr. Hughes and his two elder daughters, who were with him.

"That's it," he said. "Odd coincidence, is it not?—"An Artist Sketching," instead of "A Lady Sketching?"

She made a pretense of looking at the picture, and then of searching for it in the catalogue. Then she said naïvely:

"'Corisande Brown'—who is she?"

"Ah, who indeed! Whoever she is, she is clever enough; and you see who she has been painting, don't you?"

"It is not unlike you, Mr. Hilary," she said, with an air of supreme innocence.

"No, not very unlike indeed. I was so vain that I wanted to buy it, because it was like—"

"And you could not?"

"No; Corisande Brown won't sell it."

"You must take that as a compliment; she does not want to part with you!"

"Ah, if I could only think that! But I don't deserve such happiness, because, you see, I have sold her portrait"—he chanced this bold shot—"and I have been miserable ever since; and what's more, I can't find out who has bought it."

"Perhaps Corisande Brown has bought it," said Miss Dacres archly—the shot seemed to have told—"perhaps she wants it as a companion to her artist; the drawings are much the same size, and would make a happy pair—a pair of Valentines in fact?"

Mr. Hughes here interrupted and changed the conversation by a reference to some other picture, to Frank's infinite disgust; and what with the jostling of the crowd and the talk of the rest of the party, he never again that night got a word with Miss Dacres. He hovered round her, but she had evidently no intention that he should pursue the subject; and after a while Frank lost sight of her and her friends entirely, as they mingled with the company. He was in an agony of despair, and rushed wildly about the rooms; but people were beginning to go now—the Royal Academy soirée of 1870 was over, and the painter had to retire with the rest, in a state of dejection that was quite abject. Was there ever such a fascinating, charming woman? He began to build the most stupendous castles in the air. He must see her again; but how? He had failed even to get Mr. Hughes' town address, and he was under an engagement to leave London himself in a few days. Poor Frank! he was hard hit—he could not get over it. There was a significance, too, he thought, about all the circumstances quite remarkable; and they were, it must be admitted, sufficient to make a deep impression on the heart of a susceptible and sensitive young artist; and we all know how sensitive and susceptible artists are, both young and old.

III.

THE PRIZE.

Once more the Winter came round. The occupations of the interval had not diverted Frank's thoughts; he dreamt of his nymph of the woods day and night; but his despair was growing chronic, when the hope of seeing her again was revived early in the new year by the receipt of a letter from Mr. Hughes requesting that he would make arrangements to go down to Hadenham to paint the portrait of another of his children. He went gladly, of course, and once more, by mid-February, had nearly completed his work. He had not dared to refer to Miss Dacres; his old timidity having again laid hold of him, he could not think of her without blushing. Mr. Hughes was the first to mention her.

"We are going to drive over to Lockhurst, Mr. Hilary," he said one day at luncheon; "there are a few good pictures there; you might be interested. By the way, you met Miss Dacres, I think. Of course, I remember; I introduced you at the Academy soirée. I don't know if she is at home, though, now."

"Miss Dacres lives at Lockhurst, then?" inquired Frank.

"Yes, sometimes. She is very well off, and quite independent. She goes about a good deal, but spends the most of her time with an old aunt at Lockhurst; I hope she is there now."

And we may be sure Frank echoed that hope heartily.

It was realized. Miss Dacres was there, and renewed her acquaintance with Mr. Hilary cordially, if a little shyly; but his courage never forsook him, he found when once in her presence. Her aunt was not well, and she had to do the honors. The pictures, however, were not of much importance, being principally the work of amateurs; sketches which Miss Dacres had got together from her friends, with here and there a purchase from a water-color exhibition. They had been nearly all duly inspected, Frank making appropriate reference, of course, to Miss Dacres' own taste and skill in the art; and the party were passing along a corridor back to the drawing-room for afternoon tea, when the sight of an easel, through a half open door, caught Hilary's attention.

"Your painting-room, Miss Dacres, I presume," he cried, stopping, while Mr. Hughes and his two daughters, who were in advance, continued their way to the drawing-room. "May I not be privileged to see what you are doing?"

"O, I have very little to show; but if you care to look, walk in."

He did so, a step in advance of her. In an instant she shot by him like a rush of wind, and with a sweep of her arm rapidly drew a curtain across a little recess or alcove; but Frank's eyes were quicker than her action: she was too late, for he had seen—what? Why, his picture, "A Lady Sketching," &c., hanging on the wall, and side by side with it, as companion, his own portrait—"An Artist Sketching," &c.!

Covered with confusion and blushes, she stood convicted. Far too generous to take undue advantage, Hilary immediately turned to the work on the easel, and after a few unmeaning words of criticism he said, "You are going to send this drawing to the Academy?"

"If I get it finished in time," she answered, reddening a little.

"O, you must; it would never do for 'Corisande Brown' not to be represented."

"I think you are very unkind, Mr. Hilary."

"Do you then behave in a Christian spirit—return good for evil; be kind to me."

He hardly knew what he was saying, but he was very conscious of the truth of the axiom, "faint heart," &c., and this consciousness swept all before it. He turned toward her.

"I have guessed this, hoped this, all along; that is, that you, Corisande Brown, and the purchaser of my picture, were one and the same person. I have had an intuitive conviction of it, a presentiment, Miss Dacres."

"I don't believe in presentiments," she answered, avoiding his eyes and going to the door. "Tea is waiting."

"O, pray stop one moment; at least you believe in St. Valentine; you said so at the Academy."

"I said nothing of the kind."

"Ah, but you said the two pictures, our two pictures, would make a pair of Valentines, a 'fanny pair.' Accept the omen, Miss Dacres; there must be something in it. Why, to-day is the anniversary—to-day is the 14th; St. Valentine again, as I live! It is fate; you cannot fly in the face of fate; when it thus decrees us both a chance in the lottery, and assures me that, if I win, I at least must do so with a priceless prize! Say that I may hope, and if the devotion of a life have any influence, you shall admit that at least you have not drawn a blank."

He had followed her to the door, and for one moment held her hand in his, and put it to his lips before she passed out, and led the way without a word to the drawing-room.

What need to detail the sequel to a scene like this? Clearly there could be but one. Ground thus broken, Frank Hilary's impetuous courage bore down all obstacles, and some months before the next anniversary of St. Valentine came round, the "happy pair" were at work in the same studio.

"Corisande Brown" is still a frequent exhibitor. Frank often sits to her (he is very handsome,) but she tells him he is by no means so steady a model as he was at that memorable time at Old Croyston.

"Ah, I did not know you were looking at me then," he pleads, "and, by the bye, you have never told me how it was you managed to elude my eagle eye; I was looking everywhere for you the two following days."

"O, it was on the afternoon of St. Valentine's day that I made my sketch of you," answered Mrs. Hilary. "I wanted to finish my sketch, and I was returning through the wilderness from lunching with old Lady Belport, when I caught sight of you in the distance, and I determined to try and have a peep at what you were doing; so I made a great round, and came upon you from the other side of the copse, where you never looked. Of course it was very wrong of me; but I got quite close, so close that I could see your drawing. To my surprise, I beheld you were touching up, not a drawing of Croyston Towers, but a sketch of myself. I was piqued at your impertinence, and so, as you said afterward, I took my revenge. I made a sketch of you, and crept away again, like the guilty creature that I was, in the gloom of the evening, without your once having had an idea of my presence. I was not near the place after that."

"Well, all is fair in love and war," answered Frank; "we were both guilty creatures; it was tit for tat. You don't grumble, do you?"

"No, indeed," answered his wife; "for I feel that I, no less than you, (as you say,) have drawn a prize in St. Valentine's lottery!"—London Society.

FRENCH ANIMAL PAINTERS.—In the field of animal painting, combined with landscape, we find the French artists holding a position in advance of anything that has been done since the days when Paul Potter painted his famous bull, done at the age of twenty-three. If he had not died at twenty-seven, he might have produced work beyond the hope of rivalry. In the English and German schools we find individual cases of great ability in the representation of animal life, but the French in the last generation gave us the school of Troyon, and the national genius for this branch of art has not yet passed away. Who is there that paints sheep better than Jacques? He is a native of Paris. So was Corôt; and so was Turner a native of London. Those who make a study of human nature may find an interesting field for thought in looking into the causes that in the heart of a great city, far away from green fields, produced three of the greatest of delineators of rural life in modern times. Delaux, Chaigneaux, Schenck, and several others are also distinguished in this line. Schenck was a wine-merchant at Oporto. He sold out his wine vaults, came to Paris, and became an artist of merit. Van Marke and Mauve represent cattle with much vigor, but the greatest animal painter now in France is probably Rosa Bonheur. There is the same intense observation and sympathy with nature, the same vigor of treatment we find in the works of Troyon and Landseer. More refinement than in Troyon, with rather less of power, but more power than in Landseer, so far as the representation of cattle is concerned. In the painting of deer and dogs the English artist holds a position entirely alone.—Harper's Magazine for March.

THE BIOGRAPHER OF GOETHE.—Johann Peter Eckerman, born in the vicinity of Hamburg, toward the end of the last century, of peasant parents, had in his fifteenth year barely acquired the first rudiments of education, by such attendance at the village school as he could snatch in the intervals of farm drudgery. A natural taste and capacity which he displayed for drawing attracted the notice of a local official, who afforded him opportunities for some higher instruction, by means of which he was enabled to qualify for a small appointment under Government. Called to take up arms in the German wars of liberation, he availed himself of a campaign in the Low Countries to make himself acquainted with the great Dutch painters, whose works the young recruit attempted to copy during his passing visits to museums and picture galleries, carrying about his unfinished sketches in his knapsack. On the conclusion of peace, in 1815, he again obtained a clerkship, and devoted his leisure hours to attendance at the local gymnasium, indifferent to the ridicule which attached to a young man of four-and-twenty taking his place in the school-room by the side of boys of twelve and fourteen. After some years of unremitting application, the proceeds of a volume of poems, published by subscription, together with a small grant from Government, enabled him to go through a two years' course at the University at Göttingen, at the conclusion of which he ventured to submit to Germany's great poet his manuscript of a carefully prepared work, "Beiträge zur Poesie," with a request for an introduction to a publisher should the composition be thought worthy of such a favor. He received a courteous and encouraging reply, and, impelled by an irresistible impulse to see the man whom he already considered his patron and benefactor, the poor student, on a hot Summer's day in 1823, buckled on his knapsack and trudged on foot from Hanover to Weimar. He thus describes their first interview: "Before long Goethe entered. He wore a blue overcoat and shoes; a noble figure! the impression was overwhelming, but he at once dispelled my embarrassment by his cordial words. We sat upon the sofa; I felt blissfully overcome by his presence and contact, and could hardly find words to address him. We sat together long in a calm and loving mood; I pressed his knee; I could not utter from gazing upon him—I could not see enough of him. * * * He spoke slowly and deliberately as one might assign an aged monarch to speak. He sees at a glance that he reposes upon himself and is raised above praise and censure. I felt inexpressibly well while in his presence, and soothed as one might be who, after much trouble and long hoping, had at length seen his fondest wishes gratified. We parted from one another with love; I, happy in the highest degree, for good will sounded in all his words, and I felt that he thought well of me." Nor was it in words only that Goethe showed his consideration for the poor unknown student. With that innate delicacy which was one of the most marked traits of his generous nature, he found a plausible pretext for providing Eckerman with remunerative work in the revision of his unpublished writings; and in this employment, doubly congenial from the circumstance of its bringing him into almost daily contact with his idol, Eckerman continued at Weimar until Goethe's death in the Spring of 1833. Eckerman's character is one deserving of all respect. Thoroughly conscientious and earnest, with a deep reverence for art and a sincere love of nature, he was simple, truthful, and affectionate. We have seen how, under difficulties almost insuperable, the poor peasant boy had succeeded by force of will, energy, and self-denial, in so highly cultivating himself as to fit him for companionship with one of the greatest minds of his age. The qualities necessary for fully understanding and reflecting such a mind he did not possess. The appreciative sentiment, which he had in a high degree, is rarely wanting in a literary executor, and is indeed too commonly a source of danger; but of the critical and discriminative faculty, than which no gift is more indispensable to a biographer, Eckerman was entirely devoid. His countrymen have called him the German Boswell; but beyond their reverential natures the two men had nothing in common. Johnson personally is perhaps better known to Englishmen than any man of his time, and this he owes far less to the Rambler or to Rasselas than to Boswell. He did enough to earn a lasting fame, but many a man whose knowledge of the great moralist's works does not extend beyond an occasional reference to the dictionary is familiarly acquainted with Johnson's face, figure, and dress, his habits, his sayings and doings, and can picture him as he sits over a dish of tea in Mrs. Thrale's drawing-room, or lays down the law among congenial spirits at the "Mitre Tavern," or snuos the faithful Boswell in his study. Eckerman's records call up no such image. He tells us, it is true, how Goethe was dressed on different occasions: in a black coat with a star, or a brown coat with a blue cap, or in a white flannel dressing-gown; but his words convey no impression of living individuality. He is a photographer rather than an artist. He produces faithfully enough the outlines of face and feature, with furrows and wrinkles; but we do not see the man as he walked and talked and looked. We never hear his voice or catch his smile. Of those delicate lights and shadows which give life to the canvas, those subtle artistic touches by means of which Lewes, without the advantage of personal intercourse, has produced so graphic and powerful a picture, there is not a trace in Eckerman.—New Quarterly Magazine.

FRENCH MARINE AND LANDSCAPE PAINTERS.—Isabey is the only Frenchman who ever painted a marine worth looking at a second time, and he is now very old; but he is a magnificent colorist and did some very nice things long ago. The remainder, Jules Dupré, (who is, however, a good landscape painter,) Vernier, &c., know nothing either of ships or the sea—at least, there is little in their paintings to lead one to think they do—while they all perpetrate in them the simplest errors in perspective, such as one would look for in vain in their poorest landscapes. Not to make too bad a joke of their awkwardness, they are all, indeed, entirely "at sea" on the subject. But in landscape the French artist is at home; and here amid pastoral scenes or representations of Oriental effects, we find a great school of poetry that reminds us alternately of Theocritus, or the Bucolics of Virgil, or the third and fourth cantos of "Childe Harold." France has produced three landscape painters of consummate ability, Claude Lorraine, Thomas Rosseau, and Jean Baptiste Camille Corôt, each entirely different in every respect, excepting that they were agreed in looking at nature not only for what she seems to the visual eye, but still more for what she suggests to the soul. They were men endowed not only with exquisite keenness of vision in detecting the harmonies of the visible world, and admirable perception of color and technical ability, but they were also men of thought, of imagination, of vast poetic feeling. But they are dead. Claude came alone, and left no successor behind him for a century and a half, while the two latter, we also be said to have left none after them their peers in pure landscape. Lambinet, D'Aubigny, Lansyer, Bernier, Harpignes, and others we might mention, are men of very great ability, especially the first, but there is less sympathy apparent in their works for the hidden mysteries and suggestions of nature than for what it simply appears to the physical eye; and the growing weakness of this field of art in France is apparent from the vast number of daubs—for they cannot conscientiously be called anything else—which are constantly and unblushingly brought forward as transcripts of nature by artists of average merit.—Harper's Magazine for March.

PENZANCE.—Of all our Winter health resorts, the medical pre-eminence is justly due to Penzance. Torquay comes nearest in value through its protective screen of hills, but there are reasons for preferring Penzance to Torquay. Unlike Torquay, however, Penzance has its trade and shipping, and has failed to make itself a fashionable residence for valetudinarians. Pulmonary invalids, however, have never been slow in recognizing its value. The town has not got the scenic loveliness of Torquay nor work of Jules Breton than upon any other living French artist. The Germans pay him the high compliment of assigning to him the qualities of the best German artists. In hard times he is the only one who finds the price of his paintings constantly rising. It is, perhaps, not too much to assign to Jules Breton the leading place in the contemporary French school.—Harper's Magazine for March.

THE GREAT STORMS.—The most terrible storm which has, perhaps, ever occurred is that which has been called the Great Storm. It occurred, or rather its worst effects were experienced, on Oct. 10, 1780. Generated probably in mid-Atlantic, not far from the equator, it was first felt in Barbados, where trees and houses were blown down. Capt. Maury, in his "Physical Geography of the Sea," gives a rather exaggerated account of the effects produced by this storm in Barbados, apparently from memory—some of the details being like, but not quite the same as those actually recorded. He says "the bark was blown from the trees, and the fruits of the earth destroyed; the very bottom and depths of the sea were uprooted—forts and castles were washed away, and their great guns carried in the air like chaff." The bark of trees was removed, but, it is believed rather through the effects of electric action than by the power of the wind. Cannon, also, were driven along the batteries, and flung over into the fosse, but not "carried in the air like chaff." At Martinique the storm overtook a French transport fleet, and entirely destroyed it. There were 40 vessels, conveying 4,000 soldiers, and the Governor of Martinique reported their fate to the French Government in three words—"The vessels disappeared." Nine thousand persons perished at Martinique, and 1,000 at St. Pierre, where not a house was left standing. St. Domingo, St. Vincent, St. Eustache, and Porto Rico were next visited and devastated, while scarcely a single vessel near this part of the cyclone's track was afloat on Oct. 11. At Port Royal the cathedral, seven churches, and 1,400 houses were blown down, and 1,600 sick and wounded persons were buried beneath the ruins of the hospital. At the Bermudas, fifty British ships were driven ashore, two line-of-battle ships went down at sea, and 22,000 persons perished. Perhaps the most remarkable effects of the storm in this portion of its course were those experienced in the Leeward Isles. The hurricane drove a twelve-pounder cannon a distance of 400 feet. Those who lived in the Government Building took refuge in the central part, where circular walls, nearly a yard thick, seemed to afford promise of safety. But at 11:30 o'clock the wind had broken down parts of these walls, and lifted off the roof. Terrified they sought refuge in the cellarage, but before long the water had risen there to the height of more than a yard, and they were driven into the battery where they placed themselves behind the heavier cannons, some of which were driven from their place by the force of the wind. When day broke the country looked as if it had been blasted by fire; not a leaf, scarce even a branch, remained upon the trees. As in great floods a common terror preserves peace among animals which usually war upon each other, so during the Great Storm human passions were for the time quelled by the fiercer war of the elements. Among the ships destroyed at Martinique were two English war-ships. Twenty-five sailors who survived surrendered themselves prisoners to the Marquis of Bouillé, the Governor of the Island. But he sent them to St. Lucie, writing to the English Governor of that island that "he was unwilling to retain as prisoners men who had fallen into his hands during a disaster from which so many had suffered." The Great Storm of 1780 must not be confounded with the storm remembered the many years in Great Britain as the Great Storm. The latter occurred on Nov. 26, 1703, and its worst effects were experienced not as usual in the tropics, but in Western Europe. The reader will remember Macaulay's reference to it in his essay on the "Life and Writings of Addison." In his famous poem "The Campaign," Addison had compared Marlborough to an angel guiding the whirlwind. "We must point out," writes Macaulay, "one circumstance which appears to have escaped all the critics. The extraordinary effect which this simile produced when it first appeared, and which to the following generation appeared inexplicable, is doubtless to be chiefly attributed to a line which most readers now regard as a feeble parenthesis:

Addison spoke, not of a storm, but of the storm. The great tempest of November, 1703, the only tempest which in our latitude has equalled the rage of a tropical hurricane, had left a dreadful recollection in the minds of all men. No other tempest was ever in this country the occasion of a parliamentary address or of a public fast. Whole fleets had been cast away. Large mansions had been blown down. One prelate had been buried beneath the ruins of his palace. London and Bristol had presented the appearance of cities just sacked. Hundreds of families were still in mourning. The prostrate trunks of large trees, and the ruins of houses, still attested, in all the southern counties, the fury of the blast." He strangely omits to mention one of the most striking events connected with this terrible storm—the destruction of the Eddystone Lighthouse. Winstanley, the architect of the first Eddystone Lighthouse, was confident that it could resist the fiercest storm which ever blew, and expressed a hope that he might be in it when such a storm raged. On Nov. 26 he arrived with a party of men who were engaged to repair the building. The Great Storm soon after began to blow, and raged throughout the night. On the morning of the 27th no trace of the Lighthouse was to be seen.—Cornhill Magazine.

KASHGAR.—Kashgar is inclosed on all sides by the loftiest mountains in the world, their higher recesses filled with glaciers, the streams from which unite to form the Tarim River, which loses itself eastward in swamps and lagoons known as the Lob, a vast tract, three or four months' journey in circuit, of which nothing is known save that it is roamed over by a wild race of human outcasts, who shun contact with their fellow-men, and contest the shelter of the forest and reed-beds with the wild hog, the panther, the tiger, and the wolf. Beyond this is an unexplored waste of blindingly bright salts, apparently unknown to any living creature save the wild camel. The population is massed in separate settlements or States on the skirts of the mountains, and each community is separated from its neighbor by a waste of gravel and sand. The impression made upon the Envoy by the people of Eastern Turkestan is represented as having been most favorable. They are described as a fine, frank, hardy race, very friendly to Europeans, and superior to all other Asiatics with whom, as yet the members of the Mission were acquainted. Indeed, the picture given by Sir Douglas Forsyth of the hospitable and unassuming manners of the inhabitants of Yarkand and Kashgar, of their industry, intelligence, probity, and activity both of mind and body, is very striking, after the accounts to which we have been accustomed, of the sloth, dirt, misery, depravity and degradation of Asiatic populations in general. A residence was expressly built at Kashgar, by order of the Ameer, for the accommodation of the mission, and the liberality of the King is described as having been unbounded. Sir Douglas Forsyth represents him as a pleasant, good-natured man, with a large head and considerable determination of character. The predominant feeling of the Ameer appears to be a dread of Russia, in which his people seem fully to participate; and when it is considered that the mountains which divide the Ameer's dominions from Russia are only six or seven marches from his capital, such a feeling is natural enough. Although a despot who makes millions tremble at the sound of his name, the Ameer, says Sir D. Forsyth, is "as pleasant a fellow to deal with, when in a good humor, as any one would desire to meet." Very little knowledge of European arts and sciences appears to have yet penetrated into Kashgaria. The telegraph apparatus, which was set up and got into good working order at Kashgar for the transmission of messages between the Ameer's court and the British residency, was looked upon with considerable suspicion, if not with awe. The Ameer never once alluded to it. The models of steam engines and steam-ships, although not regarded as inventions of the devil, excited little interest from mere ignorance of their uses and powers. The magic lantern, however, was more successful. The Ameer possesses a country rich in mineral resources, for gold, copper, lead, and coal are among its productions. He professed himself anxious to turn these resources to account by obtaining scientific assistance in developing them. Want of contact with the Western world has hitherto kept the people of Eastern Turkestan somewhat backward in the arts of peace; but comparing them with the natives of Hindostan they are far in advance, and before long they will place themselves on an equality in many respects with European nations, indeed they are even now far more European in their habits and manners than Indians, Afghans, or Persians. There is a strict system of conscription in Kashgaria. Every villiage is registered as furnishing a certain number of men. These keep their arms at home, and have to attend drill, or are embodied when summoned as occasion may require. When not required for duty they follow their usual occupations. The troops are employed in every kind of work, skilled and ordinary, and are never allowed to idle away their time in barracks.—New Quarterly Magazine.

THE BECHE-DE-MER.—On the reefs of the Southern Ocean is found a kind of sea-slug termed the Beche-de-mer. There are as many as 16 different species found in Fiji alone, and known all over the group by the generic name of Dri (pronounced Endree;) and this word we will continue to use throughout this article, as being shorter and more definite than the French term. It was the French who first came across the mollusc in China; and in that country it is held in great esteem, and commands a very high price, £200 a ton being paid for the best sorts. The mandarins and the porcelain-makers cannot do without their favorite dish of dri soup; and even in Paris it is coming into use; and in Melbourne beche-de-mer is by no means an uncommon dish. When cotton came down in Fiji from four shillings to one shilling a pound, many a planter, not knowing what else to do, turned to dri-fishing; but several years ago the price fell from £170 to £70 a ton, and the inferior sorts became unsaleable. Some Chinamen say the fall was in consequence of the death of their Emperor, and while in mourning for him (a year) they were obliged to give up their favorite soup; hence the fall. But some whites say that the Europeans in Sydney bought inferior dri, and shipped it to China direct on their own account in a leaky ship; the dri was all spoiled; the merchants lost heavily, and refused to have anything more to do with the article; and the Chinamen have the trade in their hands, and give what they like, and the price in China still remains the same. However, it pays to fish for the two best sorts, the tit-fish and black fish, which are now (1876) worth from £60 to £70 a ton in Levuka—10 or 14 corn-bagsful making a ton. The first thing required in dri-fishing is a good boat from 25 to 30 feet long, with plenty of beam; then a dri station is settled on—an island, or on the coast close to the big reefs, as may be. The next thing is to get 30 or 40 girls and boys, and curiously enough the girls are the best fishers and divers by far. At half-tide, all hands sail off to the reefs. Sometimes you fish the day, sometimes the night tides, according to the sort of fish you are getting and the stage of the moon, the tit-fish being a day fish, and the black only coming out at night. When the tide is nearly low, you put your laborers on to the reef, and anchor yourself in a deep spot. The water on the reef is from six inches to three or four feet deep, according to the moon and state of the tide; and your laborers walk about and pick up the fish here and there, each having a basket and stick. Sometimes a shark comes up, looking for a titbit, when he is pelted off. If a black one, (the most dangerous,) it is hard to make him go; and if the water is deep, (three or four feet,) they generally sing out for the boat. You generally remain with the boat. Sometimes you go overboard and fish for yourself; but three hours in three feet of water is cold work, and if not accustomed to it one is apt to catch cold. The laborers pick up shell-fish, crabs, &c., for themselves. At the end of two or three hours the tide begins to make fast; the boat is poled on to the reef, and you pick up your fishers and start for home. After measuring the "take" in order to pay your fishers, the fish are placed in large boilers. After being on the boil for half an hour they are done, taken up, a stick driven through them to clean and knock the water out, and are then taken to the smoking-house, where they are put on large frames of reeds over a slow smoky fire. These frames are technically called vatas; and they are left on the lower vata about three days, and then removed to the upper, where they are left eight or ten days longer. They are by that time smoked hard and dry, then sorted carefully (one improperly dried fish will injure the rest,) and put in bags for sale.—Chambers's Journal.

EDMUND KEAN'S FIRST SEASON AT DRURY LANE.—A dispute arose as to the opening part; Arnold wanted Richard, but Kean knew the disadvantages his small figure would be at, when compared with the majestic Kemble, and answered "Shylock or nothing." There was marvelous resoluteness in this determination, considering all he had passed through, which was sufficient to crush the strongest spirit. But it succeeded, and the 26th of January, 1814, was decided for his appearance. One rehearsal only was vouchsafed him, and that was hurried and careless. The actors sneered at his figure, at his shabby coat with the capes, at his business, declared it would not do, and prophesied certain failure. He went home; "I must dine today," he said, and for the first time for many days indulged in the luxury of meat. Then all he had to do was to wait as patiently as he could for the night. "My God!" he exclaimed, "if I succeed I shall go mad!" Terrible prophecy. Volumes could not better describe the agitation of his mind. As the church clocks were striking 6 he sallied from his lodgings in Cecil street. His parting words to his wife were, "I wish I was going to be shot!" In his hand he carried a small bundle, containing shoes, stockings, wig, and other trifles of costume. The night was very cold and foggy; there had been heavy snow, and a thaw had set in; the streets were almost impassable with slush which penetrated through his worn boots and chilled him to the bone. He darted quickly through the stage-door, wishing to escape all notice, and repaired to his dressing-room. There the feelings of the actors were shocked by another innovation; he was actually going to play Shylock in a black wig instead of the traditional red one. They smiled among themselves, shrugged their shoulders, but made no remark; such a man was beyond remonstrance—besides, what did it matter? he would never be allowed to appear a second time. Jack Bannister and Oxberry were the only ones who offered him a friendly word. When the curtain rose the house was miserably bad, but by-and-by the overflow of Covent Garden, which was doing well at that time, began to drop in and make up a tolerable audience. His reception was encouraging. At his first words, "Three thousand ducats, well!" Dr. Drury, who was in front, pronounced him "safe." At "I will be assured I may," there was a burst of applause, and at the speech ending with "And for these courtesies I'll lend you thus much moneys" the sounds of approbation were very strong. Even as the curtain fell upon the first act success was almost insured, and already the actors who had treated him so supercilliously began to gather round with congratulations. But he shrank from them, and wandered about in the darkness at the back of the stage. The promise of the first act was well sustained in the second. But the great triumph was reserved for his scene with Salanio and Salarino in the third, where the flight of his daughter Jessica with a Christian is told him; there so terrible was his energy, so magnificent his acting that a whirlwind of applause shook the house. Then came the trial scene, grander still in its complex emotions and its larger scope for great powers, and all was so novel, so strange, so opposed to old traditions. When the curtain finally fell upon the wild enthusiasm of the audience the stage manager who had snubbed him offered him oranges, Arnold, who had bullied and "young man'd" him brought him negus. Drunk with delight, he rushed home, and with half frenzied incoherency poured forth the story of his triumph. "The pit rose at me!" he cried. "Mary, you shall ride in your carriage yet!" "Charles," lifting the child from his bed, "shall go to Eton." Then his voice faltered, and he murmured, "If Howard had but lived to see it." The "Merchant of Venice" was played several nights in succession, and the receipts rose from £100 to £600. His next part was Richard—the second part is always the touchstone of an actor's success; here he entered the lists with Cooke and Kemble, and memories of Garrick's splendid performance had not yet died out among old playgoers. In Shylock his small stature mattered little, but in Richard that disadvantage would be glaringly perceptible; he approached the part with fear and trembling. "I am so frightened," he said before the curtain rose, "that my acting will be almost dumb show to-night." But nevertheless he took both audience and critics by storm. Cooke, the great Richard of the day, was said to be left behind at an immeasurable distance; no such performance had been seen since the days of Garrick. Electricity itself was never more instantaneous in its operation. Such were a few of the eulogies showered upon him. But the terrible excitement he had undergone laid him up for a week. Actors now boast of playing this arduous part nearly a hundred successive nights; as they play it there is nothing wonderful in the feat, and then they have no inconvenient modesty to exhaust their energies. On the day of the second performance of this character the doors were besieged soon after noon, and at night hundreds were unable to gain admission. He made Cibber's melo-dramatic hero his own, but it died with him, for the wretched attempts of his successors cannot galvanise that desecration of Shakespeare into life again. The beauties of this performance are said to have been so marvellous that at last glance, the pronouncing of such common phrases as "Good night, my lords," brought down thunders of applause. His next character was Hamlet, which although full of fine points, and the one, he said, to which he had devoted the deepest study, did not equal his previous successes. Othello and Iago, played alternately, were his next triumphs. When the season closed he had performed Shylock fifteen times, Richard twenty-five, Hamlet eight, Othello ten, Iago eight, and Luke ("Riches," Massinger's "City Madam" altered) four. Of those seventy nights the profits were £17,000. Previously there had been one hundred and thirty-nine nights of continuous loss. In the second season he played Macbeth, another grand performance; Romeo, which was said to revive the glories of "silver-tongued Barry." But the triumph of this season was Zanga, in Young's "Revenge." As one who stood among the crowd in the pit-passage heard a shout and clamor of approbation within, he asked if Zanga had just previously said, "Then lose her" for that phrase, when uttered by Kean in the country, used to make the walls shake; and he was answered that it was so. Southey and a friend went to see him in this play. When Zanga, having consummated his vengeance and uttered the words "Know then, 'twas I!" raised his arms over the fainting Alonzo, his attitude, the expression of his features were so terrible, so appalling, that Southey exclaimed, "He looks like Michael Angelo's rebellious arch-angel!"—"He looks like the arch-fiend himself" said the other.—Temple Bar.

MADEIRA WINE.—Two years after its final settlement by the Portuguese the vine was imported into Madeira from the island of Candia or Crete, and found so congenial a soil that its wine became renowned as the most delicious beverage it has been granted man to taste. Madeira has been a household word in every language of Europe, but in 1860 there were only 400 pipes remaining on the island; and though Madeira is still offered for sale in every city of the United States at reasonable rates, it is not difficult to imagine its source. The Madeira wine of commerce was itself a compound of the various productions of the island, known by special names as Bual, Sercial, &c., each possessing a distinctive character. At one time the production amounted to 25,000 pipes a year, but in 1852 the same terrible disease which spread over the other Atlantic islands appeared among the vineyards and destroyed its culture, taking from the island its fair name, ruining thousands of wretched people, and depriving man of a blessing; for since man will yield to the craving nature has implanted in him, and everywhere furnished him the means of gratifying, it is a blessing when he can drink of wine like this rather than some vile substitute. Fortunately the oidium appears to have been destroyed or to have disappeared, and new plants introduced from the United States and Europe are thriving, with every promise of restoring to the island its former celebrity among wine-producing countries. The mildew which attacked the vine has not impaired the fertility of the island in any other respect. Its lofty mountain sides are covered with valuable timber. Pines are of extraordinarily quick growth. The Juglans regia—the fruit of which is termed by some the Persian and by others the English walnut, and better known as the Madeira nut—here attains its highest development. Spice trees flourish, the red pepper exceeding in flavor the product of Cayenne. Oranges and other tropical fruits thrive without care, and strawberries ripen in February in the open air.—Harper's Magazine for March.

THE STEPPES AND OASES OF CENTRAL ASIA.—The Steppes are the bottoms of ancient seas which once rolled over a large portion of the continent of Asia, and which, when swept by storms, rise in tumultuous waves, not of water but of sand, the particles of which might be likened to spray but that they burn like sparks of fire. The terror inspired by these storms is such as to deter even the most adventurous merchant from traversing the Steppes in Summer, unless under the most pressing necessity. Their aspect, when covered with snow, is described as strangely awful and oppressive, exhibiting the expanse of the ocean without its animation, and solitude of the Arctic regions without their sublimity. Woe to the traveler who is overtaken by a snow storm in the Steppes; his doom is inevitable, and bodies of troops, which have essayed the perilous task of marching across the Steppes in Winter, have been overtaken and overwhelmed by a tempest of snow. Dreary as are the Steppes in Winter, their aspect in Spring is not without a certain beauty. The vegetation is rapid, and they are clothed with short vivid green grass, interspersed with scarlet poppies, wild tulips, yellow larkspurs, geraniums, and many kinds of cruciferous and leguminous plants. The oases of Central Asia afford a striking contrast to the surrounding desolation, and the cities which in past ages sprang up in these favored spots abounded in everything that could gratify the heart of an Asiatic. Even in their decay they possess attractions which excite the enthusiasm of travelers, and Bokhara, Balkh, Khokan, Samarcand, Khiva, and Tashkend are still celebrated for their babbling streams, bubbling fountains, delightful gardens, and deep umbrageous groves. The oases are very carefully cultivated. Watermelons are grown over extensive areas, and afford the most grateful alleviation to the often overpowering heat; fruits of various kinds are raised in great perfection, and tobacco of the finest quality is produced in such abundance as to place this necessary of life for an Asiatic within the reach of the poorest individual. The gardens, Mr. Schuyler says, constitute the beauty of this land. The long rows of poplar and elm trees, the vineyards, and the dark foliage of the pomegranate, transport one at once to the plains of Lombardy or the south of France. In the early Spring the cities and their vicinity are one mass of white and pink with the bloom of almond, peach, cherry, apple, apricot, and plum trees, which perfume the air for miles around. These gardens are the favorite resorts of the people in Summer, and well they may be, for nowhere are fruits more abundant, and of some varieties nowhere are they better. The apricots and nectarines it would be impossible to surpass. Peaches, though smaller in size, are said to possess a higher flavor than the best of England. The large dried plumbs of Bokhara are celebrated over the whole of Asia. There are in common cultivation ten varieties of melons. In that hot climate they are considered particularly wholesome, and in Summer form one of the principal articles of food. An acre of land properly prepared will produce, in ordinary years, from two to three thousand, and in good years double that quantity.—New Quarterly Magazine.

THE DUKES OF ENGLAND.—There are but eleven Dukes of England, properly so called; that is, Dukes sitting in the House of Lords as such, and deriving their titles from creations before the union with Scotland. The Duke of Norfolk, as before stated, is the first of these, and the Duke of Rutland the last in order of precedence. The patent of the latter as Duke bears date March 29, 1703. There are also Dukes of Great Britain and of the United Kingdom, as well as of Scotland and Ireland; but those of the two sister kingdoms sit by inferior titles among their peers, and all the Dukes not of England take precedence among each other by somewhat intricate rules of precedence, into which it is not worth while to enter. The dukedoms are twenty-eight in all, exclusive of those held by Princes of the blood royal. The honor has been very sparingly bestowed in late years. The last conferred by George III. was that of Northumberland, the King refusing to make any more creations, except in favor of his own descendants. The Prince Regent made Lord Wellington a Duke, and after his accession to the throne raised Lord Buckingham to the same dignity. William IV. made two more, and her Majesty has added an equal number to the list.—The Galaxy.

TWO SONNETS.

I.

All love-adepts, all faithful hearts who wear
In love's sweet prime—his hour of blossoming—
The full, harmonious colors of his Spring,
O think not when they fail ye shall go bare;

Take heart, his very mourning still is fair,
Ay, tho' the world its hail of pity fling,
Casting as scorn, no meaner, earthlier thing,
Can match the royal robe of Love's despair!

Put on his weeds, then, ye who fear to sleep,
Because ye fear to wake to grief new-blown;
Rise, bear sweet spices to the grave, and weep
Love's balmy tears, there where by Love o'erthrown,
Death lies—woe but empty ceremonts in a heap,
And Love for love still rolls away the stone.

II.

Fair friends of Love, who fear to take his pay,
Counting his service loss, his joys too brief,
Too much o'erweighted by his long-drawn grief,
Try his Conclusions, ere ye say him nay.

And hold sad commune o'er some vanished chief,
Not for love's death, but birth of high belief,
Their hearts still burn within them by the way.

They know their love is living, and take shame
That they one moment sought him with the dead;
They feel their love immortal, by the flame
That burns the brighter as it burns unfed.
So weeping, sing Love's praise, who could reframe
The universe whence all but love had fled.

A JAPANESE FAIR.—The citizen of modern Yedo holds the historical associations of Uweno of far less account than the fair which is annually held there in the month of March, when the cherry-blossoms are in all their glory, and when every one deems it his duty to make holiday and go there to enjoy the first signs of Spring. From a very early hour the streets leading to the park are crowded with holiday-makers of all grades of society, and of all ages. Every man, woman, and child has donned his or her clothes of the brightest holiday hues, and the usually sombre streets are ablaze with color. The toilet of a Japanese damsel is a matter of no light consideration, and to be in good time for the fair she must be up and dressing long before the sun rises from behind the great sacred mountain, Fuji. The long coarse tresses of raven-black hair must be washed, combed, and greased till the head shines like a knob of polished black marble; the cheeks must be rouged to the proper tint; the throat, neck, and bosom powdered—carefully leaving, however, on the nape of the neck, three lines of the original brown skin of the owner, in accordance with the rules of Japanese cosmetic art; the eyebrows must be carefully rounded and touched with black; the lips reddened with cherry paste, with a patch of gilding in the centre. When all this has been done, and the layers of clothes properly adjusted, the "obi," or huge sash of many colors, tied in the knot of prevailing fashion, the cleanest of white socks, and the newest of black lacquered clogs put on the feet—the belle is ready, and with the proper allowance of pocket-handkerchief paper, her tobacco-pouch, pipe, and fan, she sails forth, turning her toes well in, and playing in well-affected demureness with her fan. Her mother is likewise painted, combed, and adorned; but not a vestige of eyebrow graces her forehead, and her teeth are as black as jet, according to the rules of married women. Her father is clean-shaved, his "queue," or top knot, smoothly pasted on his head, and his raiment new, stiff, and stung—with the family crest embroidered on back and sleeves. In the streets there are hundreds of neighbors, similarly decked and arrayed, bowing, scraping, paying compliments, chattering, laughing, and pattering along on their high wooden clogs towards the pleasaunee. Critical eyes examine head-dresses and "obis," coquettish eyes laugh and convey tender messages from behind fans, thereby bringing down reproofs from stern parental eyes, which, however, soon twinkle at some jest or well-turned compliment. Everything is good-humor, happiness, and enjoyment, and the cloudless blue sky above, the occasional twitter of birds—for Japan is but poorly off for feathered warblers—and the glitter of the sunshine, all go to make up a holiday picture scarcely to be equaled out of Japan. Very striking is the scene, as one mounts the steep ascent leading to the plateau of Uweno. In front, as far as the eye can reach, is a broad avenue of cherry-trees, the pink-and-white blossoms forming a fairy arcade overhead, through which glints of the deep blue sky are here and there visible. On each side, over the heads of the motley, jostling, many-colored crowd of holiday-makers, is a broad sweep of woodland, fresh and bright in the tints of early Spring, and along the avenue itinerant merchants have established booths for the sale of every conceivable useful and ornamental article. Here is a quack doctor, clad in quaint garb, vaunting, "a toutes forces," the virtues of a pill which will cure any disease, and prolong the most precarious of lives; here is a juggler, who, for a very small handful of copper cash, will tempt his digestion with small swords and live charcoal; near him is the booth of a famous kite-seller, always surrounded by urchins tempted by aerial warriors, birds, hares, reptiles, or huge portraits of Hachiman, the god of war, or of great warrior-emperor, Taico-Sama. Nor does the neighboring stall of the sweet-stuff merchant lack patronage, for at the will of his purchasers, with a few dexterous turns of the fingers, he will convert a shapeless lump of sugared dough into anything, from a pilgrim in heavy marching order to a brace of fats nibbling at a bale of rice; then there are stalls for fried fish, fruit shops, fan and umbrella shops, here and there a booth for the sale of trumpery foreign knick-knacks, and at one corner an enterprising tailor has established himself, and, clad in a very ill-fitting, seedy suit of evening dress, swaggers about in front of a collection of left-off European cloths of which even Monmouth street would be ashamed. But though the stalls and sheds do a roaring trade, the tea-houses are the centre of the fun of the fair. These Uweno tea-houses are not permanent structures, decorated with gilded screens and highly-colored paintings, but are mere shanties of wood, run up or taken down in a very few minutes; they are, however, under the superintendence of the great tea-house proprietors of the capital, so that all the luxuries of the season may be obtained, made more palatable by the fact of being served in a certain picnicking, rough-and-tumble manner, rather agreeable than otherwise to the citizens accustomed to the formality and close atmosphere of the within-town places of entertainment. Scarcely sitting room on the mats is to be obtained for love or money. The attendant damsels—prettily attired in light Summer robes of uniform pattern—are almost at their wits' ends in the clamor from all sides for fish, rice, wine, chop-sticks, and bills; and yet, though hurried here and there, sometimes reprimanded for not being in two places at once, chaffed, ordered about, and sworn at, they never lose temper—the red lips are always smiling, and pleasant complimentary speeches are being shot about in all directions. And very hard work it must be to preserve equanimity under such circumstances, for beyond the actual physical exertion which the poor girls—few of them over seventeen years of age—must undergo, they must ever be ready with honeyed words and impromptu repartee, and the accounts must never be incorrect; for, with all his virtues, your Yedo citizen is not prodigal in expenditure even on gala days, and a cash or two charged too much would bring upon the shoulders of the erring cashier a tremendous rookie from the mistress of the house. To the European visitor the scene is bewildering. While the ear is assailed with the ceaseless rattle of voices and dishes, the pattering of clogs, and the occasional bursts of song and laughter from guests well advanced in the stages of enjoyment, the eye wanders over a restless sea of colored garments, interspersed with bronzed faces, and flashing black eyes, quick-moving fingers, gesticulating, passing wine-cups, and handling chop-sticks with a dexterity which seems marvelous, and bustling female forms gliding about with huge relays of raw fish, omelettes, soup, and steaming wine. As soon as one party rises another fills up the vacant space, and the work of eating, drinking, laughing, talking, and singing, goes on from morn till night. Outside the tea-houses, beneath the canopy of cherry-blossoms, a motley crowd surges to and fro. At the end of the avenue is a temple dedicated to Benzaiten—the goddess of the sea, and the reputed mother of five hundred gods. Hither resort the faithful to pay their homage: approaching, with heads bent and hands clasped in supplication, toward the portal, to which is attached a gong and a heavy knotted rope. The noise of the gong, which serves the purpose of calling the attention of the goddess, never ceases, nor does the accompaniment of cash rattling into a huge wooden coffer beneath it. Lengthy devotion is not expected from the holiday-makers—a few murmured aspirations, a clap at the gong, a money offering, a receipt from the priest of a piece of charmed paper with the image of the goddess stamped thereon; and the devotee rejoins the mirth and merriment outside.—Belgravia.

GAMBLING AT MONACO.—At Monaco gambling is not only in fashion, it is at once the life and the occasion of life in the place. For it, and in its name, were reared those handsome halls, mirrored and candelabra'd velvet-furnished and polished exceedingly as to floors and walls, which adjoin the Hôtel de Paris and stand at the top of the enchanted garden. In its service are enrolled those gaily dressed handsmen who discourse such eloquent music, those plush-breeched green-coated servitors, who stand so janitor-like at the doors and about the rooms, ready to bow obedience to the moneyed habitué, or to collar and eject the "suspect" and the "wobegone." In its service manifestly have been educated those sombre leaden-eyed men, pale of face and dirty of shirt-collar, who sit on either side the centre of the table, and with ceaseless monotony spin the wheel of roulette, while comrades rake up or shovel out the consequences of the game. Whether they were ever young or blithe, whether they ever were the objects of a mother's solicitude, or whether they were, like Macbeth, not of woman born, are questions which not unnaturally arise as one looks at their cheerless faces all bereft of sunshine. There they sit, day after day, hour after hour, at the gaming-tables, their only variation being from roulette to trente-et-quarante or rouge-et-noir. One misses at Monaco the hollow-toned exhortation, "Faites vos jeux, messieurs, faites vos jeux." and its natural accompaniment, "Le jeu est fait," which used to be heard at Spa and Baden in old days. Silence is the rule of Monaco, broken only by the click of the roller as it falls into one of the wheel spaces, and by the judicial declaration of the result, delivered sotto voce by the chief croupier. But, apart from this, there is exactly the same arrangement, the same scrupulous fairness on the part of the bank, the same perfect trust in the ultimate advantage of that institution, the same reliance without touting on the natural attractions of play to allure poor humanity into the swing, that characterised the German and Belgian play-places. The only advertisement resorted to by the proprietor is in the shape of those charming gardens which beautify the place, those balls at which the beauty and ugliness of Nice delight to congregate, those Tirs aux Pigeons where a thousand pounds represents the Grand Prix de Monaco, those magnificent concerts from which, out of purely local and personal considerations, the music of Orphée aux Enfers should be forever excluded. The reward of M. Le Blanc, the provider of all these things, the owner of this beautiful "hell," is ample, after its kind. In spite of the occasional visits of "portents," like the Maltese Bugeija, who, by wisdom or strange luck, found his way to win vast roulesux from the bank; in spite of the raids which other mediums of the Bugeija stamp make upon his resources, the proprietor is in the long run justified in his ghastly joke, "Jo ez sur rouge ou vert, c'est Le Blanc qui gagne." That he does gain is not only matter of notoriety, it is evident from the facts we have recited, from the apparently unremunerative expenditure he is able to make so freely, from an hour's observation of the crowds who throng the roulette tables. All the world, men and women too, of every nation, come to pour their wealth into the lap of this Crœsus.—London Society.

INTERIOR OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—The rows of cushioned benches that run down each side of the House are divided crossways, at a distance about one-third of the whole length, by a narrow passage, called the Gangway, which used to have a more important significance than at present, when parties are not so sharply defined, although even now it indicates a certain line of separation in politics. Above the gangway, on the Ministerial side, are supposed to sit the most thorough-going supporters of the Government, while below it sit those who profess to be more independent, and give a general but not indiscriminate vote to the Ministry. Not that the line is too strictly drawn, and it is, to a certain extent, a cross-division, like that of the famous one of bread into white bread, black bread, and French rolls—for it would be easy to name members who sit above the gangway and occasionally speak and vote against particular measures of the Government; and still more easy to name some below the gangway to whom the word of a Minister is law, and who have never been guilty of the crime of thinking the Government in the wrong. The same general distinction does not apply so strongly to the Opposition side of the House. The front row there above the gangway is occupied by the ex-Ministers; but behind them sit many who, if the sheet-anchor of fortune brought those ex-Ministers into power, would give them a good deal of trouble by their speeches and their votes. Below the gangway, on the Opposition (now the Liberal) side, the more Advanced Liberals, or Radicals as they used to be called, (although the name is falling into disuse,) range themselves with undoubted preference. There sit Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. McLaren, Mr. Rylands, Mr. Mundella, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Richard, Mr. Peter Taylor, Mr. Joseph Cowen, Professor Fawcett, and others, who are likely to cause no little embarrassment to any Liberal Government which asks for a majority on which it can steadily rely. There also, either on the front bench or on that immediately behind it, cluster the Irish members, whose watchword is Home Rule. It is a rule that no one may cross an imaginary line drawn between the speaker and the member who is addressing the House. When we say "addressing the House," we mean addressing the Speaker; for every member who speaks, unless he is merely asking a question, is supposed to address Mr. Speaker, and not the assembly. And hence the reason of the rule just alluded to. As the Speaker is the person addressed, it would be an act of rudeness to interpose the body between him and the member who is speaking to him. Sometimes, however, in the heat of debate, a member (especially if he be a new member) forgets that he is speaking to the Speaker, and apostrophizes his audience; and we have more than once heard an excited member, full of recollections of some meeting of his constituents, say "Gentlemen!" instead of "Sir!"—an impropriety at once rebuked by loud cries of "Order! order!" As the rule about not crossing the line would sometimes necessitate a rather tortuous circumnavigation to enable a member to reach his seat, it is amusing to see how it is evaded by ducking the head and stooping and almost creeping along until the point of danger is passed. No one may rise from his seat either to speak or change his place, or leave the House without taking off his hat. In other words, whenever he is upon his legs he must be uncovered. And he may not cross the floor or walk up or down the House on entering or leaving it without making a bow or obeisance, as it is called in parliamentary language, to the Speaker. But let not the uninitiated imagine that it is a Sir Charles Grandison bow. The merest inclination of the head is sufficient; and it often looks more like a familiar nod to the awful occupant of the chair than a dignified homage to his authority. But still, however done, it is a mark of respect, and contributes something to the preservation of order and decorum. But as in the House of Lords the woolsack is not part of the House, so in the House of Commons there are within its sacred precincts (exclusive of the lobbies) spaces where a degree of liberty is allowed that is denied elsewhere. On entering the House, you will see a line drawn across the matting of the floor from the seat occupied by the Sergeant at Arms to the opposite bench, and within this line members may stand with their hats off and listen to the debate; but outside of it they must sit, or be instantly called to "order." They cannot, however, address the House in this position; but if they wish to do so, must go to one of the benches and speak from that place. When Mr. Plimsoll began his impassioned attack on the Ministry for withdrawing their Merchant Shipping Bill in the session of 1875, he was standing at the door, but he had to move to the benches and continue his philippic there. There is also within the House a space behind the Speaker's chair where members may stand with their hats on—the reason of which, we suppose, is that as it is a physical impossibility for Mr. Speaker to see them, they can show him no disrespect by being covered. As the body of the House is by no means large enough to hold all the members on a full night, the overflow must betake itself to the galleries, and members may speak from them, although we never saw such a case actually happen. The general attitude of the occupants of the benches is hardly that which a sculptor or a painter would approve of. Perhaps we may best describe it as that of undignified ease. Some with hats on, and some with hats off, they may be seen lolling, lounging, sleeping, and even gently snoring. A favorite attitude of one distinguished member is to sit with his legs crossed, and beat time with his foot to some imaginary tune. Every variety of costume is admissible—from the evening dress coat and white neckcloth, which frequently appears after dinner, to the pea-jacket and wide-awake—the latter happily confined to very few. When an embassy from Carthage entered the Senate-house at Rome, and saw the Conscript Fathers seated in their curule-chairs, they were so struck with their flowing laticlaves, the gravity of their aspect, and the dignity of their demeanor, that they exclaimed, "This is an assembly of Kings!" If a Chinese embassy were to look down from the gallery of the House of Commons upon the scene below, with members bustling in and out and across the House, as if it were an ant-hill—with its cries of "Order," and cheers and counter-cheers, the frequently loud buzz of conversation, and sometimes inarticulate groans—we fear that it would be inclined to think that it was gazing upon a body of noisy school-boys. But if a question of profound interest is asked—say, for instance, as to the result of the conference at Constantinople—then instantly all is mute silence and fixed attention. You might hear a pin drop or a mouse stir, and the faces of all the members are turned with eager and painful interest to the Speaker.—Blackwood's Magazine.

MADEIRA AS A HEALTH RESORT.—The temperature varies from an average Summer heat of 72° to a Winter of 60°, giving an annual mean of 66°, which has made it the favorite resort of consumptive invalids from all parts of Europe. Whether it is the best in the world will appear when Tenerife is considered. It is enough to say at present that the humidity of the Madeira Winter, due to a longer prevalence of rain, and the excessive discomfort occasioned at other times by the dry, noxious, and almost insufferable Peste, or east wind, which blows from the coast of Africa, where it is known as the harmattan, and equally dreaded, are not experienced on the Spanish island, but are, in a measure, compensated for by the greater comforts that are at the command of the wealthy invalid in Madeira. The island is easily reached four or five days by steamers from England and Portugal. The English language is spoken as common as the vernacular, and private hotels are numerous, where extensive suites of apartments, excellent attendance

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Feb. 17.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate the President pro tem. had read a communication from Justice Clifford, President of the Electoral Commission, relative to the vote of Louisiana. Mr. Kelly, of Oregon, made what he termed an explanation of his connection with Til den's use of money in that State. He denied all knowledge of how the money was to be used, except that he was led to believe it would be used in the employing of legal counsel. He desired to have his good name cleared from all suspicion of wrong doing. Mr. Sargent, of California, while hoping, for the honor of the Senate and the good of mankind that that body would take as favorable a view of the defense which Mr Kelly had made as was proper, said he thought it was but right that that gentleman should do all in his power to free himself from the stigma that would attach to every person who had taken part in the nefarious transaction in the State of Oregon. Mr. Bogy, of Missouri, made a frantic effort to defend Tilden, and went far out of his way, in order to vent his hatred of an honored and respected member of the United States Supreme Court, chosen to sit as one of the members of the Electoral Commission. Other Senators spoke concerning the Florida investigation.

The House met, and after the Democratic members had expressed themselves spitefully toward the Senate, a recess was taken to next Monday forenoon.

SENATE.

The President pro tem. (Mr. FERRY) said he had received a communication from the Electoral Commission, being a decision in the Louisiana case, and inquired if it should be read. No objection being made, the communication was read by the Chief Clerk as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 17, 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the Electoral Commission to inform the Senate that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it und r the act of Congress, concerning the same touching the Electoral vote from the State of Louisiana, and herewith, by direction of said Commission, I transmit to you the said decision in writing, signed by the members agreeing therein, to be read at the meeting of the two houses according to said act. All the certificates and papers sent to the Commission by the President of the Senate, are returned herewith. NATHAN CLIFFORD,

President of the Commission.

To Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, President of the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine, said the Commission on the Electoral Votes having notified the Senate that they have arrived at a decision on the Electoral vote of Louisiana, he moved that a message be sent to the House informing that body that the Senate was ready to meet it and proceed with the count of the vote for President and Vice President.

Mr. WITHERS, of Virginia, inquired if it was competent for the Senate without a quorum to meet the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAMLIN said he supposed a quorum of the Senate would be here by the time a communication should be received from the House that that body was ready to receive the Senate. Upon the receipt of that communication, of course, it would take a majority of the Senate to comply with it. His motion was merely for the purpose of having the Senate ready to proceed by the time a quorum was present.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. said if no quorum should be present when a message should be received from the House of Representatives that it was ready to proceed with the count, of course, the objection of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Withers] would be entertained.

The motion of Mr. Hamlin was then agreed to.

Mr. KELLY, of Oregon, asked permission to make a personal explanation. The CHAIR having ruled that it would be in order to do so, as that could not be regarded as legislative business, Mr. KELLY, a few minutes before 12 o'clock, nearly all the Senators being present, proceeded. He then read from the Washington Star of yesterday a paragraph in regard to the evidence before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as to the telegrams connecting him with the attempt to buy a Republican Elector in Oregon, and said he was his desire a day or two ago, when the translation of the telegram was made public, to make a personal explanation, but he was dissuaded from doing so until the report as to the Oregon matter should be submitted to the Senate. Even this morning a number of his friends advised him not to make any explanation, but he had concluded to rely upon his own judgment. Some time previous to the 28th of November last he was in San Francisco, but thought it best to return to Oregon before coming East. He did so, and while in the depot at Salem, Oregon, a gentlemen introduced himself as Mr. Patrick, stating that he was authorized by the National Democratic Committee to come to Oregon to look into the matter of Watts' eligibility. He [Mr. Kelly] and Mr. Patrick went to Portland together, and there he saw Mr. Bellinger, the Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, in regard to the case of Watts, who said it was expected that proceedings would be commenced before the courts to compel the Governor to issue a certificate to Watts. Mr. Bellinger said he had partially employed a firm of Republican lawyers to defend any action against the Governor. The firm wanted a fee of $5,000, but had finally agreed to take $3,000. Mr. Bellinger also said it was the belief that the Governor would issue his certificate to Cronin, although he was very reticent on the subject. A conversation as to the difficulty of obtaining funds to pay the lawyers took place, and it was finally suggested that the National Democratic Committee should pay the expenses. Mr. Patrick assented to this, and said he had full authority to make that arrangement. Three or four hours afterward Mr. Patrick came to him with a cipher dispatch on two sheets of telegraph paper. He said he had prepared a telegram to Col. William T. Rodgers, Secretary of the National Democratic Committee, asking him to deposit to the credit of his [Mr. Patrick's] banker in New-York $10,000 to pay lawyers' fees in Oregon, and if not used the money would be returned. Patrick requested him to indorse it as he was a public man and well known to the committee; therefore it would be easier to get the money. He [Mr. Kelly] could not read the cipher, but took Mr. Patrick's word, and wrote upon the dispatch, "I fully indorse the above." From that day until the translation of the dispatch before the committee, he had believed what Mr. Patrick said was true, and even now he did not know if the translation before the committee was a true one. Mr. Kelly then quoted from the dispatches as translated before the committee, and said he knew nothing about the one saying, "It will take $5,000 for a Republican Elector." He never spoke to any Republican Elector in Oregon, nor had he ever authorized anyone to speak for him, to pay such Elector any money, and he was sure the Republican Electors of Oregon would say that no man ever offered to give them money to recognize Cronin. He [Mr. Kelly] thought Patrick came to the State with the idea that he could be instrumental in changing the result of the Oregon vote, and desired such an opinion of him to be entertained in New-York. Mr. Kelly then referred to the dispatch from Oregon signed "Governor," and sent to Samuel J. Tilden, to the effect that he would issue the certificate to Cronin, and said that dispatch was not sent by Gov. Grover. It must have been sent by Patrick. He then sent to the Clerk's desk and had read the following:

To Hon. James K. Kelly, Washington, D. C.:

Deny that I sent my telegram to Tilden. I never sent a cipher in my life. L. F. GROVER.

Resuming his remarks, Mr. Kelly said there was not a particle of evidence to show that he ever engaged any one to offer these Electors money. He never spoke to them and never displayed any of them money. He never asked that any one to give a cent for that purpose and never gave a cent himself. He had been in the Senate six years, and now that he was about to leave he desired that there should be nothing against his good name. He was confident that his explanation would be satisfactory to the people of his State. A good character was better than great riches, and he did not wish to have his good name ruined. He did not want to leave under a cloud, or to tarnish the name of the State which sent him here.

Mr. SARGENT, of California, said: I do not think the Senator from Oregon could address an audience more willing and anxious to believe in the entire sincerity of his defense. We have known the Senator for a great many years—nearly a full Senatorial term—and until this thing occurred, I know we were all accustomed to regard him as strictly honorable in the discharge of his duties. It will be exceedingly fortunate for the Senator if the country is disposed to take a favorable view of the defense, which he makes as we, out of our friendship, are willing to do. Our association with each other from year to year leads us to understand and appreciate each other, and often there are statements which go to the public at large concerning transactions on this floor, or with reference to Senators that we, knowing all the facts and individuals, know to be totally unfounded, and, therefore, they have very little effect upon our mind as casting reproach upon the person who may be assailed. It is very rarely, however, that a circumstance so grave as this which has just been called to the attention of the Senate is a matter of consideration here, anything that affects the honor of a member of this body to a certain extent lowers the tone of the whole body, and, therefore, we deeply regret it. I do not wish to remark, and I will not remark, upon the defense which has been made by the Senator from Oregon so far as it relates to himself. I only wish to say that I think he does right to do all that is in his power to free his name from the stigma that must attach to every person who had part in the nefarious transaction in the State of Oregon. We find that the confidential agent of the highest authority in the Democratic Party is sent to the Pacific coast with undefined powers, and communicates with his associates at home, going into the very family of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency and proposes that money shall be furnished to buy a Republican Elector. Why, Sir, if there could be any act more dishonorable than another committed by any man whatever, anywhere upon all God's broad footstool, it would be for an Elector—a man selected in a college of Electors to cast his vote for the successful candidate for the Presidency and then deliberate for the first moment of power thus given by a confiding people to betray that people and the principles which he was supposed eminently to represent, and for sordid gain to cast his vote for the other side. We have lived through a Centennial, and that has not occurred. We have not lived through a Centennial, however, without seeing it attempted, aye, and sanctioned by the chief authority of a great political party; for we are told in the reply that if this can't be done contingently upon its success—if this money will not be called for until the 4th of March, shall have shown that the treason has succeeded—then it will be sanctioned, and the sinews of war will be furnished at that time. I say the Senator from Oregon does right if he can clear his name from participation in a transaction like this. He owes it to the honor of this body, of which he is a part. He owes it to the dignity of human nature as well as to himself.

Mr. BOGY, of Missouri, said while he concurred in much said by the Senator from California in condemning frauds in Oregon, he was not willing to remain in his place and permit a stigma of that kind to be fixed upon the Democratic Party as the only party guilty of fraud. He was opposed to fraud in every shape, political or private, but the country knew that fraud was not confined to Oregon. There were frauds in Florida; great frauds were perpetrated there by the Republican Party; frauds were perpetrated by that party in Louisiana, and the country knew the result of the frauds. These States were like whited sepulchers—fair without, but within as foul as hell.

Mr. SARGENT said before the Electoral Tribunal the Republican counsel took the position that there was no power in Congress to go behind the action of a State. The cry of fraud was raised and kept up during the whole discussion by the Democratic counsel and by the Democratic press throughout the country, and now the Senator from Missouri came in and took up the cry. As a member of the committee which made the investigation into the Florida election, it was his [Mr. Sargent's] deliberate conviction that the evidence would show that there was no fraud in Florida stimulated from Washington, as had been charged. On the other hand, the evidence would show that frauds were committed by the Democratic Party in the State. He argued that Republican votes were thrown out of ballot-boxes by Democrats, and in Jackson County alone 250 votes which should have been counted for the Republican were fraudulently changed.

At 12:50 P. M. a message was received from the House of Representatives stating that the House would be prepared at 11 A. M., Monday, to receive the Senate and resume the count of the vote for President and Vice President.

Mr. BOGY said telegrams were sent from the City of Washington to Florida immediately after the election which meant fraud. That fraud was not so plain as in the Oregon case, as the man in Oregon was new in the business. He then referred to the Electoral Commission. "Sir," said the speaker, "Lord Clarendon and Marlborough have come down to us for ages past covered with disgrace and shame because they were corrupt Judges, and the name of that man who changed his vote upon that Commission will go down to after ages disgraced. His name will be associated with Marlborough and Jeffreys, and it never will be pronounced without a blush in all coming time in this country."

Mr. COOPER, of Tennessee, a member of the committee which made the investigation into the Florida election, referred to the resolution of Mr. Edmunds, authorizing the investigation, adopted early in the session, and said it was his hope that if fraud did exist in Florida there was power to examine into it and guard against it, but now it has been decided that there was no power to correct this fraud. He was sorry such a decision had been arrived at. It was folly, now that the door had been shut, to bandy words in the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY, of Texas, presented the credentials of Richard Coke, who was elected United States Senator from the State of Texas for six years from March 4, 1877, and Mr. NORWOOD, of Georgia, presented the credentials of B. H. Hill, who was elected United States Senator from the State of Georgia for six years from the same date—both of which were read and placed on file.

Mr. MORTON, of Indiana, said he had heard, with regret, the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri in regard to Justice Bradley. If that Senator could have heard the discussions of the Electoral Commission as he [Mr. Morton] heard them, he would not have made such remarks. The time would come when the opinions of the members of the Commission would be published, and he was sure the Senator would then see that he had done an act of injustice to an able and conscientious Judge.

The discussion as to Florida, and the testimony taken by the committee which visited that State, was continued by Messrs. Sargent, Cooper, and Jones, of Florida; and at 3 o'clock the Senate took a recess until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

On assembling at 10 o'clock, the House took a further recess until 12 o'clock. After the recess, prayer was offered by the Chaplain. During the reading of the journal, the Secretary of the Senate [Mr. Gorham] arrived in the hall of the House with a message from the Senate, but was not recognized by the Speaker. At the end of the reading, the Speaker laid before the House a communication from Justice Nathan Clifford, President of the Electoral Commission, informing the House that the Commission had arrived at a decision of the Louisiana case, and had transmitted that decision to the President of the Senate, to be opened and read in the presence of the two houses.

Mr. LAMAR, of Mississippi, offered a resolution directing the Clerk of the House to inform the Senate that the House would be ready to receive that body at 11 o'clock on Monday next for the purpose of proceeding with the counting of the Electoral votes.

Mr. KASSON, of Iowa—I rise to a point of order; there is a message from the Senate.

The SPEAKER—The Chair is aware of the fact, and does not desire to interrupt the message. The Chair, on the contrary, has communicated to the House the fact as communicated from the President of the Commission.

Mr. KASSON—Does the Chair permit me to make the point of order?

[Shouts of "Yes" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KASSON—I am addressing the Chair. The message from the Senate pertains to the question before the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL, of California—How does the gentleman know that?

The SPEAKER—The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Secretary of the Senate was then recognized by the Speaker, and he communicated the message that the Senate was now ready to meet the House in joint convention and proceed with the counting of the Electoral votes. The resolution was then adopted—yeas 152, nays 111. Among the nays were the following Democrats: Messrs. Anderson of Illinois, Goodin of Kansas, Haymond of Indiana, Porter of Michigan, Southard of Ohio, Tarbox of Massachusetts, Walling of Ohio, Wells of Missouri, Whitthorne of Tennessee, and Whiting of Illinois.

Mr. LAMAR, of Mississippi, then moved that the House take a recess till Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, asked leave to make the report of the South Carolina Investigating Committee, but objection was made.

Mr. LAMAR'S motion was agreed to—yeas 149, nays 107—and the House, at 1:20, took recess till 10 o'clock Monday.

THE LOUISIANA SUGAR CROP.

The New-Orleans Times of the 10th instant says: "Great anxiety is entertained in regard to the soundness of the seed cane, as the exceedingly low range of the thermometer for a period of two months was the longest severely cold spell on record in this State, and created much apprehension as to its effects on both seed cane and stubble or ratoons. The papers published in the sugar belt, so far as they condescend to let themselves down from the high political altitude to the homely duty of writing about the cane fields, are unanimous in the assertion that the seed cane, whether in ricks, mathas or windrow, is as yet sound and uninjured. Private letters from planters, and many planters themselves while visiting the city, confirm these statements. The stubble, too, is said to be sound and healthy wherever it has been examined and reported. If there should be no freezing weather after this, during the Spring, the sugar interests may be considered on an open road to renewed prosperity. As the season last Fall was favorable for putting up seed, a larger proportion was saved than is usual, and some curious facts have been developed by the polariscope. This instrument shows the cane in fla tion has increased in the canes since they were put up for seed, while the opposite was thought to be true. While the large amount of sound seed will plant an increased area, it is to be regretted that the cane planted in the Fall has nearly all proved to be destroyed. Fall planting, however, was not practiced to a great extent. Single planters have already plowed up 40 or 50 acres of spoiled cane thus planted. The high price of sugar, the fine product of Louisiana for the last two years, and the prospect of better times have brought many inquiries after sugar plantations. Rice has been so low, with the large production of an inferior article, that rice planters are gloomy, and many are converting their lands into sugar plantations as rapidly as a stand of cane can be secured."

TWO CHILDREN'S PETITIONS.

The Rochester Democrat tells the following of a young lady resident of that city, now in her fourth year: "Her father has been away from the city on business for the past two weeks, and the mother has taught the little one to conclude her evening prayers with 'and please watch over my papa.' It sounded very sweet, of course, but the mother's amusement may be imagined when the little lady solemnly clapped her hands and said, 'Please watch over my papa, and you'd better keep an eye on mamma, too!'"

Another paper has this incident to relate: "A five-year-old daughter of one of our residents, who is convalescing from an attack of scarlet fever, was the other day suffering greatly from ear-ache. Something prompted the little one to petition above for relief, and this was the way she did it: 'O, Lord! Oh, good Lord, cure my ear-ache,' continuing to repeat it over and over. Her mother, hearing her murmuring, asked, 'What are you saying, my dear?' 'None of your business,' was the reply, 'I ain't talking to you; I'm talking to the Lord.'"

WHERE LIES THE REASON

In the short inaugural address of Gov. Porter, of Tennessee, delivered the 13th inst., he said: "The two years past have been years of plentiful harvests; the people of Tennessee have been blessed with health; the comity of States has been preserved; the order and security guaranteed by the law have been maintained; the people preserve their ancient rights; power is exercised by rulers appointed by themselves; they mold and form and modify the laws at their own sovereign will; the cause of popular education is on the advance, and yet we have not been rewarded with the prosperity that usually accompanies these conditions; our people are discontented; property has depreciated; confidence has been impaired; prices are not remunerative. Something of the responsibility for this must be attributed to the causes that originate outside of the State, and are stimulated by agencies independent of our control but to our internal policy and practice we owe much for this condition; our legislation has been excessive."

A HARTFORD CHARACTER.

DISAPPEARANCE OF THE CURIOUS LITTLE DUTCH DOCTOR, WHO THOUGHT HE WAS CONTINUALLY FOLLOWED BY AUSTRIAN SPIES.

From the Hartford Courant, Feb. 12.

Many people who had grown to know him have for a long time missed from the streets the quaint form of "the little Dutch Doctor." He was a man whom one would turn to look at a second time—diminutive in stature, with a wizened face half hidden by a bristling gray beard and cropped mustache, and his body enveloped in a very long rusty brown overcoat closely buttoned. A very fierce little man he was in appearance. His preoccupied air—as though he bore the weight of nations on his brow—and his comparatively long rapid stride, which turned neither to the right nor left, added to the peculiarity of his appearance in attracting observation. He was a little dried-up, rusty old man, with a very faded air of greatness about him. Now that he has passed from our streets, probably never to return, a recital of his peculiarities can do no harm.

Those who knew the Doctor well, were more amused by the peculiarities of his mind than the grotesqueness of his personal appearance. His eccentricities bordered on insanity. Though called, with vulgar and flippant ignorance, the "little Dutch Doctor," he was not a native of Holland, but of Hungary. An Hungarian Jew by birth, he had thrown off nationality and religion, and became a cosmopolitan. Italy, France, England, and America were equally familiar to him, and in the use of the principal modern languages he was an adept. He was a graduate of the great medical university in Padua, Italy, and in some departments of knowledge his information was really great. But his mind was overshadowed by one great error, and this rendered it unsound in everything. In his early youth he had been extradited for complicity in a plot against the Austrians. When in Italy he was hounded by Austrian spies, and only escaped imprisonment by the intervention of the Italian Government. The dangers which he had encountered affected his mind, and ever since he has been on the lookout for Austrian spies. The idea of his importance as a political intriguer grew upon him, and he believed that the Church of Rome was on his trail—the Pope, he said, had issued a "propaganda" against him. Haunted by these fears, which were terribly real to him, he wandered about from place to place, getting a meagre livelihood by practicing his profession. He pretended to have made great discoveries in the healing art, and confidently believed he could conquer small-pox and fevers with his nostrums. Possessing some literary talent, he published in France a long poem in French, entitled, "Visions d' un Prophete de l' Empereur Napoleon III.," a most remarkable work, dealing with the present and future condition of Europe. While here he was continually having printed short articles on a single leaf, generally in rhyme, upon political affairs, and more than once he has appeared in the newspapers in Hartford, pretending to write upon philology or politics which would puzzle the reader, for the oftener it was read the less connected would its thoughts appear. Philology was one of the Doctor's pet subjects. He arrogated to himself all the knowledge about the derivation of languages, and insatiately waived aside the views of modern philologists with the remark that they were all fools. His angry comments on the American Association for the Advancement of Science, when it met in Hartford a few years ago, were intensely ludicrous to people who were aware of his harmless mania.

The Doctor was continually petitioning Congress to purchase his remedy for small-pox. We dare say there is not a Federal official hereabouts who has not been addressed, in a cramped but singularly neat hand, to press his claims before the Government. He believed that the honor or later would receive a million dollars for his remedy. As his efforts failed, one after another, he would say it was through the malign influence of Austria and the Romish Church. He verily believed that all the powers of Church and State were leagued against him. Of the Masonic fraternity he had a horrible dread. The Police, too, were against him, because when he applied to them for protection from the spies who were continually on his track, they laughed. If a man jostled him in the street, the Doctor saw in him an Austrian spy. So great was his fear that he never would admit any one to his room, fearing his life; and would subsist on the plainest food, which he cooked with his own hands, fearing poison. The importance which the little old man arrogated, was absurd indeed.

The Doctor's livelihood was at all times scanty, but he had a little practice among German families, and could live upon little money. His idiosyncrasies were harmless, and formed a curious study for those who knew them. He was one of the most peculiar characters that Hartford ever knew. There was much that was touching in the history of the lonely little old man, and which a few years hence his eccentricities and befriend him. Whither he has gone is a mystery. Probably the "spies" became too numerous. The boys may have bothered him with snowballs—which mischievous prank he would at once have attributed to Austrian malice—or he may have been jostled more than usual as he rushed along the streets in his blundering, near-sighted way. At any rate he is missing.

IRISH ROMAN CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY.

From the London Standard, Jan. 29.

About 150 students and ex-students of the Irish Roman Catholic "University," on Friday last, presented an address to Mr. Butt, M. P., urging upon him the expediency of securing as early a day as possible for the reintroduction of his bill in the coming session of Parliament. Mr. Butt, in reply, said the Roman Catholic people of Ireland had a right to all the benefit of university institutions, and to have that benefit they should have institutions framed in accordance with their religious convictions and essentially Catholic in their character. He urged that in the new institutions which they demanded the education should be of the highest class—as high as that provided in the great English universities, or in the Dublin University, which was on a level with either of them. He believed the best plan would be to unite two distinct colleges into one university, rather than have two distinct and separate universities. Associations had gathered around Trinity College which belonged to the national history, and which ought to belong to the national university, and it would be long before the degrees of any new university could obtain the prestige which now attached to those of the Dublin University. To place the Catholics of Ireland in a footing of equality they should be admitted in their separate colleges to a partnership in all the priceless treasures which Trinity College inherited in the memories of its great men. Against these and many similar considerations should be placed the difficulties that would attend any plan of uniting in one university two colleges—sources of antagonism existing between Trinity College and any Catholic institution. He was, however, encouraged to make the attempt by finding that the plan of a second college had met with the unanimous approbation of the Roman Catholic prelates. He could only hope to suggest the general frame work of such a measure, subject, it might be, to many alterations. Mr. Butt then pointed to other difficulties with which they had to contend in connection with the pressure of business of Parliament. Our Dublin correspondent says that Mr. Butt's evasive reply to the students of the Catholic University with respect to his intentions as to the introduction of the University bill during the approaching session is supposed to be accounted for by some change of front by the Roman Catholic Bishops upon that question. The abstention of these prelates from any political manifesto, usually promulgated by them at this period of the year, is the subject of common remark.

THE TURKISH ARMY IN SERVIA.

The Cologne Gazette, Jan. 29, publishes an interesting telegram from its special correspondent at Rustshuk, as follows: "A regular concentration of the Turkish forces has not yet taken place. I have visited all places of importance with exception of Shlistria, and am in a position to give you the following reliable information: The total of the Turkish Army in Servia and Bulgaria is not much more than 100,000. The corps consists of 133 battalions infantry, seven regiments cavalry, and 200 pieces ordnance; of these about 40,000, with 80 cannon, are quartered in Alexinatz, Djunis, Nisch, and Sofia; 2,400 foot, three regiments of cavalry, and nine batteries are encamped around Widin, 6,000 in Rustschuk, 9,000 in Varna, 6,000 in Shlistria, 6,000 in 12,000 infantry, some cavalry, and a few pieces of ordnance in Shumla. The general state of health is not satisfactory, and the field hospitals are full, owing to the fearful cold, to which the troops are not accustomed; but in spite of all this they are in excellent spirits, and eager to march against the enemy. It is generally believed here that hostilities against Servia and Montenegro are to be resumed at the expiration of the armistice, and that this will lead to a declaration of war from Russia."

BAGGAGE CHECKS MADE USEFUL.

The Philadelphia Ledger of Tuesday says: "Brighton S. Harris, a young man, recently from St. Lawrence County, New-York, was heard yesterday before Magistrate R. R. Smith, on the charge of defrauding hotel-keepers, and of stealing baggage checks at the office of the Union Transportation Company in this city. It was testified that defendant came to Philadelphia within a few weeks, and while at Schenck's Station made the acquaintance of Robert Sanderson, a freight agent, and succeeded in obtaining a bunch of baggage checks, which he carried off. Upon arriving in this city he went to the Washington House and engaged board, giving one of the stolen checks, and asking to have his baggage sent for. After remaining at the hotel as long as he thought was safe he went to the Girard House and did the same thing as he had done at the Washington. He next tried the Continental, then La Pierre, then the St. George Hotel, and finally the Bingham House, where the arrest took place. When he had run out of baggage checks he obtained more at the Union Transportation Company's office, and some of these were found on him when arrested. He was committed in default of $1,000 to answer."

CREATING AN EMPIRE.

THE ROYAL CEREMONIES AT DELHI.

AN IMPERIAL CROWN ON TOP OF A CHIMNEY —CASTING PEARLS BEFORE A CURIOUS PEOPLE—SIXTY-THREE RULING PRINCES PRESENT—THE RACES—THE VICEROY NOT UP TO SNUFF—SOLDIERS, ELEPHANTS, AND WAR CAMELS.

The correspondent of the London Standard writes from Delhi: "In the centre of the arena was constructed an exceedingly graceful kiosk, spoiled by two mistakes. The imperial crown resting on a cushion was perched on the top of what looked like a tapering chimney of zinc or leaden plates, and at a slight distance gave one the idea of a new patent anti-smoking apparatus. In Mr. Kipling's original design there was no cushion, and the spire of the kiosk descended in graceful slopes from the edge of the crown, and harmony was preserved throughout; neither is he answerable for the four strings of trumpery red, white and blue pennants stretching from the apex to the ground in the style of a volunteer fête or provincial cricket match. The gilt railing round the platform of the kiosk looked airy and bright in the clear sunshine, and the panels beneath were exceedingly pretty, being decorated with the imperial crown between the letters 'V. I.' in gold appliqué work upon a groundwork of green leaves in needlework. A silver chair of state was placed on the platform facing the amphitheatre. Behind the kiosk had been erected two long blocks of raised seats, forming a semi-circle intersected by a broad passage leading from the plain to the throne, carpeted with red cloth fringed with gold lace. Each block was calculated to hold 2,000 spectators, but probably not more than 3,000 were present in the two pavilions. The two front rows were reserved for ladies, whose bright airy dresses relieved the gloom of the funereal tail-coats, interspersed though they were with military and civil uniforms. The real point of attraction, however, lay on the opposite side of the arena, where the ruling Prince and the chief members of the British Government were seated in a semi-circular amphitheatre facing the kiosk. Nothing could be more picturesque than the extraordinary combination of rich colors under a bright sun that was here presented to the eye. The roof, of delicate blue and white colors, was supported by 90 gilt pillars in front and by 100 in the outer line, each decorated with fasces of banners of the most gorgeous hues, surmounted by two censors' axes, the dread emblems of justice. Between every two pillars there gleamed in the radiant sunlight the rich satin banners, worked with heraldic devices, bestowed by her Majesty upon all the ruling Princes, and also upon the Viceroy, the Governors of Madras and Bombay, the Lieutenant Governors of Bengal, the North-western Provinces, and the Punjab, and the Commander in Chief. These banners were green for Mohamedans—Bhawulpore alone choosing blue—and yellow or pink for Hindoos. The thickly jeweled headgear and costumes of the great chiefs blazed resplendently through all this barbaric pomp, and almost fatigued the eye through the absence of repose. One chieftain remarked to the political officer who was showing him to his seat, "I have 60,000 rupees' worth of pearls upon my dress, and I am dropping them at every step I take, but I don't care." The Viceroy was, as usual, unpunctual, being quite half an hour too late, and during the interval the ladies walked over to the other side to see India in all its glory. The Khan of Kheiat also walked along, attentively scanning each chieftain as he passed, but saying never a word until he had gone from one end to the other, when he turned to his companion and calmly remarked, 'Sahib, there is not a man among them.' Being asked at the conclusion of the ceremony if he had ever seen such a durbar before, he answered, 'No: neither have you, Sahib-logue: so it must be strange that I have not.' In the evening he was present at a grand reception in the Viceroy's tent, and after gazing for a while with evident interest upon the brilliant scene, he observed: 'The women of your people dress themselves in their own families and among friends, and the meaning of such a custom I go into public.' The young Guikwar came across to the spectators' block—a plain, common-looking little fellow, glittering all over with diamonds, a tempting object to meet in a dark passage. The Nepaul chiefs were proud of their emeralds—stones of immense size, as large as a thumb-nail, but full of flaws if closely examined. The Envoy from Siam exhibited himself, this time in a sort of civil uniform, with yellowish trousers, that looked like a monstrous handkerchief passed between his legs and tucked up somewhere behind, his calves encased in black silk hose, and unrelieved by color, caught the eye, and created quite a sensation by its novelty. It turned out to be worn by Admiral Macdonald, Commander in Chief of the Indian Station. Two distinguished strangers, in unknown uniforms, were likewise 'spotted,' who proved to be Lord Lansdowne and Lord Broome. Another T. G. is Viscount Downe. At a little after 2:30 his Excellency the Viceroy, accompanied by Lady Lytton, alighted from his carriage, and, passing between a double hedge of British soldiers, ascended the steps of the dais, his blue mantle upheld from the ground by two pages, greatly admired by the ladies. The massed bands played a grand anthem, the heralds sounded a flourish of trumpets, and the vast assemblage remained standing until the Viceroy took his seat. A few bars of the national anthem preluded the reading aloud by the Chief Herald, Major Barnes, appropriately arrayed in a tabard worth six hundred pounds, of the proclamation 'Given at our Court at Windsor, the 28th day of April, 1876, in the 39th year of our reign.' This document, which merely gave force to the act of Parliament that enabled her Majesty to 'make an addition to the Royal style and titles appertaining to the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom and its dependencies,' was translated into Hindu and recited by Mr. Thornton, Officiating Secretary in the Foreign Department, but his voice betrayed his linguistic attainments, and for all that one could hear he might as well have spoken in the Syriac tongue. A salvo of artillery was then fired by half batteries—that is, by three guns as one. When 34 salvos had been fired to the eastward, the infantry, 13,680 in number, drawn up in two lines, extending over a mile and a half, fired a feu de joie that ran from east to west and back again with extraordinary rapidity and precision. The effect was astonishing, as the elephants attested by breaking loose and tearing wildly over the plain. Fortunately, only two coolies were killed, though three stampedes took place, and numbers of people were knocked over. The batteries to the westward then took up the firing, 34 times, succeeded by another feu de joie, the fire seeming to run along the line of troops like a sheet of flame, and completed the number of 101, or rather of 303 guns, and a third crisp rattle and roar of musketry terminated the gunpowder contribution to the effectiveness of the display. The Royal Standard was now hoisted and the massed bands again played a verse of the much-vexed anthem. That being over, the Viceroy advanced to the front of the canopied dais, and in quite inaudible tones read the speech, which is already familiar to the British public. It is to be regretted that his Excellency did not defer to the superior experience of his many able advisers in counting the effect of his excessively deferential demeanor, which is sure to be wrongly interpreted by the people of this country. Lord Dalhousie in public bore himself as the representative of the majesty of England, and accepted the reverential salutations of the greatest chiefs as addressed, not to himself individually, but to the mighty sovereign whom for the moment he personified. Lord Lytton, however, forgets that he is not himself, and acts from his own sense of personal courtesy toward equals. This is a great mistake in India, especially on occasions of great public import. The chiefs saw before them the personification of the paramount power; the Viceroy saw in himself only Lord Lytton, Baron Knebworth. The matter is by no means so trivial as may seem to an untraveled Englishman, and the error is the more to be regretted because there can be no question of Lord Lytton's earnest desire to act for the best in all things, upholding the dignity of the British crown, while encouraging and assisting the people of the country to attain a much higher moral and social status. His speech, again, was too long, though otherwise it would be only a captious critic who would care to pick out a possible flaw here and there. Nothing but praise, however, is given to the passages addressed to the native subjects of the Empress of India. Whatever dreams they may have cherished of suddenly obtaining a prominent share in the administration, to the prejudice of the old-covenanted servants of the crown, have been gently dissipated by words full of justice and wisdom. They have been plainly told that the supreme supervision must remain in the hands of British officers regularly trained to the work. They are also warned that intellectual ability is not the only, or the highest, quality demanded of a public servant. They are bidden to aim at the highest standard of public virtue, which comprises loyalty, incorruptibility, impartiality, truth, and courage. So soon as they have qualified themselves for posts of high trust and responsibility then they may properly and irresistibly put forth their claims to a share in the administration of the country.

At the conclusion of the Viceroy's address, the national anthem once more greeted the ear, followed by three cheers that were certainly not enthusiastic. Cheering is not yet a native accomplishment, and for all that one could hear he might as well have shouted 'Boo!' in the Syriac tongue. The Democrats are in a quandary. They are oscillating between acquiescence in the inevitable and resistance to what they will, after all, be unable to withstand. The best men of the party, the men who monopolize its brains and give to it whatever weight of personal character it possesses, favor a prompt acceptance of the decision of the Commission, and a completion of the count without more ado. They do not hide their disappointment, but, having gone into the plan in good faith, they deprecate as inexpedient and discreditable any attempt to obstruct its work. The pettifoggers and reckless partisans, on the contrary, indulge in wild talk, and threaten in one way or another to frustrate the judgment rendered in the case of Louisiana. There was a tough struggle between the opposing forces in the caucus last night, and the result hardly determines whether the recognized leaders or the vain pretenders to leadership control the Congressional votes of the party whose future is involved in the result. The influential Democratic newspapers are tolerably unanimous in support of the more prudent policy, and we shall await better indicators of party opinion than the men who last night counseled the adoption of revolutionary measures, before believing that the Democracy propose to commit suicide for the sake of Mr. TILDEN.

Speaker RANDALL has carried his partisanship to the verge of indecency many times, but never more palpably than yesterday, when, to avoid the immediate meeting in joint convention, he refused to see the Secretary of the Senate or to receive the message of which he was the bearer. Usage and courtesy dictate only one course to either chamber when a messenger from the other is present. They require his recognition, and an answer to the statement he has been directed to make. But Mr. RANDALL, who seems to know as little of the instincts of a gentleman as of the obligations resting upon a high official, set usage and courtesy at defiance, and lent himself to the procrastinating policy of his party. The more straightforward course would have been to receive the communication from the Senate, and then to have said that the proposed meeting must be deferred till Monday. The practical result would have been the same, the dignity of the House would have been preserved, and Mr. RANDALL would have escaped an exhibition which will be remembered to his discredit.

Nobody that we know of has ever attributed wisdom to Senator KELLY, but he must thank himself if he be hereafter ranked among the fools. His endeavor to vindicate his indorsement of PATRICK'S disgraceful dispatch to Gramercy Park not only compromises PATRICK in his dealings with co-conspirators, but implies on his own part almost incredible verdancy. It is possible, of course, that PATRICK misrepresented the purport of the dispatch, and that Mr. KELLY indorsed it under a misapprehension, but the supposition implies a confiding simplicity, rarely found even in Oregon, and is irreconcilable with Mr. KELLY'S appearances at other stages of the transaction. His own dispatches to TILDEN and PELTON convict him of active participation in the trick to secure an Electoral vote, and in the expenditure of money in relation to it. The statement that he was raising money on his own credit, and relied upon TILDEN to reimburse him, his urgent demand for the $8,000, and the fact that that sum was transmitted to him, must be held to convict him of close connection with a great scandal and a great crime, despite his halting protestations of yesterday. What the patriotic PATRICK will say to KELLY'S imputation upon his good faith will be known in due season.

Even Mr. HEWITT'S conscience troubles him when the Oregon transaction is alluded to, and he is anxious that the public shall believe that he knew nothing about it. Mr. HEWITT need give himself no concern upon this point. He was so intimately associated with Mr. TILDEN and his tricks at every stage of the campaign that one piece of infamy more or less can make little difference in the popular estimate of his political character. Meanwhile, we wonder if Mr. TILDEN sleeps soundly. Not a solitary Democrat, with a character to lose, has uttered a syllable in extenuation of his plan for acquiring an Oregon vote. The Democratic newspapers, not usually nice when partisan service is to be rendered, display their disgust by suppressing the deciphered dispatches. They dare not condemn, they are unable to defend, and therefore they are silent. Now that HEWITT deserts him, Mr. TILDEN may begin to realize that his humiliation is complete.

Mr. ELLIS, President of the Third National Bank, describes the case of its cashier exactly when he states that that person has been "bull-dozed" by Mr. TILDEN. Mr. JORDAN, as we now learn, was shown a dispatch advising him not to respond to the summons of the Senate Committee, but he will tell neither who sent the dispatch nor in whose hands he saw it. A Sabbath day's reflection may render him more communicative. His refusal to furnish information in regard to Mr. TILDEN'S bank account will be of no avail, Mr. ELLIS having intimated his willingness, and that of the paying teller of the bank, to produce the books and papers called for by the committee. From this source we may expect to receive very interesting particulars as to a portion of the great Reformer's financial transactions during and immediately subsequent to the campaign. To get at the whole truth it may be necessary to extend the inquiry to the Hanover Bank, upon which institution, according to the proprietor of the Everett House, Mr. PELTON was in the habit of drawing checks. It would be a mistake to suppose that Mr. TILDEN'S money flowed through only one channel.

The two-fold attempt to excuse the iniquities of the proposed Texas-Pacific subsidy by citing the character of Mr. LAMAR, its chief advocate, and to justify Mr. LAMAR by claiming for his bill the merits of a patriotic measure, will not succeed. The scandalous nature of the proposition is too manifest to be concealed. It is an attack upon the national Treasury which no man not indifferent to the public credit can sanction, and is made all the worse by the corrupt combinations that have been formed to render it effective. As for Mr. LAMAR, it is impossible not to feel that a good deal of his reputation rests upon false pretenses. Clean-handed he may be, even as the mouthpiece of Messrs. SCOTT and HUNTINGTON and their audacious lobby; but the admission certainly implies a reflection upon his sagacity. To be the unsuspecting instrument of notorious schemers is not a position which a capable politician, however pure his motives, should be content to occupy. The scheme itself is a bad one; the alliances formed in its support are immoral; and if Mr. LAMAR cares for his good name he will have nothing more to do with either.

In THE TIMES of Friday credit was erroneously given to Mr. EVARTS for this very terse definition of the power of the Electoral Commission: "It is to count the Electoral vote, and not to count the votes by which the Electors were elected." That remark formed a portion of the very conclusive argument of Mr. E. W. STOUGHTON, which was as remarkable for its clear and closely-reasoned propositions as for the directness and vigor of its style. From first to last of the Louisiana controversy, Mr. STOUGHTON has held what we may with perfect justice call the laboring oar, and no Republican can fail to give him due credit for his energy and fidelity. In the recent discussion before the Commission his command of the law has been reinforced by a thorough familiarity with the facts, and both have been largely instrumental in bringing about the final decision.

We assume that the Attorney General of the State finds time to scan the evidence which is published day after day in regard to the tricks and frauds perpetrated by officers of the Continental and New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Companies. Nothing more shameless has been brought to light in many years than the manner in which the policy-holders of these companies have been plundered by the men who were bound in common honesty to protect them. The two concerns were allied in rascality, and the fact that the persons implicated may all be reached under the testimony obtained respecting the Continental, renders the duty of the Attorney General plain. To proceed against the faithless clerk who robs his employer and falsifies his accounts to conceal his crime, and to allow faithless officials of a corporation to appropriate its funds to their own use with impunity, would be to make a mockery of justice. The lesson most needed now in connection with corporate management is the severe punishment of officials who have been false to their trust; and the story of the Continental supplies material for a good beginning.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

If the policy of civil-service reform, to which the Republican Party and its elected President are committed, is to be carried into successful operation, it is necessary that a definite plan of action should be agreed upon, to go into effect immediately upon the inauguration of Gov. HAYES. From the very hour that he assumes the office he will be assailed by influences the most powerful and specious to induce him to farm out the public offices in the bad old way. The sentiments of gratitude, honor, and of party fealty, will be appealed to, to weaken his resolution or to blind his judgment. The great party leaders who have borne the heat and burden of the campaign will expect the customary recognition of their services, and their claims will be presented in an imperious way that does not tamely brook denial. The lesser "workers" of the party, too, will demand the reward for their zeal at the hands of the new President. The incoming of an Administration, even when of the same political faith as its predecessor, is always the signal for renewed assaults upon the public offices. Men who have weakened in their enthusiasm, or have permitted their interest in their official duties to interfere with their labors for "the party," must be turned off and replaced with more devoted spirits. Those who have long fed at the public crib are expected to stand aside, to make room for their hungry brethren who have been grazing on the barren pastures of expectation. Newly-elected Congressmen expect the same recognition that their predecessors received, and re-elected members, strengthened by popular approval, require greater attention to their demands than ever. These influences, converging from every direction, when focused on a single man, constitute a moral force before which the bravest spirit might well quail. Never yet, since the establishment of the spoils system, have they failed to compel compliance.

It must not be supposed that the motives of this onslaught upon the public offices will be so naked as we have painted them. On the contrary, if the President announces that the reformation of the public service is to be one of the features of his administration, he will find that the object dearest to every Congressman's heart is civil service reform. Only, the Congressman will want to pursue the reform in his own way, by filling the public service with his own men, who are always, by a singular coincidence, just the class of men which the service needs. In fact, the average Congressman regards all professions of devotion to civil service reform by public officers as an amiable sort of lunacy, which he is content to humor, if thereby he can secure his own ends. Against both of these classes of influences will Gov. HAYES have to contend in establishing the policy of reform—open opposition and pretended acquiescence. If he yields to either, even temporarily, if he defers the enforcement of the new policy until methods for putting it in complete operation are devised, he will put himself in the power of the enemies of reform; or, at any rate, he will make the task all the more difficult when he attempts it. We have no doubt concerning the course which should be pursued by him. He should cause it to be understood from the start that the President is the responsible constitutional head of the executive branch of the Government, and that Congressmen and mere politicians have no right to dictate how he or the heads of departments shall exercise the power of appointment which the Constitution intrusts to them. He should refuse to make any changes in the public servants, except such as are needed to insure the execution of his policy or to purify and improve the service, concerning which he should take counsel only of his constitutional advisers, and of those who have the interests of the service at heart. It will be far less hurtful that the risk should be run of retaining in the service for a time some unworthy persons than that the door should be opened for a raid upon the public offices. This is the first and chief danger to be guarded against. If he can hold the hostile influences at bay until proper methods of selection and of weeding out are adopted, his path will be clear. There is no need of a sweeping change of the public servants. There will be plenty of time after inauguration day to devise a system for winnowing out the incompetent, the slothful, and the dishonest, and for selecting proper persons in their stead. The faithful and deserving officers, the proportion of whom is much larger than the service receives credit for, must be made secure against adverse influences, and must be made the nucleus of the reformed service.

Of course, Gov. HAYES cannot deny to the Senate the power which the Constitution gives it over the appointments made subject to its ratification, nor it is desirable that he should; but it must be made clear that its only function is to confirm or reject the appointment after it is presented, not to dictate in advance how it shall be made. The power of that body must be kept strictly within the limits set by the Constitution, and Senators must no longer be permitted to use the power of confirmation as an instrument for wresting the appointing power from the hands of the President. The fact cannot be overlooked that the influence of the Senate under the prevailing system is one of the greatest obstacles to civil service reform, but it is one which must be overcome if any thorough reform is to be accomplished. The President must make his nominations with sole regard to the needs of the service and the fitness of the nominees, not to aid the political fortunes of Congressmen, nor to provide funds to run the party machine. If one such nomination is rejected, he can make another of the same character, and so on, until the factious opposition is worn out. The Senate would not long dare, in the face of the awakened popular feeling regarding the public service, to take the responsibility of obstructing the reform in the selfish interests of its members.

We do not attempt to conceal the fact that the path of duty which lies before the new President is neither flowery nor smooth. Nevertheless, it is one which he is bound to pursue by every consideration of public interest, of honor, and of patriotism. Many of the obstacles which now appear so formidable will disappear before a resolute determination to reform the public service. If he succeeds, as we feel assured he will, he will be sure of the meed of present popular approval and of the gratitude of posterity. A great opportunity is presented to him, and we believe that it will be greatly met.

HOW THE CITY GROWS.

During the last four years, building operations—except in certain exceptional localities—have been substantially at a standstill. Even before the panic of 1873, the high prices of labor, land, and building materials, combined with the frequency of strikes, had to a very considerable extent curtailed up-town building. During the halcyon days brought about by enormous issues of government paper, building was greatly stimulated. Very expensive houses were erected in the then upper part of the City—say between Fiftieth and Sixtieth streets—and often sold before completed. For a time the demand was far ahead of the supply. The demand came largely from a class of men who had made their fortunes by rapid strikes of hundreds of thousands, and who spent them in the same manner. We saw numerous instances of elegant Fifth and Madison avenue houses taken at inordinate prices, the instant such prices were named. There were builders who, just previous to the great advance in prices, bought land and proceeded on the general principles of their trade, rather than upon the feelings of the hour; they reaped large fortunes by the construction and sale of half a dozen houses. In 1860 the population of New-York was 814,254. To-day it is estimated at 1,300,000. We may safely assume that the population of this island is now increasing at the rate of 75,000 each year, or at the rate of about six per cent.—certainly a very moderate estimate. At this rate, an allowance of twenty-five persons to a house will call for the erection of three thousand dwelling-houses of all classes in a year. There are at present comparatively few vacant lots below Fifty-ninth street, and those few are being rapidly filled up. Above Fifty-ninth street, where the island is narrow and the Central Park diminishes the space available for building purposes, five streets, running from river to river, would be required each year to furnish the increased population with necessary dwellings and tenements.

We may for the present leave the West Side north of Fifty-ninth street out of our calculations. The City does not spread in that direction; its whole growth is on the East Side, where it follows the line of horse railroads. Hence, roughly stated, ten streets would be yearly required, in the narrow space on the line of improvement between Central Park and the East River to accommodate the yearly increase of population. But the City does not grow in that way; the houses advance, rather, in masses out the avenues. The river borders are taken up for business purposes, for brick, stone, and lumber yards, factories, and machine shops. In the streets and avenues next to them congregate the workmen and laboring classes; next, the leading avenues on each side become the great marts for retail business; the Second, Third, and Eighth avenues are illustrations of this fact.

In the centre of the island, and following the line of Broadway and the Fifth avenue, are found the residences of the wealthier classes, and as the City grows, each of these columns pushes out from its own base. The growth of the City, therefore, extends over the ground more rapidly than if it progressed street by street. In point of fact, Madison avenue and the streets adjacent thereto are more or less built up from Sixtieth to Eighty-sixth street, the present terminus of the Madison avenue horse car line, while Third avenue on both sides presents almost one continuous row of buildings to and beyond Yorkville. The few vacant spaces from Yorkville to Harlem are being rapidly filled up.

At the rate of three thousand houses a year, the vacant area between Sixtieth and Eighty-sixth streets, Fifth avenue and the East River would be solidly built up in a very few years, without making any allowance for churches, school-houses, public buildings, and the ground on the river borders kept vacant for business purposes. Twenty-five persons, on an average, to houses of a mean width of twenty feet is excessive. In London the average is not over eight to an inhabited house. If twenty be taken as the average here, the area spoken of would be covered with bricks and mortar in about five years. Any section of the City may be regarded as substantially built up when three-fourths of its area is covered with houses. The residue is taken up with gardens, churches, public buildings, and the vacant blocks at the river side.

During the last four years we have recorded a constant succession of failures, assignments, bankruptcies, and foreclosure sales. One of the results of those continuous disasters, spreading over so long a period, has been the crowding or doubling up of families for three Winters past in small suites of rooms or boarding-houses. A very large additional number of moderate-priced dwelling-houses are actually needed to accommodate this class. They can only be furnished in the region we have spoken of. With the revival of business, which already makes itself felt in every branch of trade, the concentration of population at this point will increase with a volume that it will be difficult to anticipate, and for some years the demand for houses will be greater than can be supplied. Meantime, land, labor, and materials are lower than they have been at any time during the past seventeen years. Choice lots on the line of improvement are in some cases offered at forty to fifty per cent. of the prices actually paid by the present owners six or seven years ago. Lots, admirably situated for immediate improvement, which to-day stand the owner in $22,500 each, can be bought at $8,500 each. When holders of real estate are forced to submit to such tremendous sacrifices, somebody must profit by it. Lots on upper Madison avenue, say between Sixty-fifth and Eighty-sixth streets, the very backbone of the line of improvement, can be bought to-day at less money, if we take into consideration the assessments they have borne for street opening, regulating and grading, sewering, paving, curb and gutter, &c., than in 1860. The same can substantially be said of the whole region between Second avenue and the Park in that neighborhood. Common laborers are now getting $1 per day, or 10 cents per hour; hod-carriers, $1 20; best bricklayers, $2. Five years ago these latter got from $5 to $7. Carpenters, painters, roofers, and all mechanics in any manner employed in the erection or construction of buildings are paid in the same ratio of decline from inflated ante-panic prices.

These facts have a constant tendency to induce new building enterprises. Those who have been waiting for the resumption of specie payments have seen the premium on gold reduced in an easy, healthy, natural manner to about 5 per cent., with every promise that the great questions of finance will permanently settle themselves without the slightest shock to the material interests of the country. Meantime, all real values are below the par of gold. Building operations have already commenced, the last ten days of fine weather apparently inducing the initiation of several enterprises in up-town districts. Those who have been waiting for the lowest point to improve their property; those who have bought lots to build and sell; those who have been watching to pick up lots in certain choice localities, are all on the move. Houses are being built and lots are in demand at 50 per cent. less than former values.

What we say, however, as regards lots being in demand applies only to those localities susceptible of immediate profitable improvement. Lots on a street are increased in value by the mere process of building up the street, and when houses can be built upon lots, and sold at a profit, the price of the lots will be advanced equal to their proportion of the profit. Those new buildings will not soon cease. If the facilities of travel should be increased by some practical system of underground or surface rapid transit, and a better class of houses be constructed for the laboring classes, the area we have spoken of will be built up more rapidly than our calculations show, values will become more nearly equalized, and building will become more general over other portions of the up-town district. Activity in building is an earnest of better times; it means employment for labor and capital, gradually advancing values to remunerative prices, and general prosperity. With the exception of the reckless extravagance and downright dishonesty which obtains in our Municipal Government, nothing can stop the future growth of this City. The condition of the Metropolis, with the fatal incubus of 8,685 officials and employes, drawing $10,281,966 yearly for misgoverning the City, shows the wonderful vitality of the people, under a system which would bankrupt Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, or any other city on this continent in less than five years.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN COLLEGES FOR WOMEN.

Among the efforts which are constantly made in this country for providing a more solid female education there should be one in the direction so successful in England, on the plan of Girton College. This English college for women is, in fact, an adjunct of Cambridge University, though sufficiently far from the town to prevent any practical objections from too close intercourse of students. The Girton diplomas or certificates are precisely equivalent to the B. A. degrees of Cambridge, conferred after the same examinations and before the same Professors. Some of the Cambridge Professors give instruction or lectures in Girton, and, if we are correctly informed, the young ladies attend certain public classes in Cambridge, where they sit by the undergraduates, as they might at the Royal Society or any other public lectures.

The University has not yet reached the point of admitting Girton as one of its colleges, or giving a University degree to such of its students as pass the prescribed examination; but it attempts to confer the equivalent through the women's examinations, and the degrees there given. At all events, a college for women now exists, whose degree is as undoubted a testimony of scholarship as a University degree, and where very solid and hard work is done. It is not remarkable that such a college should have already attracted students from America, who from pure love of knowledge, are competing for these intellectual distinctions. From England itself, more students apply than the limited building can accommodate, and these largely from a class who desire hereafter to be teachers in the higher education for women. A degree from Girton is at once a stepping-stone to good situations with fair salaries. Among the students, however, are not a few representing a large class under modern civilization—single women of fortune who seek some earnest or intellectual occupation, and are not content with the life of society. The peculiar attraction of Girton is in the refined and sensible cast of the women attending the course, and the free mode of life left to the students.

It is in this that our higher colleges for women in America have made such a mistake. Most of them are scarcely different from high schools; that is, the young ladies must always be present at recitations at certain hours, and are kept under very strict rules as to study. Little freedom is left to them, and they are put under high pressure of studies and the stimulus of the strongest competition. Some of the great physical evils of the higher education for women—which have caused so much discussion in Massachusetts—have arisen from this defective system. In the English college, on the other hand, apart from certain rules of propriety, the young ladies are left as free as to hours as the members of a German university. They may attend lectures or not, keep to hours or not, and study at what times suit their convenience best. The only thing absolutely required, is that they should pass a rigid examination. They may fit themselves for it when and how they choose. This is certainly a far wiser arrangement than the American. Our colleges also demand publicity of life to a considerable degree, and, in some cases, overcrowd the living and sleeping-rooms. The eating at a crowded table, and the living with a great number of others in a large building, are not exactly the best conditions for cultivating women's highest charm of manner. Many parents instinctively shrink from exposing their daughters to the influences of this public kind of life. In Girton, the young ladies live in apartments as they might in a nice private house, and do not eat or live together in large numbers.

One American college—the Smith College at Northampton—seeks to obtain this by placing the students in small cottage-houses or in private families. An effort is also made now in this country to found a system of women's examinations for degrees in Harvard University. It seems not at all improbable that before long some of the many colleges for women will seek to connect themselves with Yale or Harvard, and establish an institution corresponding to Girton. Whether it should adopt a rigid course in Greek and the higher mathematics is still a question. The true plan would seem to be to make the course elective, only requiring the most exact and rigid examinations, which shall be in their own field equivalent to University degrees.

BABIES IN SOCIETY.

The age at which children should be introduced into society is a subject on which there is a variety of opinion. Many very intelligent and well-bred persons think that they should not be introduced at all; that the proper and only place for them is the nursery. Others, again, generally young parents, believe that children cannot be presented too early, feeling that all their friends and acquaintances are longing for a sight—not to say sound—of the infant phenomena that have recently condescended to grace this unworthy planet. This seems to be the opinion of society in Washington, where, we are informed, babies only a few months old are displayed in elaborate toilets for the admiration and eulogy of invited guests. On New Year's Day particularly the little creatures are tricked out with lace, ribbons, and bracelets, and presumed to receive with their doting mammas. That it gives great pleasure to the mammas cannot be doubted; but whether the callers, being entirely masculine, share the maternal rapture may be questioned.

Most women are apt to be baby-worshipers, even in the days of their maidenhood; but men are not, as a rule, addicted to that sort of adoration. Their fondness for children comes with the children; it is a growth rather than a natural condition; an instinct, probably, though latent, and developed by circumstances, usually those of paternity. It happens, too, that many men who are very fond of their own babies, are not fond of other men's babies; that, in sober truth, they dislike them, and privately pronounce them nuisances. A bachelor—and bachelors are rapidly increasing from a diversity of causes—seldom cares for babies, and generally he feels uncomfortable in their presence. He feels it to be the duty of politeness to notice them; to say something kind and appreciative of or to or about them, in their mother's presence; but he is ignorant of the manner of discharging the duty. Under the circumstances—trying, it must be confessed—he is conscious of embarrassment and awkwardness; and the more he tries to conceal these, the more he reveals them.

It is not difficult to imagine how the average bachelor would conduct himself in calling upon a married lady who should have her first, or last, or any, baby conspicuously placed in the drawing-room. To ignore it (all children are neuter to the childless) would be impossible as well as impolite. He would be afraid to approach it, and equally afraid not to approach it; to speak, or to be silent on the tender subject. He would feel somewhat as if expected to talk Chaldaic without knowing the first letter of the alphabet, or to describe an animal he had never heard of. But he would perceive from the mother's manner, from her darting glances toward the nurse holding the highly-caparisoned infant, that he would never be forgiven if he did not effusively acknowledge its existence. And how can a bachelor be effusive over a baby? He would either rush out of the house, or make an effort to meet the occasion. If he staid, he would clear his throat again and again, attempt repeatedly to swallow his palate, and finally drone out, in the voice of an undertaker: "I—hope—the—ba-by's well. It's—a—beau-beau-ti-ful child, [never looking at it,] it—it—closely—re-resembles—its—its—great—grand-father." Of course, he has never seen its great-grandfather, and the fact makes him refer to the resemblance, deeming the position he has taken safe, because distant and non-committal.

The mother is too much pleased with his mention of the child to notice exactly what he has said. To hear that it looks like anybody pleases her. If he had spoken of its being the image of PTOLEMY PHILADELPHUS or DIODORUS SICULUS, she would have been flattered—all the more, perhaps, because she would have no conception who those gentlemen might be. She invites him to a nearer view. He walks toward it as though he were stepping on red-hot plowshares, (the illustration is good because he is passing an ordeal,) and once more descants on its beauty, inwardly thinking—the wretch—that it looks like a bit of raw roast beef, garnished with lace and blue ribbon. Being by its side—he declines, with a shudder, to take it, lest he should break it, and be sued for damages—he supposes that he must poke it, (this is a tradition among bachelors,) and so he sticks his right forefinger toward the bundle of snub nose, pop eyes, crimson face, and white raiment. He intends to touch it somewhere in the ribs, but seeming to him so much like a struggling pudding, his knowledge of anatomy is at fault, and in his nervousness he thrusts his finger into one of its cerulean eyes.

This produces a crisis. The infant screws itself into horrible contortions, and explodes with a yell that causes the unlucky bachelor to break into a cold and clammy perspiration, while his blood is on fire, and his heart tries to force its way out of his throat. In his agony he begins to pray, and then utters a confused, clamorous, and incoherent apology, expecting every moment to see the mass of squirming scream fly to pieces or dissolve in purple jelly. Apologies are vain; they are neither heard nor heeded. The mother, in profound and pitiable compassion, has taken the roaring, struggling babe from its nurse's arms and is laboring to quiet it. The offender, the day, the reception, the world are forgotten. He sees this, and without any leave-taking dashes into the hall, seizes his hat, and hurries into the street. He makes no more calls that day, nor any day, until he has learned beforehand whether at the houses he visits babies form part of the social programme. The night of the day of his unhappy experience with the infant is restless and wretched enough. He rises soon after dawn, steals round to the house he had quitted so abruptly, and looks furtively at the door to see if there be any crape on the knob. "No death," he murmurs; "thank God! But no more babies for me."

OWNING BOOKS.

The multiplication of circulating libraries has done a great deal for the reading public, but it has by no means, as some seem to fancy, dispensed with the necessity of private libraries. The effect of the public libraries has been to confine, in many households, the contents of the book-shelves within too narrow limits. A great many families read nothing but novels, and these, unless they be of the best, had better be taken from the libraries and sent back as soon as possible. The literary possessions of too many households consist of a Dictionary, a Shakespeare in fine print, an atlas, a "Book of Beauty," Josephus, and the second volume of Amelia. But people fonder, even, of books rely too much upon the libraries. They not only go to them for novels and the other ephemeral publications of the day, but they refrain from buying books of real value, and world-wide fame because they too, when needed, can be got from the library. The almost certain result of such a practice is that these books are never read, or are, at any rate, rarely or never read to advantage. Most people, except in those matters which immediately concern their bread and butter, are apt to be lazy. They usually drift into their reading as into their amusements; and no doubt they read to all the more advantage for so doing. Books on the shelves of the public libraries are not in the way of attracting their notice. One hears of a book and immediately conceives a desire to read it; indeed, immediately determines to read it on the first opportunity. But it is forgotten, until some spare hour arrives when it is wished for, but is too far away to be had. But even should the reader have forethought and industry enough to obtain the book, his frame of mind at the time may be such that he may be unable to find any pleasure in it. Many famous books of past times are so different in spirit from the prevalent ideas of our own day, that the modern reader cannot expect suddenly to get in tune with them. He may very likely form a contemptuous opinion of the book, so that his last state will be worse than his first; for it is much better to be in entire ignorance of a subject than to carry about in one's mind for years a foolish prejudice concerning it.
